Mr. President, it is denying the existence of the sun to deny this fact. No boldness, no audacity can make any man who understands this subject doubt about it for one moment. They did not give the this subject doubt about it for one moment. They did not give the full amount that we claimed for this property. They thought our claims were exaggerated as to the amount, not as to the right to be paid, but as to the amount that we claimed for the property. They cut it down. Ay, and when our tribunal sat here under the act of Congress of 1874 they cut these things down still further; and that is the way there comes to be any surplus of this money left or will be after the payment of these claims that were thus the very foundation of the award. The damages claimed were too high. The property in the estimate made by the claimants, which was ex parte testimony alone, was overvalued. The tribunal cut down that valuation, and our tribunal, created by the act of Congress itself cut it down still further. But to deny the plain fact that it was upon the foundation of these claims and of these claims alone that that award was-made is just as bold as to deny the existence of the sun.

Mr. President, one word more. The Senator from Maine attachesgreat importance to the instruction of Mr. Fish to the counsel of the United States. What was that but a private instruction of the Secretary of State to the counsel of the United States? The Senator, if am not mistaken, will look in vain throughout the proceedings of the Geneva tribunal to find that that instruction was ever communicated to the Geneva tribunal. If it was, I have wholly overlooked it. I do not believe that the Geneva tribunal ever had the slightest knowledge of that private instruction given by the United States Government to its lawyers, and that is all there was. Mr. CONKLING. Suppose it had, if I may ask the Senator, what bearing has it on this question?

Mr. THURMAN. Nothing in the wide world, as my friend from Delaware has already shown.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. I think the Senator from Ohio is conceding more than there is any necessity for doing under the letter of Mr. Fish. I was as much surprised as the Senator could be, when the Senator from Maine stated in his graphic way the letter that Mr. Fish had written, and which I thought went to the point of saying that although money should be allowed to us co nomine for the insurance companies, we would do as we pleased about paying it to them—
Mr. BLAINE. I never said so, because they did not allow any such

Mr. CARPENTER. I did not say that the Senator did say so. I was saying that I got that impression of the understanding of Mr. Fish's letter from the Senator's statement of it.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator must have got that impression because he was trying to maintain the ground that Mr. Fish did contend that it was awarded for the insurers' claims eo nomine. I was against it all the time

Mr. CARPENTER. Who has the floor, Mr. President †
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARPENTER. I was getting so much in doubt about it that thought probably I was intruding upon the Senator from Maine. Laughter.] I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this letter just as it reads:

In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded, or what may be recovered in the event of the appointment of the board of assessors, mentioned in the tenth article of the treaty.

Now, why?

It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the cases of insurers and insured.

That is to say, suppose the bark Saint Mary, for instance, was alleged to have been destroyed by one of these cruisers. She is presented in a claim by the insurance companies. They claim that they paid her full value as a total loss. It is also claimed by the owner that the insurance company has not paid him the loss. It would, therefore, be a disputed question, after the amount to be allowed by Great Britain for the value of that ship had been ascertained and paid over, whether the insurance company or the owner is entitled to the award.

Mr. CONKLING. Read the next sentence.

Mr. CARPENTER. The next sentence shows that to be the true construction. Let me go back and read the two sentences together:

It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the cases of insurers and insured. The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case.

Insurers as to what? Why, as to the duplicate claims for the loss of a particular ship made by the insurance company and made by the owner. The Government would decide which of them was entitled to the money. That was all Mr. Fish committed himself to.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I had not gone into the analysis of that letter, and I am obliged to my friend from Wisconsin for having done so, and he has presented it so clearly that I shall not repeat ing done so, and he has presented it so clearly that I shall not repeat a word that he has said. Indeed it is time for me to stop or I shall be making my speech along on this bill by piecemeals. If it had not been for the very extraordinary courage with which the Senator from Maine made his assertions to-day I should not have taken the floor

I want to say, however, one word further. The Senator from Maine says that the award of the Geneva tribunal did not specify eo nomine who should have the money. Of course it did not specify that, but that is certain which can be rendered certain; and when it is ascertained upon what claims the award was made, then you have got the people whose property brought the money and who ought to be paid.

This whole case is in a nutshell, and can be stated in five minutes. Upon the claims of these private citizens for damages, which they had sustained by the loss of their property, Great Britain, by the judgment of the Geneva tribunal, has paid us fifteen and a half millions of dollars, and now there are Senators who say that those men in respect of whose property, and in respect of whose property alone, that money was paid shall not receive one penny of it. My friend from New York [Mr. Conkling] insists that I shall put the other point of the absurdity, and that is that there are Senators who contend that those people upon whose claims it was not awarded, whose claims were expressly rejected, shall receive the money.

As I am up I will say one word more. Suppose there had been but one American ship destroyed by confederate cruisers, and Great Britain, by the award of the Geneva tribunal or without it, had paid to the United States a million dollars in respect of the loss of that ship, is there a man in the Senate who would say that that money ought not to be paid to the owner of that ship? If it were one single case of the loss of a ship, and for the loss of that ship Great Britain paid as $1,000,000, paid it to the United States, because no citizen of the United States can present his claim otherwise than through his Government, is there a Senator here who would say that that money ought not to go to the man who lost his ship? I do not think there If that is true of one ship it is true of the whole one hundred and

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to take the floor upon the bill now pending before the Senate.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator yield to me to move an executive session?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.
Mr. BLAINE. I want to say a word, if the Senator will yield to me.
Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has the floor, as the Chair understands, for to-morrow.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir. Mr. BLAINE. I want to say a few words, if there is no particular mr. BLAINE. I want to say a few words, if there is no particular reason why I should not.

Mr. CALL. Certainly not. I yield to the Senator temporarily.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator who has resumed the chair

[Mr. Thurman] suggested, as I understood, that it was about as rash an act of temerity to differ from his judicial opinion on this point as it was for the man who questioned the law of gravitation; but unfortunately for his assertion both branches of Congress every time it has been tried have differed from the view of the Senator from Ohio. I never heard that a large convention of respectable gentlemen had ever yet differed from Sir Isaac Newton on the doctrine of gravitation; I never yet have heard of one large association of respectable gentlemen who had agreed with the honorable Senator from Ohio on the question he presents.

When the Senator from Wisconsin was reading the letter of Mr.

Fish he omitted the concluding paragraph.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am sorry I did because that is the strongest

Mr. BLAINE. It is as follows:

If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government without committal as to the mode of distribution. It is expected that all such committals will be avoided in the argument of counsel.

The honorable Senator either by accident or design did not read that part. Whatever meaning he chooses now to attach to that by fine points of construction he certainly cannot argue away the significance which Mr. Cushing attached to it. However the Senator may take Mr. Fish's language and make it appear different from the plain meaning which it shows on its face, it will give him, as the Yankee phrase would say, a pretty hard stent to make this language appear different from what Mr. Cushing intended it should be.

The counsel of the United States obeyed the instruction given them, and did not commit the United States to any policy of distribution whatever, either by way of inclusion or of exclusion, but left that question to be determined by the wisdom and discretion of Congress.

tion to be determined by the wisdom and discretion of Congress. haps the honorable Senator will say that that also has the same limitation which he attaches to the language of Mr. Fish. If he will read Mr. Cushing a little further on, and I will give him a little more to chew, for he relishes it, he will find that Mr. Cushing said:

The history of the treaty and of the arbitration, however, tends to show that it was the intention of the Government to exercise its own discretion, according to its own sense of justice and equity in the distribution of indemnity among citizens of the United States whether owners, mariners, insurers, or payers of premiums, who are actual losers by the acts or neglects of the British government.

I suppose the honorable Senator from Wisconsin can show in two minutes that Mr. Cushing did not mean that. He has shown that Mr. Fish did not mean at all what he said. He has shown very plainly that Mr. Fish, who wrote distinctly that the Government should not have any committal made at all as to the distribution, meant merely that the Geneva tribunal should not get us so confused that we should pay twice for the same vessel; that in case the bark Saint Mary should be lost we should not pay twice for it, and Mr. Fish thought that was so difficult and recondite a question, and thought that five great commissioners sitting at Geneva might be confused on knotty points as to whether the bark Saint Mary should be paid for twice, that he sent a special letter over to Caleb Cushing and William M. Evarts and Morrison R. Waite to tell them not to put their foot in it there. That is the criticism: and that is the extent to which the known be Sen is the criticism; and that is the extent to which the honorable Senator attaches his meaning to the letter of Mr. Fish. Now, I should like him to tell me what Mr. Cushing meant when he referred to the distribution among the actual losers, whether payers of premiums or insurers, and I will very gladly hand the paper to the honorable Sen-ator from Wisconsin, and let him argue that away also.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is a mas-ter of conundrums. I never saw a man so full of them, and I never ter of conundrams. I never saw a man so run of them, and I never saw a man quite so profuse of them. I had said nothing about the language of Mr. Cushing. I understood that Mr. Cushing represented us before the Geneva tribunal; but I did not understand that his opinions were binding upon Congress. The Senator, however, read a opinions were binding upon Congress. The Senator, nowever, read a letter from Mr. Fish, who was Secretary of State, and although I should not concede that his opinion was binding upon Congress at this time and upon this subject, yet it seemed to me, from listening to his read-ing of the letter, that the letter meant a thing totally different from what I found it did mean when I came to look at it. It was my fault, not the fault of the Senator from Maine, I did not comprehend the language properly and fully from hearing it read. I simply called the attention of the Senator from Ohio, your honor's attention, to the fact that the concession which you were making was beyond what was called for by the letter of Mr. Fish; in other words, that Mr. Fish

Now the Senator from Maine says to me, "I will prove to you what Mr. Fish meant by reading to you what Caleb Cushing said, and I should like to see you chew upon that." I am not aware that the Senator from Maine has any right to set me cuds to chew, or to compel me to chew under his dictation, or to give the meaning to the language of Caleb Cushing or anybody else. At the same time I would suggest that the answer to a letter should always fairly be read in connection with the letter received and to which it is an answer. Certainly, the language of Mr. Fish's letter, if this language is an answer to it-I have not read it yet-I cannot tell from this little docu-

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not an answer to the letter.
Mr. CARPENTER. It is not of any consequence whatever more than any man's opinion at some other time given on some other sub-

That is a sufficient answer.

Mr. BLAINE. That is an easy way of disposing of Caleb Cushing's opinion, but still it will be remembered that Caleb Cushing was a lawyer of fair fame in his day. In the small circuit of the New England States, where the honorable Senator was born, Mr. Cushing had some reputation; he was the counsel of the United States at Geneva; he was one of the men to whom the letter of Mr. Fish was addressed, and he gave his construction as to what that meant. I am sure that the Senate cannot have failed to observe that the honorable Senator the Senate cannot have failed to observe that the honorable Schator from Wisconsin got a cud a little too tough to chew on that point. It was very well for the Senator to say "your honor" when he addressed the Chair, because he was arguing this as if it was a case at common pleas. He was arguing this great question as if we were restrained by the narrowest dogmas of the law. He was arguing this as if subrogation could be pleaded here as it could be in an ordinary case before a State court. We are the men who can repeal subrogation. tion. This question was explicitly given to the discretion of the Congress of the United States. Mr. Fish's letter might just as well have said, "If you do not take care and not make committals the Senator from Wisconsin and other acute lawyers will be pleading the doctrine of subrogation in the Senate of the United States just as conclusively as if arguing it before a State court in behalf of an insurance company."

as if arguing it before a State court in behalf of an insurance company."

Mr. Cushing's construction of Mr. Fish's letter was to exclude that narrow way of settling it. It was remanded to the discretion of Congress. The idea that Congress is bound by the law of subrogation that would be pleaded in an ordinary case for the recovery of the hulk of a vessel, what was left of her after the insurance had been paid, is diminishing this great issue, I confess, far below my vision.

Mr. CARPENTER. I simply wish to ask the Senator from Maine for information how he knows that this is the production of Caleb Cushing? Here is one of the little pamphlets, of which I have five or six hundred in my office, that I have received at different times on this subject. I see the name "C. Cushing."

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, see how exactly he is treating this question according to the smallest kind of practice in the county court of a State. He wants me to get an affidavit from Mr. Cushing's executor that Cushing wrote that letter. I cannot do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARPENTER. I submit to such criticism from the Senator from Maine with great patience, for if there was the slightest evidence from any source that he ever was in a court of common pleas even, there is certainly nothing in his manner of treating an opponent that indicates that he ever was. There is certainly nothing in his argument that indicates that he ever was to a leave files. I do not he indicates that he ever was. There is certainly nothing in his argument that indicates that he ever wrote in a law-office. I do not believe he ever did. I simply asked for information if Mr. Cushing had delivered a deliberate opinion on the subject that is entitled to consideration. This does not purport to be an opinion; it is not in the form of an opinion; and I simply wished to ask whether the Senator knew that Mr. Cashing aver weste it or not

Mr. CONKLING. Is it addressed to anybody?

Mr. CONKLING. Is it addressed to anybody?

Mr. CARPENTER. It is not addressed to anybody; it is not dated anywhere; it has no beginning and no end. Here is a lot of propositions strung together and "C. Cushing" is printed at the end of them. It is all a mistake that Mr. Cushing ever wrote it.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator wish was to prove that Mr. Fish

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator wish me to prove that Mr. Fish ever wrote the other letter?

Mr. CARPENTER. There is no proof that would stand in any court from a justice of the peace to King's Bench.

Mr. BLAINE. I observe simply in answer to the Senator that the Mr. CARPENTER. I make no such argument. I asked the Senator if he knew where the paper came from, and said I thought it was not from Mr. Cushing. He says that is an argument. If it is, there is great weight in the suggestion that it did not come from any-

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, it was Ordered. That the papers in the case of T. H. Lawrence be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules of the Senate.

Ordered. That the papers in the case of Charles J. Whiting be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5719) to revise and re-enact section 5480 of Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other pur-poses, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 13, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLASSIFICATION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to call the attention of the House to page 11 of the Congressional Record of this morning. There is, I think, on that page an inaccuracy of statement which I desire to point out, but if it is not objected to I shall consider it as an acceptance by the gentlemen indicated of the classification made for them. I refer to a speech made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] on the 5th of April, and printed in the RECORD of this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is not

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am aware of that; but I refer to it so that when gentlemen come into their seats they may know that attention has been at once called to the statement. There is a classification of the members of this House in which I find twelve gentlemen classed as "nationals." I suppose it is the intention of the gentleman from Iowa to distribute this speech liberally and that he wants to be accurate in his statements.

I see the gentleman from lowa classifies my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] as a national. In the Congressional Directory he appears as a republican. There is an inaccuracy in the one statement or the other. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes no objection to this classification I certainly shall not. I make none whatever to my own classification in this statement.

I make none whatever to my own classification in this statement.

I see again that in this classification Mr. Jones, of Texas, elected, according to the Congressional Directory, as a democrat, is classed as a national. I desire to be correct in referring, possibly, to these gentlemen in the coming campaign, and if there be no objection to the classification as made here it will probably be accepted as correct. Mr. LADD, of Maine, elected as a "greenback democrat," is classified here as a national. If those two terms are held to be synonymous, I do not object. If Mr. Lowe, of Alabama, elected as a "greenback democrat," is willing to be classified as a national, I do not object. If no objection is made by those gentlemen the two terms will be understood to be synonymous. stood to be synonymous.

Mr. LOWE ros Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to finish my statement before yielding to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. Murch, of Maine, elected as a "greenback labor reformer," is classified as a national. Mr. STEVENSON, of Illinois, according to the Congressional Directory, was elected by the national greenback and democratic parties. He is classified here as a national. We have thus two classifications for certain representatives of the people. One is the Congressional Directory, from which it is customary to quote in our campaign speeches. That directory is, as I understand, approved by the gentlemen themselves. Here we have a speech, presumably made in open House, intended to be circulated very liberally, in which some of these distinguished gentlemen are classified differently. Now, if there be no objection whatever on the floor of the House to this statement, we are to understand, I presume, that the classification made by the gentleman from Iowa is the classification that is accepted by the gentlemen in question.

DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. HAYES. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back to the House a concurrent resolution, and recommend its

The SPEAKER. The previous question is prevailing on the Army appropriation bill, reported, with amendments, from the Committee of the Whole yesterday.

Mr. ATKINS. I will not claim the floor just at this time.

Mr. HAYES. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Printing, for present consideration, the resolution which I send to the

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That there be printed 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine, and infectious and contagious diseases and other classes of domesticated animals; of which 65,500 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 20,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. HAYES. In view of the direct interest which the farmers and stock-raisers have in that report I hope the resolution will be adopted. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will include the publication of the report on the yellow fever, which I have been trying for three months to get printed.

The SPEAKER. That is not before the House.

Mr. HAYES. I am in favor of printing that report.

Mr. HAYES. I am in favor of printing that report.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was received and adopted.

Mr. HAYES. 1 wish to obtain consent of the House to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates some remarks which I have prepared upon the resolution just adopted.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

PROFESSOR HAYDEN'S ZOOLOGY.

I ask consent to have taken from the Speaker's table Mr. HAYES. and referred to the Committee on Printing the concurrent resolution received from the Senate providing for the printing of 5,000 copies of Professor Hayden's Report on Zoology.

There was no objection, and the following resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Printing: Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, with the necessary illustrations, 5,000 copies of the Report on Zoology, volume 14 of the final reports of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories, by F. V. Hayden: 2,800 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,200 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of the Interior.

PAINTINGS ON WALLS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared an argument in support of a bill (H. R. No. 5795) providing for certain paintings on the walls of the National Capitol, which I desire printed in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the Army appropriation bill reported with amendments from the Committee of the Whole on yesterday, and upon which the previous question is operating.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] will not insist on his call for the regular order. There are two or three gentlemen who desire to submit requests to the House to which there may be no opposition.

Mr. BLAND. I will not press the call now.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1291) creating Mr. Brents. Task consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1291) creating the Yakima land district, in Washington Territory, be taken from the House Calendar, for consideration at this time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. Brents] later in the day.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the Army appropriation bill, coming over from yesterday under the operation of the previous question. The question is upon concurring in the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not desire myself to occupy the floor for the hour to which I am entitled under the rules, but I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EWING.]

Mr. EWING addressed the House. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. CONGER. Before further proceedings, I desire, Mr. Speaker, to raise a point of order, which for very obvious reasons, as the Chair and gentlemen of the House will understand, I did not wish to make at the commencement of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EWING,] lest it might seem that I sought to prevent him from making his speech. I raise the point so that the Chair may make a ruling upon it, and that all who desire to avail themselves of the ruling may know the proper time to do it.

I make the point of order, under the first paragraph of Rule XVII, relating to the previous question, that after the previous question has been ordered no debate of any kind whatever, not even the hour's debate which under the former practice and rules of the House was allowed, is permissible until the previous question has exhausted

The paragraph of the rules to which I have referred provides:

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote apon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

The continuation of the paragraph prescribes how far the previous question may operate—up to and including, I think, the engrossment of the bill. Now, the right to an hour's debate on the part of the member reporting a measure exists under the third paragraph of Rule

The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

I make the point that, as the result of the change in our rules on this subject, the person claiming an hour to close debate must take that hour before the motion for the previous question is put and seconded. As he has possession of the floor, it can of course make no difference in practice whether his closing speech is made before or after the seconding of the previous question. Having possession of the floor, he may give notice of his intention to call the previous question, and may move it at the close of his hour, thus violating no rule.

The construction which I now submit to the Chair, will, as will be

The construction which I now submit to the Chair, will, as will be perceived, give effect to both rules. The other day I raised this point for the consideration of the Chair; but at that time there seemed no desire for a closing hour of debate; therefore the question was waived; and in fact I withdrew the point. But at this time I desire the Chair shall rule upon the point, one way or the other, so that members may understand when the proper time to occupy the closing hour arises, which as I understand is either before seconding the previous question on amendments and on the engrossment of the bill, or perhaps after the engrossment, and before seconding the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I recognize the courtesy of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] in waiving this point of order until the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ewing] had been made. Still, I think the gentleman is mistaken in his point. It seems to me the third clause of Rule XIV settles the question. That rule gives to the member reporting any measure the right to open and close the debate, if the discussion extends beyond one day, that rule read.

that rule read.

Mr. CONGER. I read that clause of Rule XIV and remarked that of course it gave the member reporting a measure the right to the closing hour; but my point was that under the first clause of Rule XVII the hour must be used before the previous question is ordered. I think the two rules may be construed consistently.

The SPEAKER. The first question suggested to the Chair by the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and the first question which will naturally arise in the mind of every member, is as to the right of a gentleman reporting a measure to occupy one hour.

as to the right of a gentleman reporting a measure to occupy one hour in closing debate. On that subject the right under the rule is clear. In closing debate. On that subject the right under the rule is clear. The second question is as to the time when this right shall be exercised, when the hour shall be occupied. Under the old rule the practice was to allow the closing hour for debate either before or after the main question was ordered. Under the new rules, which provide in the first clause of Rule XVII that the previous question "shall have the effect to cut off all debate," the present question is raised.

In the present instance it was not in fact material whether the light to account one hour in clearing debate, should be experied as in right to occupy one hour in closing debate should be exercised, as in fact it was by unanimous consent, after the main question had been ordered on the amendments and engrossment of the bill, and before its complete execution, or whether the right should be exercised after the main question upon the amendments and the engrossment of the bill had been executed, which would leave to the member, beyond question from any source, the right to a closing hour before the order-question from any source, the right to a closing hour before the ordering of the main question on the passage of the bill.

The Chair decides in the first place that in cases like this the right to occupy an hour in closing debate does exist. The only query is, therefore, whether this right should be exercised before or after the main question is ordered. In this case it seems to have been exercised without objection after the ordering and before the execution of the main question on the amendments and the expressment. cised without objection after the ordering and before the execution of the main question on the amendments and the engrossment. But if any member had objected at that time, still the right to the closing hour would have continued on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee, and could have been exercised before the ordering of the previous question on the passage of the bill. Hence, in point of fact, the exercise of the right in this case has been equitable and just. Hereafter, however, unless the Chair be ordered to the contrary by the House, he will take the liberty of suggesting that whenever the hour is to be used under the provision of the third clause of Rule XIV the member entitled to the hour should claim it before the main question is ordered upon the engrossment of the bill, or before it is question is ordered upon the engrossment of the bill, or before it is ordered on the passage of the bill, as he may select, and not during the execution of the previous question on engrossment or the execu-the execution of the previous question on engrossment of the execution of the previous question on passage.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a practical point in the consideration of this particular branch of the rules. The wording of the first clause of the seventeenth rule seems to justify the opinion taken by the Speaker, but in that event this practical difficulty arises in the construing the two rules together. If the right on the part of the member reporting a proposition to close delate is to be avaraged as the Chair suggests before the debate is bate is to be exercised, as the Chair suggests, before the debate is closed, then it will always be in the power of the majority of the House, after that closing speech has been made, still to continue the debate, unless that closing speech shall be made after the main question has been ordered and the debate finally terminated. I present this practical difficulty which meets us in the application of the new

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided absolutely on the point raised, but has merely suggested it would seem to be better hereafter that the right of the member reporting a proposition to close debate should be exercised before the main question has been actually ordered on the engrossment or on the passage of a bill. The gentleman reporting a measure is always, of course, subject to the will of the majority of the House; and even should the main question be ordered, and the majority of the House should so desire, it could reopen the whole question by reconsidering the vote ordering the main question. It would seem better that the member reporting should take his hour before the main question is actually ordered; because, if the main question should not be ordered, as demanded by the member in charge, by a majority of the House, the effect would be to throw the measure into the hands of its opponents and cut him off from closing in explanation.

The question recurred on the following amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union:

"Provided further, That commutation, in lieu of rations in kind, shall be paid to enlisted men only, under regulations made by the Secretary of War, and at not exceeding the following rates per diem, and under the following circumstances: Seventy-five cents when traveling under orders, and it is impracticable to cook their rations or carry cooked rations; seventy-five cents when stationed where it is impracticable to draw rations in kind from the Subsistence Department, or where there may be no opportunity of messing; and twenty-five cents while on furlough by competent authority."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in striking from the bill the words which have been read by the Clerk.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 10. So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire now, by direction of the committee, to submit again for a vote of the House the contract-surgeon amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not open to amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I gave notice in committee I should ask a vote on the amendment in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the right under the practice to ask for such a vote. When an amendment is rejected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it does not come before the House. In addition the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered and that motion reconsidered, and that motion laid on the table in this instance, which cuts off all further amendment in the House on this bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask whether I have not the right, as the chairman representing the Committee on Military Affairs, to have a vote in the House on this amendment? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to make a statement in reference to the subject.

Mr. ATKINS. Owing to the irregularity with which this amendment was rejected, there being some confusion about the count of the ment was rejected, there being some confusion about the count of the tellers, and some other circumstances connected with it, the Committee on Appropriations instructed the gentleman reporting this bill, [Mr. CLYMER,] and I am subrogated to his rights, to consent to a vote in the House on this same proposition, if demanded by the Committee on Military Affairs. It is asked now, as I understand, by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that a vote shall be had in the House on this proposition, and, in accordance with the instructions of the Committee on Appropriations, I yield or consent to the moving of the amendment to the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not before the House in any shape.

Mr. ATKINS. That is for the Chair to decide.

Mr. SPARKS. The proposition was voted on in the committee,

Mr. SPARKS. The proposition was voted on in the committee, and the demand was made at the time that a vote would be taken on the same amendment in the House. Now, when the bill is brought up in the House and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations having the bill in charge states to the Chair that it is the instruction of that committee a vote should be allowed in the House on the amendment, I want to know why we are prevented from hav-on the amendment, I want to know why we are prevented from having such a vote. How are we ever to get a vote on any subject if, under these circumstances, we are to be refused a vote on this contract-surgeon amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the amendment was offered in committee and voted down. Therefore not being reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—having been rejected there, it is not before the House. That amendments are referred to the contribution of the Whole House are the Whole House. ment was not reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and is not, in any shape or form, included in the report of that committee.

Mr. SPARKS. It could not be, because it was voted down in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. In addition to that, the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered on the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered and that motion was laid upon the table; so that the only questions upon which the House can vote are those included in the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPARKS. How is it possible, then, on any proposition brought before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union which is vested down to have a vest afterward at the state of the Union which is vested down to have a vest afterward to the vester afterward.

which is voted down to have a vote afterward on the same proposi-tion in the House? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. It is not in the power of the House to vote on a proposition voted down in committee unless moved afterward in the House when in order to do so.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman who had charge of this bill before demanding the previous question could have yielded to the gentle-man from Illinois to offer it, and then it would have been in order. The SPEAKER. It would not then have come in as an amendment in any of its relations to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but as an original proposition offered in the House.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, but it would have been in order at

The SPEAKER. It would under the conditions stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMahon.]

Mr. DIBRELL. It was announced at the time that it would come up again in the House when a vote would be demanded on the amend-

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with anything which occurred in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union beyond what he actually finds in the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DIBRELL. The proposition was twice carried in committee, and was only defeated on the last vote by a quibble. I shall insist we are entitled to a vote on that proposition in the House, and if we do not get it I shall be compelled to vote against the whole bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to inform the gentleman from Tennessee that he cannot recognize an amendment voted down in committee, which, of course, has not been reported to the House. In addition to which, it is cut off from being offered in this case in the House by the previous question being seconded and the main question ordered. The only propositions before the House to be voted on are those which come from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McMILLIN. In Committee of the Whole the question was asked whether there could not be a vote upon this amendment in the

Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now listening to a point of order.

Mr. BURROWS. But I make the point of order that it is not competent for gentlemen to allude to what took place in the Committee of the Whole. The report of the chairman of the Committee of the of the Whole. The report of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole must be conclusive.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should be competent for a member to allude to what occurred in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in line of debate in the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. How are you going to know what occurred in Committee of the Whole otherwise? It is not so sacred we cannot allude to it. Otherwise we have nothing to act upon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say the inquiry was made whether a vote could not be had on this proposition in the House. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. Clymer] announced, as I understood, that consent might be given for that purpose, or that he would take the matter under consideration. Afterward, and exercising his right, when he was compelled to be absent, he authorized the gentleman now in charge of the bill to allow this amendment, coming from a committee of the House, to be permitted to come to a vote in the House.

charge of the bill to allow this amendment, coming from a committee of the House, to be permitted to come to a vote in the House.

Mr. SPARKS. The committee requested it.
Mr. McMILLIN. The committee asked it, and I say if no vote is allowed upon that amendment the House will be misled in its action, for it was generally understood we were to have a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to inform the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILIN] he can act only in accordance with the rules. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will please statewhat occurred in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REED. I submit that the Committee of the Whole cannot give consent to a vote in the House and that it is not possible for the chair-consent to a vote in the House and that it is not possible for the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill to give consent that an amendment which has been rejected by the Committee of the Whole shall come before the House for action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants knowledge from the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair has stated that the Committee of the Whole having failed to report the amendment it could not come before the House unless itcome in in manner as has not been done in this case, by unanimousconsent in the Committee of the Whole or by allowance before the previous question was ordered upon the engrossment of the bill and the amendments. Then it would come in as an original proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have read that part of the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole as relate to this subject. I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SPARKS. As is well known, I demanded in the Committee of the Whole that there should be a separate vote in the House now, asthis did not come as a report from the Committee of the Whole, because the Committee of the Whole, if you please, defeated it. I understand that the proposition now comes before the House as an amendment, not as a report from the Committee of the Whole, but as an amendment to the bill.

The SPAKER The Contlement count offer it as an amendment.

amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot offer it as an amendmentnow, because, as has already been stated by the Chair, it was notoffered prior to the demand for the previous question on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, the effect of which is to cut off all other amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state in explanation of what I will now ask the Clerk to read that it occurred just after the Committee of the Whole had disagreed to this amendment. I ask the Clerk now to read that portion which I have marked.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, it is not questioned but that this amendment was voted down in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That is admitted.

Mr. CONGER. Then what further can there be of it? If it was voted down in the committee, how can it come before the House?

voted down in the committee, how can it come before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have read what the chairman of the Committee of the Whole has indicated for his own information and to revive the memory of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that will not be read. I should be sorry to have read again that harrowing scene that took place in the House.

[Laughter.]
Mr. SPRINGER. I will take care of that if the gentleman will allow this extract to be read.

Mr. CONGER. I am afraid that the effect of this will be to rekindle the sparks which flew up so vividly and brightly when this question was before the committee before. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The part to which the chairman of the committee alludes has nothing offensive in it to anybody.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sparks. I shall ask for a vote on this amendment in the House.

Mr. Marsh. And I give notice that I shall object to any vote in the House upon it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. Sparks. I desire to be heard on this for a moment.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The Chairman. The Chair desires to state that this amendment, not having been agreed to in committee, it will not be reported to the House at all; and unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of this bill admits the amendment it cannot be voted upon in the House.

Mr. Sparks. That is just my proposition, that he does admit it. I understand the condition of the question.

Now, sir, as this comes from one of the committees of this House, I hardly think that the member of the Committee on Appropriations having this bill in charge will refuse the request of that committee to have a vote in the House after having announced on yesterday that he would do so.

Mr. CLYMER. I did state last night, when the committee appeared to be without a quorum, that I would, under the circumstances, allow a vote in the House. What I will do now, when the time comes, I am not prepared to say. [Cries of "Regular order!" "That is right!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, after this the other proceedings took place

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, after this the other proceedings took place which are familiar to gentlemen, and there was nothing further said in reference to this amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. In connection with what has just been read from the Clerk's desk I desire now to call attention to what took place on the preceding day in reference to this matter, and to the remarks made by the gentleman having charge of the bill [Mr. CLYMER] on that occasion. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to move that the committee rise. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Before doing so I would like to have a vote on this amendment, and in order to save time I will say to the committee that if the proposed amendment should be voted down I will agree that there shall be a vote on it in the House by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do except with what comes to his knowledge in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union through its chairman. This amendment does not come from that committee. The Chair is advised, however, that it was offered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and was voted down; and under such circumstances, without general consent such amendment would not come into the House. It was competent for the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] before the main question had been ordered on the bill and amendments recommended by the committee running to the engrossment of the bill, to have yielded to the gentleman from Illinois to move this amendment. But that was not done, and the Chair thinks it is too late now to offer it. The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be read.

On page 11, line 240, after the word "for," insert "mounting and;" so that it will read: "For mounting and dismounting guns and removing the armament from forts being modified or repaired," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

On page 12, after line 283, insert the following:

"That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning, incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having a capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof, and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States."

Mr. MURCH. Can we have the yeas and nays on that amendment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.
Mr. MURCH. Then I call for the yeas and nays.
Mr. CONGER. Is that one amendment, or is it susceptible of division 1

The SPEAKER. It is one amendment. It comes from the committee as one amendment.

The question being put, the yeas and nays were not ordered; only thirteen members voting therefor.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the amendment may be again read, and call for a division. I think the question is not understood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to a division on the question of adopting the amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 87, noes 44.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been refused. They were demanded by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. MURCH,] and the House demanded by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. MURCH,] and the House refused to order them, only thirteen gentlemen rising.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers, less than a quorum having voted, and appoints the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] and the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HUMPHREY,] to act as tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Tellers on what?

The SPEAKER. On the adoption of the amendment.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 47.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The reconsideration of a vote refusing the yeas and nays is under the control of a majority.

Mr. CALKINS. I suggest that the motion to reconsider comes too Late after other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily; because the House is still dividing in order to determine what is its judgment. The Chair has always entertained a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, the effect being, if the vote is reconsidered by a majority, the constitutional right of one-fifth of the House to have the yeas and nays immediately recurs.

Mr. PAGE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from California will withdraw that motion. Let us take a direct vote upon the question of reconsideration.

Mr. PAGE.

Mr. PAGE. I insist on my motion. Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table were not or-dered, only 22 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of the last

Mr. LOWE. I call for tellers on the year and nays. Tellers were not ordered, only 15 members voting therefor—not onefifth of a quorum.

The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment were refused was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is agreed to by the vote reported by the tellers—ayes 107, noes 47.

The next amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following section:

"SEC. 2. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated, or shall be paid, for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall be construed to prevent the use of troops to protect against domestic violence in each of the States on application of the Legislature thereof, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened."

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ATKINS. Can this amendment as reported be divided?
The SPEAKER. It cannot.

Mr. ATKINS. Then it is to be voted on as an entirety. Mr. WARNER. Can the House not vote separately on the proviso added on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD? The SPEAKER. It cannot; because this comes from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union as an entire amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to it.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 96, not voting 79; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.
Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment

So the bill was passed.

Before the result of the vote was announced the following proceedings took place:

Mr. SPARKS. In the vote immediately preceding this it was announced that I was paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. White] and supposing it to be the fact, I refrained from voting. It seems, however, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was paired with another gentleman. I ask to have my name recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The Chair is at liberty to entertain a request to correct an error in the recording of a vote, or to correct a vote given through misapprehension. As the gentleman states that in this case there was a misapprehension, the Chair presumes there will be no objection to his recording his vote upon the previous roll-call.

Mr. SPARKS. In the announcement sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER] who has charge of the pairs on the other side, it was stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] was paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York; hence, he could not have been paired with me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman's name will be recorded on the previous vote.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKS. I vote "ay."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, during the vote just taken I was in the Hall, but did not hear my name called. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain the gentleman's request to have his name recorded unless he states that he did vote, but that his vote was not heard at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. AIKEN. I claim the right to vote. I was in the House; but I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerks inform the Chair that the gentleman's name was called twice.

Mr. AIKEN. I did not hear it, though I was in the Hall. I claim the right to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman to record his vote?

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made; and the request cannot be entertained.

Mr. AIKEN. I raise the point that I have the right to have my vote recorded. I was in the House, but I did not hear my name called. I desire to know who can say that I shall not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rule on the subject.

Mr. AIKEN. I was in the Hall, but there was so much confusion I did not hear my name called. Two-thirds of the time I cannot hear at my seat what is going on in the House. I am here to vote; and I demand my right to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read clause 1 of Rule

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon every roll call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the circumstances the Chair will ask unanimous consent for the gentleman to record his vote.

Mr. CONGER. But the rule prevents the Chair from asking such

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Aiken] sits in a part of the Hall remote from the Clerk's desk, and he states on his responsibility as a member that he did not hear his name called, owing to the confusion in the Hall at the time.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman must pay attention during the roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. DAVIS, of California. I was excluded from voting under identically the same circumstances by the Speaker not a week ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being objection, the gentleman's vote cannot be recorded.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not pretend to decide upon the proper construction of the rule; but it is very well known to the House that those members who sit as I do, on the outer tier of seats, find it impossible often to know what is going on. While this roll was being called often to know what is going on. While this roll was being called there were a dozen men in my neighborhood talking, so that the voice of the Clerk or the Chair could not be heard at my seat. It is the duty of the occupant of the chair to preserve to every member his privilege of hearing what is going on at the Clerk's desk. It is no man's right to deny to me the privilege of voting when I have been unable to hear my name called. I have the constitutional right to declare to the people of the country my vote on this question. I desire it to go on record, rules or no rules, that I am in favor of the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had the right to

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I was called out for a moment, and I am willing to pair with the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. AIKEN. My statement goes on record.

The following additional pair was read from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, with Mr. Reed. If not paired, Mr. Reed would vote "no" and Mr. Hammond "ay."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schover.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise duties.

An act (S.No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following: resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That there be sessions of the House this evening and Friday evening of this week, commencing at seven and a half o'clock, for the purpose of considering pension bills now on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. To-morrow night and Thursday have been set apart for the consideration of cases coming from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the Clerk to examine the record; and the resolution will be considered as still pend-The Chair has been informed that it does not interfere with previous orders of the House. Is there objection to the adoption of the resolution? The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That on Tuesdays and Fridays of each week the House, until further order, take a recess at 4.30 p. m. until 7.30 p. m., such evening sessions to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object to the resolution. I also call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the resolution proposing to hold night sessions to consider pension cases was up-the gentleman from Missouri objected several times loudly, and the Chair paid no attention to him.

Mr. COFFROTH. That is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the objection. The pending question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection to the introduction and reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules? The Chair hears no objection; and the resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules.

CENSUS.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. My colleague [Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky] on the Census Committee has been standing here on a privileged question to submit a report, and again and again he has demanded the ear of the Chair, and no attention has been paid

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has heard for the first time the gentleman rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The Chair did not listen, because I announced again and again I arose to a privileged report. I send up to the Clerk a conference report on which I demand the previous

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the Senate bill No. 885 to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment 1: That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1, in disagreeing to section 2 of Senate bill No. 885, and agree to section 2 with the following amendment:

"Provided, That the Superintendent of the Census shall collect and collate as far as possible, by experts and agents and from officers of the Government, information in relation to the ownership of the public debt of the United States "And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to section 6 and agree to the same with the following amendment:

"Strike out all after the words' fifteen days,' in line 27 of Senate bill No. 885, down to the word 'and' in line 35."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Housenmbered 3; which is to strike out all of section 7 of Senate bill 885; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 4, striking out all of section 8, and concur in section 8, with an amendment in lines 2 and 3 of Senate bill 885, striking out the words "three hundred and fifty "and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of the hundred and the senate agree to the same.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a question of order. I do not desire to embarrass the gentleman, but I make the point so we may have some explanation of this conference report, that this increases expenditure.

Mr. COX. This cuts it down $275,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will explain the effect of his amendment, that is what I want.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. COX. The report has been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conference report has just been

Mr. CONGER. No; I ask for the reading of the report provided for by the rule. Under Rule XXIX, every conference report is to be accompanied by a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate. I call for the reading of that detailed statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman not to insist on his point of order, but to let the gentleman from Kentucky proceed to make his statement in explanation of the effect of the conference report if adopted.

Mr. CONGER. No; let Rule XXIX be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Michigan raises a distinct point of order. I made my objection merely for the purpose of havelengthen from the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleing an explanation from the gentleman from Kentucky. man from Michigan raises a different question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has raised a question of order which must be settled.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I insist the report read fulfills the demands of the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXIX. CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition. And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Now, the gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that this is not accompanied by such a statement as is required by Rule XXIX. I insist that the report itself complies with that requirement.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the statement required by the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he has sent to the Clerk's desk with the report from the committee of conference a detailed statement?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That is the report of the committee. That report contains a detailed statement, and I insist that it is in full compliance with the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Kentucky sent to the Clerk's desk with the report of the conference committee a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate?

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan—
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to state in response to the question of the Speaker that the report shows the effect; the report that has just been read. The details are embodied in the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky does not answer the question of the Chair. Will the gentleman answer whether accompanying the report of the committee of conference there is a detailed statement sufficiently explicit, in the words of the rule, to inform the House the effect of the amendment or proposition upon the measure to which it relates? upon the measure to which it relates?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have sent the only report made by the conference committee to the Clerk's desk, and that has just been read.

Mr. CONGER. I insist upon a detailed statement of the effect of the proposition upon the measure before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is an important question, and the Chair desires the attention of the House to it as it may be one that will arise frequently. This being the first time that it has occurred under the new rules the Chair thinks that it had better be settled definitely. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that this report of the conference committee is not accompanied by the statement required in Rule XXIV.

order that this report of the conference committee is not accompanied by the statement required in Rule XXIX.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the rule was that a detailed statement should be made showing the effect of the proposed changes upon the measure before the House for consideration. If that is not read I object to accepting the report of the committee of conference at all.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do not understand the rule requires that a separate report from the report of the committee of conference shall be made. That is to say, I do not understand the rule requires that a double report shall be made. The conference committee have made a report which has been read. mittee have made a report which has been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question in the opinion of the Chair is whether the detailed statement required by the rule shall be in writing or whether it may be made verbally by the gentleman presenting the conference report. Upon that point the Chair will hear gentlemen upon the point of order.

Mr. COX. It is impossible for the committee of conference to make any other report than this, for this explains what the committee did. The Senate adopted this in its details, and we only make the same report to the House that the Senate has already adopted. If we make another report to the House it will be a simple copy of this. We can make no other. If gentlemen want another copy, that can be furnished; or if they wish a verbal explanation, they are welcome to it

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Michigan explain exactly what he wants?

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman from Michigan state any particular portion of the report to which he objects?

Mr. CONGER. I cannot explain it in that way, for the whole discussion on this rule prior to its adoption by the House, and the object of the rule, as stated at that time, was that some such statement should accompany the conference reports as would give a clear insight into the conference reports as would give a clear insight. into the amendments proposed to be incorporated into the pending measure instead of requiring every part to be read and examined separately. The object of that detailed statement, required in this separately. The object of that detailed statement, required in this rule, was to give in writing as a part of the report of the committee of conference the effect such amendment or proposition would have upon the measure to which it related; and the object of the discussion, as every one who is present will recollect, was solely to develop that point.

Now, sir, there are things here which no man can understand unless they are all read in connection with the amendments proposed to be incorporated, or in connection with what is proposed to be stricken out, and the parts inserted or stricken out, as the case may be, and the proposition reread and re-examined. I thought when that rule was adopted it would cure the evils of these irregular conference reports which we have submitted to for so long in the past. The whole conference committee make their report while the subject-matter was fresh in their minds, and come to the House with a detailed statement of the changes made, and allow the House to vote understandingly upon the proposition, and without that blindness with which we were compelled to receive these reports at other times. I regard it as a very important matter that the object and intent of this rule should be carried out in all its details.

this rule should be carried out in all its details.

Mr. COX. To save further discussion my colleague on the conference committee will withdraw the report for the present.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not withdraw the report, but allow a ruling of the Chair, for I think it is a very important question, which may be often raised in this House, and the gentleman from Michigan has done well to raise it now in this instance so that under our new rules we may be able to have a construction on it at the time the first conference report is presented, and I think—and I think—

Mr. ATKINS. I also hope that the gentleman will not withdraw it, but allow a ruling upon it for another reason than that assigned by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. In a moment I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. I think the objection made by the gentleman from Michigan is entirely correct. The language of the rule requires that there shall be a detailed statement accompanying each conference report. It is clear to my mind that he is correct. I hope the gentleman from Kentneky will allow the Chair to rule upon the question raised now Kentucky will allow the Chair to rule upon the question raised now for the first time in order that gentlemen may be governed hereafter by that ruling in making conference reports.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I insist upon the ruling of the Chair, for I claim that the report which has been submitted by the conference committee complies with every requirement of the rule, and is so clear that every man will understand it.

and is so clear that every man will understand it.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the ruling will be had, for I can see endless difficulties which may arise at the close of a short session if this rule is to be applied and construed strictly. If it is to be construed strictly, I think that it will require modification. I do not believe when we come into the House with conference reports upon the sundry civil bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, or a general deficiency bill at the close of a short session, that it will be possible to comply with the strict requirements of the rule. I hope, therefore, there will be a ruling upon it in order, if necessary, that it may be amended if a strict compliance with its exact language be insisted upon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say, before the ruling is had upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan, that the last sentence of the twenty-ninth rule under which the gentleman from Michigan has made his point of order, I believe, has been fairly construed by that gentleman. The House will remember that that clause or sentence of the rule was not embodied in the report made by the Committee on Rules, but was inserted upon the motion of the by the Committee on Rules, but was inserted upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who offered it as an amendment in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was there agreed to. My understanding of that amendment at the time it was so offered and accepted, was that it imposed on every conference committee the duty of making in writing, to accompany a conference report, such a detailed statement of the agreement reached by that conference committee as would advise this House of the effect of the report upon the measure in hand. I therefore can-not but believe that the gentleman from Michigan is right and agree in the point of order he makes.

I do not mean to say that the report made by my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. Thompson] does not substantially comply with that-provision of Rule XXIX. But, however that may be, this simply serves to illustrate the absolute necessity of giving to some power or to some committee—probably the Committee on Rules—the right from time to time to make recommendations, in the shape of reports, for amendments in this system that will serve to harmonize not only the conflicting or incongruous provisions of its own original reports but the hard system as it came out of the hands of the Committee of the Whole with the various amendments that it imposed upon us. The gentleman from Michigan, in my judgment, is thoroughly sustained in the point of order that he makes; but I do not undertake to anticipate the ruling of the Chair as to whether the report made by my colleague substantially complies with the provisions of the

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me a moment. The amendment to the report of the Committee on Rules which I offered required that this statement should be embraced in the report of the committee of conference. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] suggested that we could not control the action of the committee of the Senate in conference and suggested that the detailed statement should accompany the report. I accepted that modification and the amendment as thus modified was adopted by the Committee of the Whole. That is the history of the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman has stated correctly what took

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I understand that the construction of the rule required by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Con-GER] is that in addition to the conference committee's report agreed to by the conferees on the part of both Houses, the managers on the part of the House shall file a brief explanatory statement addressed to the House showing what they have done. I think that in preparing this report we have substantially complied with the rule of the House and have made it sufficiently clear by the reading of the report, to the mind of any man who has read the original bill, what has been done and what has not been done.

I will call the attention of the House for a moment to the report. This first clause refers to the second section of the bill. That section was originally in the Senate bill. The House disagreed to the second section. When we went into the conference committee, as stated in the report, the Senate conferees refused to recede from that section; they stood by it and we had to recede from our amendment, but we required another proviso should be added to it, which proviso is incorporated in the report in a manner I consider that fully complies with the rule.

The next section there is any difficulty about is the sixth. It is clearly stated in the report exactly what portion of that section is stricken out. No man can fail to understand it. It is indicated by lines and by words so that it cannot be misunderstood.

The seventh section is stricken out in toto. The conference report states that the seventh section is stricken out. Do you expect us to write out a long report and tell the effect that section will have?

A MEMBER. Yes.

A MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Do you want a report explaining that if the seventh section is stricken out a duplicate return shall not be sent to the Secretary of State; when, if you look at the bill, you will see that if the seventh section is stricken out nothing of the kind will occur. The bill is printed and laid on your desks, and how much more can you require upon this point than the clear statement that the seventh section is stricken out?

Then you come to the eighth section, the only other one about which there is any difference. The Senate conferees refused to agree to our striking out the eighth section. We agreed to that section with an amendment to strike out $350,000 and insert $125,000. That is stated in the report; and it is made clear to every one who hears the report read that instead of appropriating $350,000 in the eighth section we only appropriate $125,000. There is not a man of common intelligence who hears the report read who cannot see the effect of intelligence who hears the report read who cannot see the effect of that part of the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask my colleague to yield to me one moment.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To make this matter entirely clear I have gone back to the RECORD of the 28th of February; and I think in the light of the debate which then took place it is perfectly clear that my colleague has complied with the provisions of Rule XXIX. When the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] had offered this amendment and it was under debate I find that the following colloquy took

Mr. Blackburn. A conference report means the report of the conference committee of the two Houses. The reports to the two Houses must be duplicates, the one of the other. There cannot be a syllable in the conference report made to this House that is not embraced in the report made to the Senate. We cannot compel the Senate to do what is here suggested; but I pledge myself I will use my best endeavor as a member of the Committee on Rules and of the Joint Committee on Rules to have this incorporated into a joint rule to govern the two Houses. While assenting to the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I am in favor of so modifying his amendment as to require the House members of the committee of conference to furnish with each conference report an explanation, by a statement in detail of the points in controversy covered by such report.

I find that in the same discussion a question was asked by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS:]

Does the gentleman-

Referring to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] the author of the amendment—design by his amendment that this statement or explanation of the various items in the conference report shall constitute a part of the report itself, or that it shall be a statement to simply accompany the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Simply a statement, independent of the report.

Mr. ATKINS. If it is to be a simple statement to accompany the conference report, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all.

I find that that was the construction given by the House to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] at the time of its adoption.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am glad the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Con-GER] has raised this point of order. I claim that the report submitted y the committee of conference does not answer the requirement of the rule, nor does the statement just made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Thompson,] from the committee of conference, answer that requirement. This report is very much like all our former reports from committees of conference before our new rule was adopted. It says that the committee of conference agreed to strike out section so and so, and agreed to amend section so and so by striking out so many dollars and inserting so many dollars. Now, what does that mean? That is just exactly the old trouble.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Thompson] has spent five minter the trainer to the law and the second section of the second sec utes trying to tell us what was struck out and what was put in this bill by the committee of conference. And after all that he has said, I do not know and I do not think any member of this House understands the effect on the bill of what was done by the committee of conference. The gentleman says that we have the bill and the report, and that we can understand from the report what has been done with the bill. So we can, if every member will take the original bill and the report and sit down and spend ten minutes in comparing the two. If he will do that he can of course arrive at some result. But that is not what is contemplated by the rule.

We should bear in mind that conference reports are made at all the House, and members of the House are not generally willing to stop for the purpose of making a long examination of a conference report and the bill to which it relates. As a general rule, I will say, it is within the experience of all old members that nine times out of ten conference reports are voted upon without members having any definite knowledge of what has been done by the committees of con-

I listened to the reading of this report, but I could not understand certain things in it. I desired to be informed upon certain matters, certain things in it. I desired to be informed upon certain matters, but I could not get the information from that report. I suppose—and this I get from personal inquiry of members of the committee of conference and others—I suppose that the pay of the enumerators has been raised. I suppose that this conference report dispenses with so much of the census laws as requires an attempt to ascertain the number of naturalized citizens. I suppose it dispenses with an attempt to ascertain through the enumerators just where the national debt is held, and it gives the Superintendent of the Census authority debt is held, and it gives the Superintendent of the Census authority to get that information in some other way. Now, if things of that kind were stated in the detailed statement called for by the rule, we should be enabled to act intelligently upon this report.

Mr. BLOUNT. You are wrong in what you suppose has been done.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] tells me I am wrong in that; but it is the best I can do, after listening to the report as it was read, and after making personal inquiry.

The rule is clear. It is true that we cannot control the action of the Senate committee of conference. It is true that the report agreed upon by the joint conferees and signed jointly must be very much in the old-fashioned style, simply referring to the sections or amendments by numbers and giving the words put in or the words struck out. But the moment the report is read everybody asks, what does that mean? Therefore this very excellent rule suggested by the genthat mean't Inercipe this very excellent rule suggested by the gen-tleman from Wisconsin was adopted by the House requiring an addi-tional statement, for the House only, and from the House conferees only, setting forth briefly the effect of the changes agreed upon by the joint committees of conference.

Mr. REAGAN. So far as this bill is concerned, as it is a short bill and easily understood, I am entirely willing to join with others in giving unanimous consent for action upon this report of the committee of conference. But we are undertaking now to construe the rule upon this subject for the first time. That rule requires that there shall accompany every conference report "a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they

The conference report now before the House I presume is an exact copy of the report which has been submitted to the Senate, and is in the usual form of conference reports. The object of the amendment to our rule was intended to go beyond that, to require something more than a conference report.

Experience here has shown the members of this House that long bills containing many items and with many amendments come from conference committees before the House for action, and the reports when read simply state what sections or parts of sections were agreed to, what were disagreed to, and perhaps some statement of the effect of those amendments upon the particular section of the bill under consideration. But the conference reports fail to disclose to us what is the effect of the action of the committee.

The object of this addition to the old rule was to require that a statement should accompany each conference report which would apprise the House of the effect of the amendments made. It is true that the report here shows that certain amendments were agreed to and certain other amendments disagreed to; but there is not accompanying this report the detailed statement required by the rule, which was intended to inform the House of the effect of those amendments.

I would not occupy one moment of the time of the House on this matter, if it were not that this is the first time the Chair is called upon to rule upon the effect of the new rule. We must look beyond this bill to the effect which the decision of the Chair may have upon the action of the House on future conference reports.

If the report now before the House is a compliance with the rule, then all other reports coming from conference committees hereafter will come in exactly as they have come heretofore, and we will derive no benefit from this rule, which it seems to me had in view a most beneficent and useful purpose—the purpose of advising the House not only as to what amendments were agreed to and what disagreed to, but as to the effect of those amendments, so that the House could vote intelligently upon the report. As I think this amendment to our rules was a wise one, and will be useful in guarding us, perhaps, against frequent errors, it seems to me best to give the rule the interpretation which was manifestly intended by the House when it was adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that this report fully complies with all the requirements of the rule and that report fully complies with all the requirements of the rule and that any further explanation, instead of making it clear, would only serve to make it obscure and bungling. Besides, it surely was not contemplated that the member presenting a conference report should bring into the House along with the report a long and tedious statement, giving a full history of the bill, section by section and amendment by amendment. The whole thing contemplated was that the reading of the report, with the bill before members, would give such information that they would know exactly what had been done. Now, there is no human being who can take this bill with the report and read them one with the other without fully understanding exactly what has been agreed to. Therefore I submit that the rule has been what has been agreed to. Therefore, I submit that the rule has been what has been agreed to. Therefore, I submit that the rule has been fully complied with as far as it possibly could be.

Mr. HAYES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAYES. Does the gentleman claim that this is anything more than a conference report? Is it not simply a conference report signed by the conferees on behalf of the House and the Senate? Is it anything more than that?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is nothing more than that; and nothing more is necessary where the conference report gives all the information that could be embraced in an additional statement.

Mr. HAYES. If this is simply a conference report, and nothing else, where is the "detailed statement" which the rule provides for? Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The "detailed statement" is in

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The "detailed statement" is in the report itself.

Mr. HAYES. Where is the "detailed statement" which was contemplated by the rule according to the discussion had upon its adoption, as read by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN ?]

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The "detailed statement" is in the report; and if this is not sufficient the statement made by myself the report; and if this is not sufficient the statement made by myself ought to be sufficient, because nothing requires that the accompanying statement shall be in writing. The rule provides simply that the report shall be accompanied by a detailed statement, which may be given verbally or in writing. I call for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this question has arisen thus early in the session. I consider that a very important change in our rules was wrought by the additional clause which has been read in the hearing of the House. A single word will demonstrate that the construction sought to be placed upon this new rule by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] is not the correct construction.

Under the old rule, Mr. Speaker, we had conference reports which embodied, in a measure, information which enabled the House to determine what changes were effected by the agreement of the conference committees of the two Houses. Those reports were accompanied by verbal statements explanatory of such matters as were not sufficiently explained by the report. It was not intended by this change of the rules to leave the House in the condition in which it was under the old rule, that is, with what information might be gleaned from the conference report, and the accompanying verbal statement made by the gentleman having it in charge. If, as is insisted, this is all that is required by the present rule, what was the purpose sought to be accomplished by the House in changing the phraseology of the rule? Under the old rule we had the report with whatever information it might contain, and we had the accompanying verbal statement of the gentleman who had the report in charge. But, Mr. Speaker, the new rule was not designed to leave the House in this same situation. If that had been the intention, there would have been no change in the phraseology of the rule. The phraseology having been changed so as to require something in addition to what was required under the former rule, it seems to me it must be held by the Chair to contemplate that there shall accompany the report an independent written explanation of the effect of the change agreed to by the conference committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the point.

of order. Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Before the Chair passes upon the point, I will submit, along with the report, a statement in writing, if

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first decide the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to occupy further time; but I do consider this amended rule a very valuable one for giving members information in regard to conference reports. Now, I have before me this conference report as presented in the Senate and printed in the Record. Having read the bill and having read this report, I say that in regard to these amendments I am utterly unable to tell their effect.

I illustrate this by referring to the report as to the fourth amend-I illustrate this by referring to the report as to the fourth amend-

Amendment 4. That the House recede from its amendment numbered 4, striking out all of section 8, and concur in section 8, with an amendment in line 2 and 3 of Senate bill 885, striking out the words "three hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Who can tell what the effect of that will be or what it is about unless every member has the bill before him, or the report of the committee, and time also in which to study the whole subject?

Take the next amendment, "that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, as to collecting and publishing the statistics of the population, industries, and resources of Alaska, and the Senate agree to the same." What does that mean? Does it strike out all in regard to the population of Alaska, and all in regard to the resources of Alaska, or does it put them in? Does it give us any information as to the effect of the report? I say from the printed report before me, having read it carefully as reported to the Senate, I am unable to know, as to one of those amendments, even with the bill before me, in the short time I have had to examine it, what the result will be. I say it would be the same with any member of the House. It is immaterial to me how this rule is to be decided of course, more than any other member of the House; but considering the new rule valuable as a check on the imperfect and hasty adoption of conference reports in the ignorance greement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, as to collectimperfect and hasty adoption of conference reports in the ignorance of the members of the House of the effect to be had, I hope it may be rigidly enforced, and that a detailed statement in writing, as contemplated, shall be required.

Mr. McLANE. I hope the Chair has heard enough now to make his decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the question of order.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Chair will decide in the interests of the rules. [Cries of "Regular order!"] What is the regular order! The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the point of order.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Chairman will so decide this that the rules shall receive a clear and fixed construction, and that the Chairman will decide that the report must be made in writing, signed by the conferees on the part of the House, to be read by the Clerk. That the speech I desired to make. I hope it did not disturb anybody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In construing an amended statute it is necessary to take into consideration the statute previous to its amendment. Before the amendment of this rule conference reports were submitted and signed by the conferees, and it was customary to call on any member of the conference committee to make explanation of the effect of the report if adopted. The Chair understands the new part of the rule was intended to change that practice, and therefore in construing the language of that new part of the rule—namely, "And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate"—it is necessary to give effect to that additional provis-ion. In order to give effect to it the Chair understands it has reference to something in addition to the report of the conference committee, something to accompany that report, an explicit detailed statement, which of course could not be the report itself.

Whether that additional detailed statement should be made ver-or in writing may be a question open to some doubt; but, in view of the fact that this detailed statement must be made by the referees, as a statement accompanying the report, the Chair is of the opinion it must come with the sanction of the conferees; not a statement of one of the managers of the conference, but a statement of all of them, or a majority of them, and, to be a statement of all of them, or a ma-or a majority of them, and, to be a statement of all of them, or a majority of them, it must be in writing—

Mr. McLANE. Signed by them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Detailed and sufficiently explicit that the members of the House, on the reading of it, can understand the changes to be effected and the actual purport of the conference report. The Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that, in presenting a conference report, it must be accompanied by a detailed statement in writing, signed by the conferees themselves, or a majority of them, giving their explanation of the changes made in their own report. This report not being accompanied by such detailed statement in writing, signed by the respective conferees, the Chair sustains the point of order and holds that the report is not in order under the rule.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is whether the report of the conference committee is not sufficiently explicit coming under the hand of one of the managers. Is that not a sufficient compliance with the rules, embracing, as it does, details of the amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not a detailed statement accompanying the report.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If necessary, I send up this statement, then, to accompany the report. It is a written statement signed by all the conferees.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. It is, perhaps, immaterial now; but at the moment I rose to read from the original amendment in support of the construction of the Chair that this statement should be in writing. It reads as follows:

Shall be so written out as to inform the House from the reading of the report the effect such amendments or propositions will have, &c.

For that the clause inserted in the rule was substituted. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The statement of the gentleman only confirms the position taken by the Chair. As this is a new question, if there is any doubt on it, the Chair would prefer that an appeal be taken in order that its construction may be settled by the House. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] The Chair understands the gentleman withdraws his report.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No, I do not; but I send up a written statement to accompany it.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. This being pending as a privileged question, the gentleman from Kentucky sends up a statement to accompany it. He, in that respect, complies with the ruling of

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands, and will entertain the report as now presented, accompanied by the detailed statement required by the rule.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me a single observation, and that is touching the ruling of the Chair. I want to find what it is in one particular. Do I understand the Chair to rule that in all cases there must accompany a constand the Chair to rule that in all cases there must accompany a conference report a separate report from the conferees, carrying out and embodying the exact terms of that rule? I recollect during the discussion on the rules it was quite generally spoken of on the floor that the effect of the rule would be that the House conferees would insist upon such report as would give the House the desired information before they would agree to the report, and that the identical or a duplicate report would go to the Senate. Now, I do not see the necessity for example to the report accomplished the necessity for the second contraction. sity for a separate report from the conference committee if the original report gives the desired information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair regards the rule as imperative in this respect.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I now move the previous question on the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 885 submit this accompanying statement along with their con-on Senate bill No. 885 submit this accompanying statement along with their conference report:

First. In receding from its amendment No. 1 the schedules of the existing law were modified so as to strike out the naturalized-citizen clause and United States debt clause, requiring the census of the latter to be taken out of the schedules and to be taken by experts.

Second. The second amendment was intended to make more certain the verification of the returns of enumerators.

Third. The whole of section 7 of the Senate bill was stricken out, as the committee did not consider any necessity for the copy of the meturns to be deposited in the Secretary of State's office.

Fourth. As a consequence we lessen the appropriation $275,000.

Fifth. It was intended to take the census of Alaska as the House proposed and the Senate agreed. The reasons are apparent. It is a part of this country. We struck out so much of section 6 as required duplicate copies of the schedules to be made, and all of it is left in the Senate bill intact except that part.

PHLIP B. THOMPSON.

S. S. COX.

S. S. COX. NELSON W. ALDRICH.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I now demand the previous question on the report.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that that is a very satisfactory report, [laughter,] made, as it must have been, in the hurry of debate here. But I desire to ask still if there is to be an enumeration of indiwiduals and resources in Alaska.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I suppose so.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman does not state it, and it cannot be gathered from the reading of the report.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That will be settled by the law, I presume.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to repeat that in the hurry of debate that was a very well prepared report. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that since he has decided the question of order he has taken the opinion of the Speaker of the House, who fully concurs with him in that decision.

Mr. LAPHAM. There is a point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair in that ruling, and that is whether under this rule, in case the committee of conference should disagree among themselves, whether two reports, a majerity and a minority report, would be required, so that both sides of the case might be presented.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The majority report would be conclu-

The SPEAKEK pro tempore. The majority report would be conclusive, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. LAPHAM. The views of the minority would not be heard at all, then, if there is a difference of opinion?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. This report only states what we did and not what anybody might think about it. I insist upon the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The conference report was then agreed to.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, with amend-

Mr. WELLS. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLITS. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. WELLS. Pending that motion, I move that all general debate be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, there must be general debate on that bill. The rule provides that debate must be begun in Committee of bill. The rule provides that debate the Whole before it can be limited.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much time would the gentleman desire?
Mr. CONGER. I cannot tell until we get into Committee of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule to which the gentleman from Michigan refers is the five-minute rule. All general debate may be closed at any time.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WHITTHORNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. WELLS. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to. Mr. WELLS. I now move the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Whitthorne reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had some to no resolution thereon.

BELINDA CURTIS.

Mr. McCOID. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar, that it may be put upon its passage, the bill (H. R. No. 2407) granting a pension to Belinda Curtis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the bill to be read, and will then ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Belinda Curtis, widow of Major-General Samuel R. Curtis, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. McCOID. This is a bill to pension the widow of Major-General Curtis, who was educated at West Point, served two years in the Regular Army in Mexico, was a member of the House of Representatives from 1857 to 1861, and went from the House into the Army. As a mark of respect to a former member, I ask the House to take up this bill now and act upon it.

Mr. ATKINS. The bill, as I understand, is for the benefit of the widow of General Curtis, of Iowa.

Mr. McCOID. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOID. I se, sir.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CARLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back to the House, with amendments, the bill (H.R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the House do now ad-

Mr. COFFROTH. I suggest that the motion be for a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. COFFROTH. Can I move to amend, so that the House shall

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn does not admit of amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry: Is a mo-tion to adjourn now in order when the House has made an order that a recess shall be taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can vacate the order for a recess by adjourning.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I desire to make some reports from the Committee on Printing. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 66, noes 81.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered, only seven members voting therefor.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.
Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House take a recess till half past seven o'clock.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion for a recess the Chair submits the following requests for leave of absence:

of Mr. Le Fevre, indefinitely, on account of important business; Of Mr. Price, from attendance on the session to-night; Of Mr. Davidson, from attendance on the session to-night; and Of Mr. Fernando Wood, from attendance on night sessions of the House during this week.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the requests are not granted.

Some time subsequently Mr. McKenzie withdrew his objection, and the requests were granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr COFFROTH,] that the House take recess till half past seven o'clock this evening.

The question being put, there were—ayes 95, noes 47.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. McKENZIE made the point

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. MCKENZIE made the point that a quorum had not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. COFFROTH, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MCKENZIE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 9.

Mr. MCKENZIE. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays. Let us see who vote against pensions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKENZIE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order. The House is now dividing on a motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays had been ordered, but the first name on the roll not having been called the motion to adjourn is in order.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for tellers.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. The motion to adjourn is not in order, for the reason that since the prior motion to adjourn was made no other business has been done. Following the motion to adjourn was a motion to take a recess. "Regular order!"

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This is the regular order. I am stating my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the point

Mr. REED. How can it be too late when the Chair would not listen to it before?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to adjourn is always in order after intervening business, and there has been intervening business.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I challenge the recollection of the Chair as to its correctness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may be in error.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I refer the Chair to the record which will show that the intervening business had not been finished.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. My inquiry is this: whether when it appears from the reporters' notes, and the record shows the fact, that objection was made to the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coffroth] for an evening session, that resolution was properly before the House?

was properly before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question cannot arise at this time. The question is now on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have made a parliamentary inquiry and I demand of the Chair a reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has inquired about a matter which is not before the House. It does not go to the question pow pending.

quired about a matter which is not before the House. It does not go to the question now pending.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not suppose that any rule requires that parliamentary inquiries shall go to any particular subject. This is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A parliamentary inquiry must relate to a subject-matter before the House. No business could be transacted if inquiries could be continually addressed to the Chair about extraneous matters

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask that the reporters' notes be read for the information of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That could only be done by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I suppose the reading of the record of the House for the information of the House on the matter to which or the House for the information of the House on the matter to which my parliamentary inquiry refers would be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's parliamentary inquiry does not relate to the question now before the House; the reading of the record could only be entertained by unanimous consent and the Chair hears objection on all sides. The question is on the ordering of tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BROWNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 members voting therefor.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. The time having arrived at which the House ordered a recess to be taken, is it not the duty of the Chair to declare a recess at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House fixed no time at which the cess should be taken.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I understood that the recess was to be taken at four and a half o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The at which the recess shall be taken. The resolution does not fix the hour

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. How does the resolution read? The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be sessions of the House Tuesday and Friday evenings of this week, commencing at half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of considering pension bills now on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. MILLS. If the House shall continue in session from now until seven and a half o'clock, will the House not then have to go into ssion this evening, according to that resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a question before the House at this time.

Mr. MILLS. It is a construction of the resolution directing a recess to be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 100, not voting 139; as follows:

Mr. Dunn with Mr. Weaver.

Mr. Evins with Mr. Van Voorhis.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, with Mr. LINDSEY, for the remainder

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The metion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the yeas and nays; and being taken, the yeas and nays were not ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence for the session of this evening was granted to Mr. Martin, of Delaware, Mr. Humphrey, Mr. Tromas Turner, and Mr. Reagan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coffroth] that the House now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House met at half past seven o'clock, Mr. Springer in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution prescribing the order of business for this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That there be evening sessions of the House this evening and Friday evening of this week, commencing at seven and a half o'clock, for the purpose of considering pension bills now on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering pension bills, which are the special order.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Private Calendar.

ELIZA M. FRICK.

The first pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting a pension to Eliza M. Frick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza M. Frick, widow of the late Captain C. H. Frick, Company C, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who contracted disease in the war with Mexico, from which he died, commencing on the 21st day of January, 1861, at the rate of $20 per month, deducting therefrom any pension paid to the claimant or her husband heretofore.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

That Captain C. H. Frick, the husband of the claimant, in the late war between the United States and Mexico, entered the service of the United States as a volunteer in Company C, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, commanded by Captain John S. Wilson, and was regularly mustered into the service of the United States at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 3d day of January, 1847, as the first lieutenant of said company. That on the way to the city of Mexico, on shipboard, off Vera Cruz, the said Captain John S. Wilson died; and that on the 12th day of November, 1847, at the city of Mexico, the husband of claimant, the late Captain C. H. Frick, was promoted to the captaincy of said Company C, and served in that capacity to the end of the war, and was honorably discharged the service of the United States, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1848. It is shown in evidence that he gallantly led his command in several of the more important engagements with the enemy, namely, at the siege of Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Chepultepec, and the city of Mexico. On the 26th day of January, 1861, he died of consumption, the result of "climate diarrhea," from which he suffered while in said service and for several years after his return home, leaving a wife and three minor children to mourn his loss. It is also shown that, as a result of this diarrhea, his constitution became so much impaired that his whole left side became paralyzed, destroying the sight of one eye and prostrating his whole nervous system. It is further shown that previous to his enlistment he was of sound and robust health, and capable of undergoing all manner of hardships.

Your committee consider that the honorable and meritorious service of claimant's husband against a foreign foe, and his untimely death, the result of disease contracted in said service in the line of duty, entitles the claimant to a pension from the date of the death of her husband, at the rate of $20 per month, it being the same amou

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside, to be favorably reported, The CHAIRMAN declared that the ayes seemed to prevail.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. When the Chairman called for objections I objected. I now call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were 30 in the affirmative, 1 in the negative

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. Cof-FROTH were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 2.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. No quorum has voted.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read the second clause of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask leave of absence for to-night. The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, leave will be granted. There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the point that no quorum has voted is withdrawn; and this bill will be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY ANN M'CARROL.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Ann McCarrol, of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, widow of James McCarrol, deceased, late a member of Company B, Forty-third Ohio Volunteers, who died from disease and exposure contracted in the line of duty while in the military service of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps it might save time if as each bill is reached the chairman or some member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would state whether it is a bill in the ordinary form for placing a person on the pension-roll, and whether the report is unanimous.

Mr. COFFROTH. These reports are all unanimous.

Mr. CONGER. Then, where a bill is in the usual form, merely placing the person on the pension-roll without any increase, it might facilitate business to waive the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this is a unanimous report; and unless some member calls for it, the report will not be read. Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the report be read.
Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to make one inquiry of the Chair. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] did not withdraw his point that there was no quorum. I do not know whether the bill immediately preceding this is regarded as laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the point.

Mr. ATHERTON. I did not so understand. My objection to the provisions of that bill (I had none to its passage if properly amended) provisions of that bill (I had none to its passage if properly amended) was that it goes back and attempts to pay arrears of pension from 1861. If it were a pension bill in the ordinary form, I would make no objection; but if in this case we go back to 1861, we might as well in some other case grant a pension from 1812.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question for the Chair.

Mr. ATHERTON. The point, however, which I make is that the gentleman from Illinois did not withdraw his objection but simply asked leave personally to retire; and unless that bill was declared laid aside for favorable report to the House it is still open to amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Illinois said, I believe, that he would withdraw his point of order if the House would excuse him. He asked to be excused and left the House. I think it was understood by those who sat near him that he withdrew the point.

Mr. ATHERTON. That may be; but I did not so understand. The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol, widow of James McCarrol, deceased, late a private in Company B, Forty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That Mary A. McCarrol is the widow of James McCarrol, who was a private in Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and who died July 16, 1862, in the hospital at Camp Dennison, while in the service.

Mary A. McCarrol made application for a pension in July, 1864, as No. 56624. She produced adequate evidence to sustain her claim, had it not been for two entries in the records of the War Department, one of which reported James McCarrol as a deserter, and the other of which gave the cause of his death as mania a potu. The record in the Surgeon-General's Office kept complete trace of the soldier during the whole time he was charged with desertion, excepting the latter portion of this time, when he was in his grave. One of these records had to yield to the other, for they were palpably inconsistent; so the charge of desertion was removed, and the only impediment remaining in the way was that the soldier died of mania a potu, which was deemed good cause for rejecting the widow's claim.

This is the only question in the case : all class is clear.

Sustaining the charge that he died of this complaint there is no evidence whatever except the entry in the surgeon's book kept at the hospital.

Refuting the charge is evidence furnished by the same records which charge it. The records in the Surgeon-General's Office show that he was left sick in hospital, Hamburgh, Tennessee, April 24, 1862; transferred to hospital steamer Pringle, June 28, 1862, and sent to hospital, Camp Dennison, Ohio, where he died July 16, 1862.

It is wholly irreconcilable with the probabilities that he lingered for seventy-eight days with the mania a potu.

thence transferred to general hospital, Camp Dennison, Ohio, where he died July 16, 1862.

It is wholly irreconcilable with the probabilities that he lingered for seventy-eight days with the mania a potu. It is not to be assumed that a sick man, under medical care and the discipline of the hospital, would contract this disease.

Then M. R. Shaltos and Sebastian Floading swear that they belonged to the same company with James McCarrol, and that to the best of their knowledge he was taken sick with the diarrhea while in the line of duty, and was sent to the hospital, and that they never saw him under the influence of strong drink while in the service. George H. Trout, also a member of the same regiment, but belonging to Company A, knew him before he entered the service, was with him in the service and saw him frequently, and he avers that he had not the mania a potu, but the diarrhea, and that he never knew him to drink any intoxicating liquors, and that he was a sober, industrious man.

Mrs. McCarrol, the claimant, in her affidavit says that her husband was not addicted to the use of strong drinks. She also states in her affidavit that she is poor and unable to bear the expenses necessary to obtaining additional affidavits. She resides in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, while the regiment to which her husband belonged was raised in the State of Ohio.

The committee, believing that this claim is just, report back the bill (H. R. No. 1469) with a recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask the gentleman making this report at

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask the gentleman making this report at what time this man was mustered into the service?

Mr. COFFROTH. I am not able to state from memory. The report will show it, I think. He was mustered in early in the war, at all

Mr. BRAGG. He died early in the game, it seems.
Mr. BAYNE. He was mustered into the service at an early period in the war

Mr. COFFROTH. Let that portion of the report be read. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

That Mary A. McCarrol is the widow of James McCarrol, who was a private in Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and who died July 16, 1862, in the hospital at Camp Dennison, while in the service.

Mr. BRAGG. That report does not seem to state the time when he was mustered into the service. The reason I desire to ask that question is, that from other circumstances connected with this case I should be led to infer that that soldier never got very far from the place of his original enlistment.

Mr. BAYNE. He was in Tennessee. Mr. BRAGG. He seems to have been transferred from the camp to a hospital-boat, from the hospital-boat to another hospital in Kentucky, and from there transferred to another hospital, and so on.

Mr. BAYNE. He was mustered in with the Forty-fifth Ohio Regiment, a regiment which saw some hard service in the early part of the war, and he was with the regiment during the early part of the

Mr. BRAGG. At what time was he enlisted?
Mr. BAYNE. In 1861.
Mr. BRAGG. What is his military record?
Mr. BAYNE. His military record was that of an active soldier until he was taken sick.
Mr. BRAGG. When was he taken sick?

Mr. BRAGG. What was the matter with him?

Mr. BRAGG. What was the matter with him?

Mr. BAYNE. I know all about this case, and it presents a question of interest to Congress, because it indicates the necessity for adjudicating upon these pension cases without delay. This man was taken sick from diarrhea, from the effects of which he died. The records of the hospital allege that he died of mania a potu, and he was also charged on the records with being a deserter. It was found after he died that instead of being a deserter he was in the hospital, but his name was carried on the rolls as a deserter after he was dead and in his grave. They removed the charge of desertion against him.

Mr. BRAGG. What was his military record in the service?

Mr. BAYNE. I have stated that his military record was that of an active soldier up to the time of his sickness. After he was taken sick he was sent to the hospital, and the evidence of his comrades who served with him in the regiment is to the effect that he did not drink at all, and that the charge that he died with mania a potu could not have been a correct one.

Mr. BRAGG. You say that he was an active soldier up to the time that he was taken sick and sent to the hospital?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRAGG. Was he with his regiment during the whole time before he was taken sick?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Was that regiment in any engagement prior to the time that he went into the hospital?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRAGG. What engagement was it?

Mr. BAYNE. I have forgotten the name of it, but I know that it was in an engagement.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems to me that the committee making this report, and expecting it to be supported by the House, ought to be able to state all the details which might be required in determining a question of this kind, such as the length of service of the soldier, his place of enlistment, and the character of the service in which he was engaged, instead of showing that he was in the hospital all the time in the early part of the war. This report shows that in the early part of 1862 he died in the hospital—

Mr. BAYNE. But the fact is that the Committee on Invalid Pensions felt it incumbent upon them to meet the objections raised in the Pension Bureau to the granting of this pension. They presented the reasons in this case—the reasons why the Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim. He alleged no other reasons at all for rejecting the claim, and the committee have presented the objections raised by the Commissioner of Pensions, and the committee thought that from all of the circumstances in this case the pension ought to be

Mr. BRAGG. Was it not a good objection on the part of the Commissioner of Pensions that the record of this man showed that he died of mania a potu—that he did not die of disease contracted in the service or in the line of duty?

Mr. BAYNE. It would have been a perfectly good objection if he had died of that. But he did not die of mania a potu, but he died of altogether a different disease.

Mr. BRAGG. As I understand it, that is the evidence of the surgeon who treated him. Now, do the committee intend to say that the evidence of this man's comrades has more weight with them in determining the case than the evidence of the surgeon who treated him while he was in the hospital, and who made a record in his hospital book showing the character of the disease of which he died? Does the gentleman mean to say that the surgeon at Camp Dennison did not know the difference between mania a potu and diarrhea?

Mr. BAYNE. It appears that the gentleman could not have known the difference between the two diseases, because it is just a matter of impossibility that this man could have been taken there sick with this complaint, and kept there for seventy-eight days and died of it after that length of time, where it would have been impossible for him to have continued drinking. The evidence of his comrades from the time that he was in the service until he left shows that he did not drink anything at all.

Mr. RICHMOND. That is the reason that he died. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to MARY WADE.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2450) granting a pension to Mary Wade. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Wade, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, who was the mother of Jennie Wade, who was killed while baking bread for the Union soldiers, and pay the said Mary Wade a pension at the rate of $8 per menth from the 3d day of July, 1863, the date of her said daughter's death, to continue during the widowhood of the said Mary Wade, she having been dependent for support on her said daughter.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses reporting in favor of the claimant, the committee adopt the report made to the Forty-fifth Congress, namely:

Jennie Wade, a daughter of the petitioner, twenty years of age, was killed by a rebel bullet at Gettysburgh, on the 3d day of July, 1863, within the Union lines, and while she was engaged in baking bread for the Union soldiers. Mary Wade, the petitioner, was dependent, in part, for support upon her daughter. The husband of the petitioner is a maniac, and has been confined for many years past in the county almshouse. The petitioner is fifty-eight years old, and has no property except about fifty dollars' worth of household goods and a life interest in a small house and lot, valued at $350 or $400. Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. LEAMY.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 228) granting a pension to George W. Leamy; reported by Mr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Leamy, formerly a second lieutenant of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry; and he is hereby granted and allowed a pension, to commence from the 2d of June, 1865, at the rate of $15 per month.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

It appears from the testimony that the petitioner enlisted in the United States service in 1861 as a second lieutenant in Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry. It is shown by the testimony of Major Shuman, who was major of his regiment, and present at the time that, on the 2d of June, 1864, when returning to camp at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from an expedition to obtain provisions for his mess, he fell in crossing a fence and broke his right arm at the elbow, which resulted in permanent disability in that arm, it stiffening at the joint and becoming and still remaining almost useless. He was afterward honorably discharged on account of this disability. His brother officers bear testimony to his good and faithful services, and the committee think it is clearly established that the petitioner is suffering from disability incurred in the United States service and in the line of duty, and they therefore report back the said bill and recommend that it do pass. The bill passed the House of Representatives on the 29th of April, 1876, and again June 14, 1878.

Mr. BRAGG. Loffer the following amondment.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words in the seventh and eighth lines "from the 2d of June, 1865," and insert in lieu thereof "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. McMILLIN. I would state that the difference this would make

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would state that the difference this would make in the present case—I have made the calculation—is $2,700.

Mr. BRAGG. The reason of my offering this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is for the purpose of testing the sense of the committee whether we will continue to repeat over and over again the error which we have committed by the passage of what is known as the arrearages bill. I do not pretend to say but what there were many cases in which bill. I do not pretend to say but what there were many cases in which the pensioner was justly entitled to arrears, and I should have gladly advocated any bill which upon its own merits recommended a case for such action on the part of Congress. But I was opposed to the general sweeping character of the bill which we passed; and the result has shown that it has brought applicants for pensions from every hamlet in the land who never dreamed of making application for pension before.

It has offered a reward for claim and pension agents to hunt up It has offered a reward for claim and pension agents to hunt up men and to assist them in manufacturing cases and presenting them to the Department. Because the premium is great it affords a sufficiently large sum of money to divide liberally; and the facilities with which pensions can be furnished at this day are so great that there are but very few cases where, if the pension claimant knows exactly what he wants to prove and takes the time, he is not able to supply the proof necessary to establish the case.

Experience has shown that we committed an error, and the ques-Experience has shown that we committed an error, and the question is whether we shall keep on repeating this error for this great flood of pensioners who are coming to Congress, not being able to procure a pension under the pension laws. At the time of the passage of the pension laws they were supposed to be ample in their provisions to secure a proper pension to every soldier who was entitled to a pension, and when parties come to Congress making special cases for special relief, and we grant them special relief, we ought to grant it, it seems to me, as a donation given by us to them, not letting it extend away back ten, twelve, sixteen, seventeen, or eighteen years.

Mr. O'NEILL. The report in this case states that a bill similar to this passed the House of Representatives in 1876, four years ago, and again two years ago in the last Congress. This is not one of the class of pension claims got up by pension agents and by men whose business it is to look after soldiers who have claims, and who sometimes perhaps overstep the mark and present to the Commissioner of Pensions claims which ought not to be granted. But this is a claim of a sions claims which ought not to be granted. But this is a claim of a soldier who came here by a petition presented by myself in two Congresses, and I think presented again in this Congress; and this is the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This soldier had a right to come to Congress and he had a right to have his case examined by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee, doing justice to the statements made in his petition and to proofs from the reports have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have accommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a hill confidence in the servers have a recommended that much a server have a serve doing justice to the statements made in his petition and to proofs from other sources, have recommended that such a bill as is now before the House shall pass. I do not know, sir, why we should not give to this man and others arrearages of pensions as we have given under the general laws to many claimants. I do not know why a pension claim passed through Congress and which has become a law by the action of Congress and by the signature of the President of the United States should be debarred from arrearages.

Mr. BRAGG. I will answer the gentleman if he will permit me. Will he yield to me for a moment, and I will give him the reason why?

Mr. O'NEILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRAGG. A soldier who enlisted and served, served with reference to the pension laws of the Government. If he was able to make a case which would entitle him to a pension under the pension laws of the Government, he was entitled to and received pay under those laws from the time he received the disability for which those laws secured to him a pension. But if he claims to suffer from a disability not covered by those laws, and asks of us to pass a special act which will reach his case, he has no equity to ask us to make that act retroactive and to place him in the condition he would have been in had his disability been such as would have entitled him to a pension under the pension laws which he had a right to look to and expect relief from.

Mr. O'NEILL. This gentleman went into the Army just as others did to serve his country when his services were needed. He probably did not calculate at that time upon ever receiving a pension; he calculated only upon doing his duty to his Government, which he did, as I know of my own personal knowledge, for I know him very well.

A MEMBER. Were you with him?

Mr. O'NEILL. No, I was not with him. He was one of the men who went from the neighborhood where I lived, and I know he per-formed his full duty. He now comes to Congress and asks for a pension. If the Congress of the United States is going to say that in all sion. If the Congress of the United States is going to say that in all these special pension cases it will not give any arrearages of pension, well and good; but it must be recollected that we have by a general law granted arrearages of pensions. If we cannot agree to pass in a case of this kind a bill giving arrearages of pension to individuals, then why should we not pass a general law giving arrearages of pensions to all cases that have received special congressional action? The House has passed such a bill, but the Senate has not.

As I said before, I happen to know this gentleman, and know him very well. I know his gallantry while in the service, and I know that he served well and faithfully until he was discharged.

Mr. MORRISON. Why has he not been pensioned under the gen-

Mr. O'NEILL. I am coming to that. There are many claimants

Mr. O'NEILL. I am coming to that. There are many claimants for pensions who cannot get pensions under the general law.

Mr. MORRISON. I am asking about this particular case.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am coming to it. I will answer the gentleman in a general way and specifically. There are many persons who deserve pensions who under the general law cannot get them. We all know many such cases, and their only way to obtain relief is to come to Congress for special acts in their behalf. They cannot get pensions under the general law because, perhaps, of some technicality of decision in the Pension Office, properly made under the pension laws. Hence they come to Congress and stand upon just as good footing as they would if they could go before the Commissioner of Pensions and obtain a pension under the general law.

It has been the pleasure of Congress heretofore, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to grant relief in cases like this. I was saying that it should give some strength to cases like this. I was saying that it should give some strength to this bill, that two former Congresses passed just such a bill as this for this man.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. O'NEHLL. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman bases his argument in favor of this bill upon the ground that it has been recommended to and passed by other Houses.

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did it pass in other Houses with this arrearage feature in it!

feature in it?

Mr. O'NEILL. I cannot say.
Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman is in error about that.
Mr. O'NEILL. I do not know about that. If I said so, I take it back. All I know is that in two Houses a bill has been passed for the relief of this petitioner, and passed in the usual form I suppose.

Mr. COFFROTH. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman—
Mr. O'NEILL. Go on.
Mr. COFFROTH. I thought my colleague was through.
Mr. O'NEILL. I do not want to detain the House longer. I will only say that I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. MORRISON. I must have failed to make myself understood by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL.] This report sets out with the statement that this soldier was wounded while in the line of his duty in the service of the United States. If that is true, I want to know why he has not been pensioned under the gentrue, I want to know why he has not been pensioned under the gentrue, I want to know why he has not been pensioned under the general law. If this is a mere shadowy case and has no merits, I would like to know that. If this man was wounded while in the line of his duty, why has he not heretofore obtained a pension?

Mr. O'NEILL. I assume that it is true that he was wounded while in the line of his duty.

Mr. MORRISON. If this report is true, and this soldier was wounded in the line of his duty, why has he not been pensioned under the general law?

Mr. O'NEILL. He would not necessarily get a pension under the general law, because there might be some technical defect in the proof which was brought before the Commissioner.

Mr. MORRISON. What is that technicality? That is what I want

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that at the extra session of Congress that committee reported no bill containing a provision granting arrears of pensions, until the House unanimously passed the joint resolution granting arrears of pensions to every pensioner placed on the rolls by special act of Congress. The committee then took action and came to the conclusion that in obedience to the unanimous voice of this House, in all instances where the pensioner received his disability while in the service, they would grant to him arrears of pension from the date of his discharge, and thus place him on an equal footing with those who had been put on the rolls by authority of the Commissioner of Penhad been put on the folis by authority of the Commissioner of Pensions. Wherever the pensioner did not receive his injury while in the service, but asked for a pension on account of his long service to the country, we treated it as a mere gratuity on the part of the Government, and granted him a pension from the date of the passage of the bill. That is the reason why arrears of pensions are granted by a portion of these bills and are not granted by other bills.

Mr. BRAGG. What time did this soldier first make application for

Mr. COFFROTH. The first bill in his favor was passed in 1876.
Mr. BRAGG. Then will you grant him a pension for ten or fifteen years before he was sufficiently disabled to make claim?

Mr. COFFROTH. I know this; the proof was conclusive to the mind of the committee that he received this injury while in the service; and in two Congresses before this the Committee on Invalid Pensions said to this House that the injury was incurred in the line of duty, while this man was in the service of his country.

Mr. BRAGG. At what time did the permanent character of the disability appear?

Mr. COFFROTH. At the time of the injury—at the time his arm was broken. He was discharged from the Army at that time; and the disability has continued from that time to this.

Mr. BRAGG. Can the gentleman state why this man did not sooner make application for a pension?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir; because upon the rolls at the Surgeon-General's Office he was not reported as having been injured in the

Mr. BRAGG. That does not answer my question. When did he first make his application?

Mr. COFFROTH. To the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. COFFROTH. I do not remember that. We have the papers as they were presented to us, and when the select committee which has been ordered by the House to examine this subject shall make their report the House will see that thousands and thousands of cases have been rejected at the Pension Office on mere technicalities, though the evidence was sufficient to satisfy the mind of any lawyer or of any judge who ever sat on the bench. These applications have been rejected because not supported by the testimony of an officer in the service, or because the records did not show that the injury was received in the service. In this way most meritorious cases are kept off the pension-roll by these rulings of the Pension Bureau, although the men thus excluded deserve pensions equally with those who are on the rolls.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.] It will be remembered by the House that after the passage of the arrears law in the last Congress, (and I had much to do with the passage of that law,) when Congress, (and I had much to do with the passage of that law,) when the appropriation was made to meet the requirements of that law, an amendment was adopted in that appropriation act in which authority was conferred upon the Pension Office to grade the pensioners according to the disability as it might exist from time to time. So that a pensioner who is to-day receiving say $15 a month, and who may have been originally pensioned at $6 a month, afterward increased to $8, then to $12, then to $15, should be the basis of such

Now, I invite the special attention of members to this point: if in these cases we now fix a rate which the pensioner is to receive—say $15 a month as stated in this bill—and extend the pension back at that rate for fifteen years, we do not grade this pensioner as other pensioners are graded. There is hardly a single pensioner under the arrears law who received during the whole of his term as pensioner the amount which he received when the arrears law was passed. These pensions generally begin at a low figure, six, eight, or ten dollars, being increased gradually according to the extent of increase of disability from time to time. In this case the disability may be such that the pensioner may be entitled to-day to $15 a month; but if the pension had been granted to him at the time to which it is to date back—fifteen years ago—the amount might have been only $6, and gradually increased as disability increased. Therefore, I say that we cannot proceed fairly in allowing arrears in these special cases. How can we do it? We can do it by general law, allowing these pensioners to be graded with others, and we cannot do it otherwise. It is impossible to grade these cases here. Let the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin be adopted; then, by some general law hereafter to be adopted, let these pensioners be placed upon the same plane with other pensioners who receive arrears. But if we attempt to-day to say that this man shall not only receive $15 per month for his present disability, but that his pension shall run back at this rate for fifteen years, we make an odious discrimination and inflict a wrong upon the two or three hundred thousand of meritorious pensioners of the country. These pensions generally begin at a low figure, six, eight, or ten dol-

Mr. BROWNE. This whole question has been discussed at every night session we have had for the purpose of considering these pension cases. Certainly the Committee of the Whole is prepared to pass upon it. So far as I am personally concerned, I believe that all these bills ought to be passed without the arrearage clause. I do not propose now to give my reasons for thinking this would be best, except to say that those whom we now pension would be placed upon a perfect equality with those whom we now pension would be placed upon a perfect equality with those who have been pensioned by special acts of former Congresses. If they ought to have arrearages, and I believe they ought, it ought to be given by a general law that takes in those pensions which are granted now as well as those which have been pensioned by former Congresses. I hope, therefore, while I think the Pensions Committee is right in principle that they will consent to take up these cases and strike out this clause in all of these bills and then pass them as we can under a general law.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that I yielded to that the other night. I am willing to strike out the amount and let the pensions pass, and the rate to be fixed hereafter by the Pension Office, so as to pass the whole number of bills reported from the committee.

Mr. BROWNE. Allow me to suggest to my friend, who will bear witness that I have always been here to attend these sessions held for the passage of pensions, although I have but a single pension case upon the Calendar, that unless this bill be made in the form—I mean unless it be made to conform to that principle—there will be such opposition here to the passage of any of these bills, or to the passage of each one of them, that we will never get through with the Pension Calendar, Warrat to the these secretary through with the Pension Calendar. We want to take these cases up and pass them. We want to sit here and vote upon them, and not take up the entire time of each evening session with discussing these same questions over and over again, and I say unless we consent to that I apprehend we will not get through with many cases on the Calendar.

I hope, therefore, gentlemen will consent to vote now, and when we have passed upon it by a vote we may consider it a test vote and we have passed upon it by a vote we may consider it a test vote and not discuss the question any further.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let this bill pass, and make a test on some other case. I offer that by way of a compromise.

Mr. McMILLIN. I concur fully, Mr. Chairman, in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin pending before the committee, and in support of that and of the positions taken by the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state that The shed seasons the gentleman from Middle I will state the state of the gentleman from Middle I will be shed seasons the g tleman from Indiana, I will state that I have had occasion recently to tleman from Indiana, I will state that I have had occasion recently to investigate what has been saved to the Government of the United States by the rating of arrears of pensions as provided for by a subsequent law instead of giving full arrears back to the day of disability, as proposed in this bill, and as was inadvertently provided in the first arrears law—and I have ascertained that the saving to the people has been between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000.

Now, all will agree that with the onerous duties of the session upon us, with all of the business that is pending before Congress, and other duties crowding us, we cannot stop to make a full investigation and rate each case and determine satisfactorily whether the applicant should receive fifteen or seven dollars a month, nor what year the disability began. Much has been said in the course of this discussion about injustice that may be done. Now, there are two sides to that question. Do gentlemen remember that there are thousands of soldiers who fought in the armies for the Government who did not receive wounds, and who are now able-bodied, but poor as they can be, and have to pay the taxes which go to make up the amounts paid out by the Government in pensions? Surely these people deserve some consideration, and I insist that no injustice should be done to these any more than to the disabled and wounded soldiers who served in the war. Let us pass such bills as are meritorious without arrears, and where rating is to be done, let the rating be done hereafter by the proper tribunal that can do it satisfactorily.

proper tribunal that can do it satisfactorily.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman whether it has not been decided by the Commissioner of Pensions that in all cases where pensions are received by special acts the pensioners are not entitled to arrearages unless provided for by law, which has not been done by any act prior to this, except that which is now pending in the Sentata?

Mr. McMILLIN. If it has not been done, a sufficient answer is that justice can be done hereafter by a proper general law. It will not be claimed by any gentlemen on this floor that it cannot be done; neither will it be claimed by any person here that this is a proper mode of disposing of this question. What have we before us here? We have disposing of this question. What have we before us here? We have the anomaly of Congress, fifteen years after the disability occurred, going back blindly, groping in the dark, trying to discover what degree of disability existed, and whether it was such as to entitle a man to $15 a month, or whether after all these years have passed, during the dark of man to $15 a month, or whether after all these years have passed, during which time no application for pension was made, whether he is entitled to anything. We see the party come in here and make his claims for pension years after the disability occurred. That is the anomaly presented here. The present case is one of that character.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will tell the gentleman from Tennessee that there are thousands of the most meritorious cases on the pension-rolls that did not apply for their pensions until lately and because they have become so poor now that they were not able to sustain themselves. Thousands did not apply for pensions until after the hard times came on, when their wants and necessities forced them to do it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the proposed amendment will be adopted.

The saving will be some $2,700 to the people.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. I discovered that there are some two hundred pension bills on the Calendar undisposed of, and I should like to know if every one of these is to draw arrearages of pensions? If they are, the amount involved will be something over $400,000, as I perceive from making a hasty calculation.

Mr. COFFROTH. In the first place the gentleman's calculation is

Mr. COFFROTH. In the list place the genterman scholars extravagant. They do not average $1,000 a case.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the disability occurred during the service of the soldier it must go back at least fourteen years.

Mr. COFFROTH. Some of them are only allowed $4; some a quarter of a pension; others three-quarters of a pension. And in many cases the pensions start only from the passage of the act because they And in many do not come within the rule laid down by the committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. If that is the case it is time we put a stop to it.
Mr. COFFROTH. The House can put a stop to it. The committee is only carrying out what has been done by the House heretofore.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask one question of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions: whether in all these cases which have been before the Pension Bureau and rejected, the committee call on the Pension Bureau for the evidence on which it acted, and whether the same has been given?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes; always. Wherever the application was made and rejected by the Department we have brought all the evidence down and had it examined by a sub-committee who report it to the general committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is all right.

Mr. NEW. A single word will suffice for all I desire to say now on Mr. N.E.W. A single word will sumce for all I desire to say now on this subject. How I may vote at some other time if a general bill such as has been referred to should be presented for our consideration I cannot say until I see the provisions of that bill. But I am opposed to the amendment offered to this bill by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg.] Certain pension claims or bills are now upon the Calendar. They have been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions for our consideration, and we should not hesitate to act upon them. Already by the Forty-fifth Congress an act has been passed granting arrears of pensions to persons not more entitled, so far as we know or can know, than are the soldiers in whose behalf the bills now upon the Calendar have been favorably reported.

Already many thousands of dollars have been paid by the Government, and much more will yet be paid, under the law passed by the Forty-fifth Congress, in the way of arrears of pensions. That money has been disbursed and cannot be recalled, and should not be. It is true that if a general bill of the kind that has been referred to in a general way should hereafter be passed, possibly it could be so framed as to equalize, or nearly so, in some equitable way, the pensions paid to all, taking into account what may have already been paid as arrearages under the law passed by the Forty-fifth Congress. But if no such bill should pass, then it would follow, inasmuch as it has been held, as I have been informed, by the Pension Commissioner, that a soldier receiving a pension by one of these special acts can rethat a soldier receiving a pension by one of these special acts can receive no arrears unless the special act shall so provide—it would follow, I say, that the inequality, discrimination, and unfairness, of which we have heard so much, would be suffered in a manner grossly unjust by pensioners worthy in every way, but who were so unfortunate as to not have their names on the pension-rolls prior to the passage of the arrears of pension act of the Forty-fifth Congress, and to which I have already referred.

Mr. BROWNE. Will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE. What becomes of those unfortunate men who have

Mr. BROWNE. What becomes of those unfortunate men who have been pensioned by special acts of Congress during the last fifteen years, whose pensions simply began from the dates of the acts?

Mr. NEW. I will answer the gentleman's question. It will be far better and more commendable every way to give to the class of which the gentleman speaks arrears of pension also, than that those who are now being provided for by special law should not receive that which you have a freely and have the provided to the class of the c are now being provided for by special law should not receive that which you have so freely and bountifully given to others in the recent past, and which will be paid to others in the future, under the act of the last Congress. A general law, such as has been foreshadowed by gentlemen, may never be enacted or ever heard of again. If it shall be, then if the amount of money received by soldiers as pensioners can be equalized, can be graded, can be regulated in any way reasonably fair to all pensioners, well and good. We will see about that when the time comes. But, sir, the day may never arrive when any such action will be taken by Congress, and I submit, therefore, that the right thing to do, and to do without hesitation, in all meritorious cases, is to include arrears of pensions in the bills we may pass. No cases, is to include arrears of pensions in the bills we may pass. No other course, in my opinion, will be consistent in ourselves or just to the soldier. For one, I am not willing to be influenced in my action now by the expectation or prophecy of any one that at some future day we will so legislate as to make all our pension laws consistent and just and just.

Mr. LAPHAM. On this question I ask the attention of the House while I refer briefly to the substance of what I said on a former occasion. I am in favor of special legislation to relieve every person suf- ity, and will be again.

fering under a disability contracted in the service which is not provided for under the general laws granting pensions to soldiers. This claimant cannot bring his case within the present provisions of the pension laws. What does he need for his relief? Simply and only that we shall remove that disability and direct his name to be placed upon the pension-rolls. Then he goes, as all other claimants go for pensions, to the Pension Office, and receives his pay according to the provisions of law with reference to the degree of his disability. The feature of this bill to which I object is the manner in which we undertake to define the rate of pension which the applicant shall receive. I have never introduced a bill, I have never known a bill to pass Congress, until some have passed this House at the present session, which named any sum of money which the pensioner was to receive for his disability except in that class of cases where we grant an increase of pensions. There I conceive the amount of increase should be stated in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask consent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to make a statement, because it seems to me that this matter is misunderstood by the House. I had supposed that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. COFFROTH] would make a statement relative to a resolution which was adopted by that committee. After a full and fair discussion of this question, the committee determined to let the rating of pensions be made by the Pension Bureau; that was the unanimous action of the commit-That resolution passed the committee subsequent to the reporting of these bills which we are now considering. I have no doubt that any member of the committee will allow the bill he has reported to be amended so far as the rating of the pension is concerned. That portion of the bills which were reported before the action of the committee on that subject could be stricken out. The committee also determined, because it deemed it but right and proper, that the pension, as rated by the Pension Office, should date back to the time of the disability, as ascertained by the board of examining surgeons in the Pension Office.

Mr. LAPHAM. A word upon that point. I conserve that the content of the time of the disability of the pension of the disability of the pension of the disability.

Mr. LAPHAM. A word upon that point. I conceive that there is a propriety in allowing any person who may be debarred by the provisions of the general law, and who is placed on the pension-roll by action of Congress, to date his pension back to the period when his disability began. The difficulty is that this bill undertakes to fix the action of Congress, to date his pension back to the period when his disability began. The difficulty is that this bill undertakes to fix the rate of pension absolutely for the past and for the future. That is my objection to the bill. If the whole subject shall be remitted to the Pension Office, and arrears are to be granted as under the general law, then the difficulty, in my mind, will be removed.

We all know the practice of the Pension Office in regard to granting arrears of pensions. They do not grant arrears at the full rate of the pension which the pensioner draws at this time. I have a case in mind where the pensioner drew $8 a month for a period of time; yet when the arrears of pension bill became a law his widow was allowed only $3 per month arrears. The office said that that amount was all that they could allow by way of arrears under the tariff which they had adopted.

This bill proposes to give this man $15 per month from the time that he broke his arm until the present time. That is the difficulty about the bill. Let us remove the barrier which the general law places in his way; let us direct his name to be put on the pension-roll, which will entitle him to a pension; and then let him go to the Pension Office and draw his pension at the rate fixed by law.

Mr. WARNER. I was about to offer an amendment to the effect of the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] I move to amend by striking out of the bill all after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-five," in line 8. That will leave the rating of the pension to be made at the Pension Office, instead of being made by this bill.

Mr. WILLITS. How will the bill then read?

Mr. WILLITS. How will the bill then read?

Mr. WARNER. Let the bill be read as it will read if my amendment and that of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Brage] shall be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

* * * And he is hereby granted and allowed a pension to commence from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. WARNER. This question has been discussed heretofore on several occasions. I supposed that the Committee on Invalid Pen-sions had agreed to allow in all these cases the rating to be made at the Pension Office, as in other cases. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that our committee has adopted a resolution to that effect in all cases, but it was adopted after these bills which we are now con-

Mr. WARNER. It is so manifestly inequitable for us here to make the rate of pension absolute, that I will offer the amendment I have indicated as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from

Misconsin, [Mr. Bragg.]

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I would inquire if that makes the rating from the present time, or does it apply the rating to the arrears? This same amendment has been before this House three different times, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has occupied one-half of the time of the House for two evenings in discussing this very amendment. It was rejected each time by an overwhelming major-

Mr. WARNER. I do not ask the consent of the gentleman from

Mr. WARNER. I do not ask the consent of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. De La Matyre] to offer an amendment.

Mr. De La Matyre. And I do not ask the consent of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner] for what I shall say. I speak what I please and what is the fact. I want to know whether this amendment proposes to leave the entire rating with the Pension Office? If it does I am opposed to it. If it simply leaves the rating of the arrears of pensions to the Pension Office, then I am not opposed to it, and believe it will pass unanimously. If it designs to leave the rating of the pension from this time on I am opposed to it.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman is mistaken, I think, about any such amendment as this having been voted down. I think the record will show that the Committee of the Whole and the Pension Committee have accepted and acted upon the principle of this amend-ord will show that the Committee of the Whole and the Pension Committee have accepted and acted upon the principle of this amendment, that the entire rating shall be made at the Pension Office, and not fixed absolutely here.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I have a very distinct remembrance; for it was impressed upon us by three or four speeches each evening, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] repeating the same thing in substance every time, and repeating his amendment, in a little different form, perhaps, as many times. Those of us who were here remember that. member that

Mr. BRAGG. Is not $15 the full rate for permanent disability for a lieutenant?

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Certainly, and if we leave the rating of the arrears to the Pension Office, that will be right. If the disability has been a growing disability, it will be known whether at the present time it is a permanent disability or not. The question whether the disability has continued from the time of discharge until the present time, should be left to the Department. But the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House, one of the ablest and most thoroughly work-Pensions of this House, one of the ablest and most thoroughly working committees of this House, who have given their time exhaustively to these matters, as I have occasion to know, for I have been before them several times, know as well as Mr. Bentley or any other person can know whether these cases deserve a particular rate from the present time. As to the question of arrearages for the past, let that go to the Department. I hope the amendment in its present form will be voted down, and that the House will compromise by leaving the writed down, and that the House will compromise by leaving the arrearages to be rated by the Department.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty under which we labor seems to be that we are talking about everybody's case, and not the special case before the committee. This general question we have had up twice before; we have discussed it on two evenings, and voted upon it several times.

Now, what is the question in this case? I understand from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions statement of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that this applicant had his arm broken in the service. I would like to have somebody tell me whether a man disabled by having his arm broken is not entitled to just as much pension the first year afterward as the tenth year, if the disability has been permanent. If he is entitled to anything, he is entitled to the arrears.

Mr. COFFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Certainly.

Mr. COFFROTH. If this bill be passed with the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio in place of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, it will leave the fixing of the rate entirely in the discretion of the Pension Office. This man then, under the rating of that office, will be allowed up to this time the rate given to a second lieutenant, (I believe that is the position he occupied,) which will not be less than $15 a month; and then, probably from this time on he will get, according to the amendment, $24 a month. Hence I say that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is better than the original bill. Speaking for myself, as chairman of the Committee to adopt it.

adopt it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Under the amendment the pension will commence from the passage of the bill.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I understood my colleague [Mr. LAPHAM] to say that the Pension Office in its discretion has a certain tariff of rates which it applies to these soldiers. All I have to say is, the Lord have mercy on that soldier who goes before some of the examiners in

Mr. BRAGG. I claim to be just as good a friend of the soldier as any man who is talking in favor of the passage of these pension bills. I claim to speak for and represent a large soldier element; and I know that those gentlemen who are seeking the favor of the soldier element that those gentlemen who are seeking the favor of the soldier element are not working in the direction to get it when they are attempting to swamp the Treasury of the United States by voting pensions to every "bummer" who went into the service from 1861 to 1865.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Is this man a "bummer?"

Mr. BRAGG. The arrearages of pension act has brought to the Pension Office over one hundred thousand, nearer two hundred thousand, claimants, who never dreamed that they were entitled to pensions. These claims come in at the rate of from five thousand to seven thousand a month; they are brought there simply by the operation of the and a month; they are brought there simply by the operation of the arrearage act. We by that act and by the recognition of these claims are simply demonstrating that every man who was in the northern Army ought to be pensioned, whether he did service or not, whether he incurred disability or not. If they cannot be pensioned under the pension laws, that same army of two kundred thousand will turn their attention to this House and "snow us under," until the amount which we shall have to pay annually for the support of the pension list of this Government will represent a greater capital than the national debt. Now there must be an end to this; and the country is prepared to call a halt. Our pension laws are liberal; we pay greater amounts of pension than any other country. We are liberal to every branch of the service.

Mr. O'NELLL. Will the gentlemen appears a question?

Mr. O'NEILL. Will the gentleman answer a question?
Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.
Mr. O'NEILL. I know very well the patriotism of the gentleman; and I would like to ask him this question—whether he considers that these pensions are favors to these men whose services have been of such signal advantage to the country. Are they not rather a duty and a debt due by this Government to men who came forward to save the Government from destruction?

the Government from destruction?

Mr. BRAGG. I will answer the gentleman. In regard to every soldier entitled to a pension under the pension laws, the pension is a debt which the Government owes him; but as to every pension we pass by special act, it is a gift to the man who receives it.

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, we have the cases of active, able-bodied men, who for sixteen years have discharged all of the services that their station in life required of them for their support, discover now, after the expiration of sixteen years from the time that the service was the expiration of sixteen years from the time that the service was performed, that they are suffering from the diarrhea contracted in the service, while their towns-people, knowing they receive pensions from the Government, and knowing for all this time they have been in good health, laugh and point at them as they pass as pensioned soldiers who have some secret disease not visible to the eye, but who have been able by some means or other to get around a congressional committee, or impose upon it in some way so as to secure a pension.

Mr. O'NEILL. That may apply to many cases, but I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not know that many are to-day applying for pensions who never dreamed five years ago that they would be required to ask pensions from the Government—men who were in fairly good circumstances at that time, and did not feel it necessary to get this little pittance for the service that they rendered during the war? I ask him if he does not know that that is the reason there war? I ask him it he does not know that that is the reason there are so many making applications now?

Mr. BRAGG. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in return if these men are suffering from total disability how it happens that they have only lately discovered it?

Mr. O'NEILL. It is not a question as to why they did not discover it. It is a question now of absolute necessity with them. In thought sands of instances applications are made for pensions where men were disabled during the war but did not feel compelled to make applicadisabled during the war but did not feel compelled to make application, being able heretofore to support themselves.

Mr. BRAGG. If we are to pension every man in want, every man who is needy, then of course there is an end of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who refers to the towns-people laughing at and ridiculing these pensioners, if those pensions were granted by act of Congress or whether they have been given by the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BRAGG. Some on testimony manufactured and imposed upon the Pension Bureau, and some on testimony manufactured and imposed upon congressional committees.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then let me ask another question in referossed upon congressional committees.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then let me ask another question in reference to these "bummers" the gentleman is pleased to refer to who have been so successful in imposing upon somebody. I wish to ask the gentleman if he believes the Committee on Invalid Pensions, consisting of fifteen members, is not competent to examine for themselves all the evidence that is brought before them in support of these cases? And if he does not believe that committee is more competent than the closure of Mr. Pentlevic burgers? than the clerks of Mr. Bentley's bureau?

Mr. BRAGG. I consider them entirely competent to exercise their own judgment and report such bills as they see proper to this body, and it is entirely competent for every member of this House to state his views on the bills and vote as he considers proper when they are reported.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. BRAGG. Well, I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. COFFROTH. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Leamy, the applicant in this case, was a "bummer?"

Mr. BRAGG. I know this, that if Mr. Leamy broke his arm—

Mr. BRAGG. I have not stated that he was a bummer.
Mr. COFFROTH. Answer my question.
Mr. BRAGG. I have not stated that he was a bummer.
Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman has referred to the "bummers" who come in here at this late date making applications for pensions.
Mr. BRAGG. I have stated that there are many applications made

Mr. BRAGG. I have stated that there are many applications made which come from men who never rendered any service whatever to the Government, and who have only discovered at this late day that there is a possibility of imposing upon somebody to get a pension.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then you take the whole line—

Mr. BRAGG. I will take this case to which you refer as a representative man, and I will ask the Pension Committee to answer me this, whether they are willing to say that a soldier is entitled to draw a pension for total disability who broke his arm in the year 1865 and never discovered it until 1875—ten years after?

Mr. COFFROTH. There are thousands of cases, as I have said to the gentleman, where the application was not made because the party did not need the pension until now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to say in justice to the Committee on Invalid Pensions

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say further to the gentleman from Wisconsin that within my own knowledge since I have been chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and from the testimony that has been adduced before the special committee investigating the subject, that there are thousands of applicants for pensions today who would not call upon the Government for support at all if it were not for the distress that has come upon them and because they need support from the Government that they defended when they were strong and vigorous men. These men have lived without support as long as they were able, and many of them are the most honorable men who were in the service. Mr. BRAGG. In reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I desire to say that if the committee expect me to support a report upon the theory that they have examined the case so that their opinions should govern this House, I would like to know whether that committee, after having made the examination, can state when it was that this man first applied for his pension and why it was not granted? When I find the committee not able to state when the application was made, I conclude they have made a report that somebody fixed up for them.

[Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. I want to make one suggestion—
Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman does not state any reason for objecting to this case except his usual mode of warfare against these pension cases. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state in justice to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that this House has dumped upon them some three thousand pension bills. They have proceed with the aid of three or four extra clerks to sort these out, tabulate them, sift the evidence in each case, and so far have succeeded in them, sift the evidence in each case, and so far have succeeded in getting through with only about one hundred and fifty cases, which they have reported to the House, and which are now on the Calendar. Those in which the evidence is deemed insufficient are being laid aside, or rather I should say those in which the evidence is not thorough and complete. Those, I say, are laid aside for future examination, the committee deeming it wise to give their attention first to those cases which the evidence was sufficient to warrant a favorable report-those presenting prima facie cases, and leaving the others for subsequent action, or, in some cases, on the evidence presented, as not being worthy of consideration.

I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that the Commissioner of Pensions came before the Committee on Invalid Pensions and admitted that in many and many a case that had passed this House he would have granted the pension himself if the papers had gone before him, but stated that he is supplied with an insufficient number of employes and clerks to examine these cases, and he himself has not the time to examine the evidence.

I state further that some of the most interesting and valid cases presented to the committee are cases which have been thrown out of the Pension Office unfairly on technical theories raised by physicians. If we have the fortune to reach the cases reported by myself, there are some of them to which I may point as samples of the management of that office.

I would say in conclusion that I do not think this House is acting justly by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in discussing the general principles of the pension laws instead of dealing with the particular cases. If any case is presented that does not meet the views of the House, the simplest method to deal with it is to vote it down. But those that have merits and are good cases should be passed. I believe the committee would accept the amendment which has been offered, that the rate should be fixed by the Pension Office.

Mr. WARNER. Does the gentleman mean the entire rating?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I mean the rating, not the time; the amount to be allowed for the disability under the general law, the provision being that this man shall be put on the pension-roll from such and such a date.

Mr. WARNER. The same as all others who are granted pensions through the Pension Office?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. That is right.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Illinois propounded to me the question whether or no the Committee on Invalid Pensions, consisting of fifteen members of this House were not as competent to hear ing of fifteen members of this House, were not as competent to hear and determine these cases as Mr. Bentley's clerks. I now understand the gentleman to state the Committee on Invalid Pensions has four clerks, and that it is they who examine the evidence and prepare

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I stated that, owing to the amount of business and the number of bills before the committee, we had got three additional clerks, four in all, who assisted in hunting up evidence, tabulating it, making an abstract, and presenting it for consideration.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, do you not know that before and since the research of the arrest research where are present whose business it is passage of the arrearages act there are persons whose business it is to send out a printed circular with questions to be asked, all over the country, to soldiers they may hear of, who are requested to answer the questions and then return the papers to them here; so that they may draw affidavits and then direct the parties to come to Congress with the evidence prepared by them?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I presume such a thing is done. And I will say further that on an intimation from Mr. Bentley, the Commissioner of Pensions, who gave to the committee an idea of the standing and character of men engaged in business of this kind, the committee adopted a resolution that none of the papers from the Pension Office should in any instance be shown to those parties.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not desire to reflect on anybody engaged in the business by my question. I have asked the question because I have seen those circulars scattered all through the West.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am not aware of evidence from that source coming before the Committee on Invalid Pensions in a single

Mr. FRYE. I want to make one suggestion, which, if acted upon, will, I think, settle this whole thing. We have spent three nights on these pension bills, and nothing practical has been done. Now, down in the Botanical Garden there is a curious plant known as the down in the Botanical Garden there is a curious plant known as the mother-in-law plant, the perfume of which paralyzes the tongue and makes dumb. If the chairman of the Pension Committee will send down to the Botanical Garden and get some of that mother-in-law plant the business will get along. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATHERTON. I suggest the gentlemen from Maine should take the first dose. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CALDWELL. I regret exceedingly to differ with any gentleman on either side of the House as to the policy to be pursued in regard to these pension bills. As I introduced into the Committee on Invalid Pensions the resolution which fixed the date to be placed in these bills it is right I should state the reasons for that resolution. Unlike some of the gentlemen who have spoken to-night I voted against the arrearages of pension act. I did so because I thought it was passed. Now, will the American Congress say to these soldiers whose claims have been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions that the Commissioner of Pensions may exercise more control over the money Commissioner of Pensions may exercise more control over the money in the Treasury than the representatives of the people? Is it right that the Commissioner of Pensions shall grant arrears of pensions for ten or fifteen years, but when the claim is brought to this House and granted by Congress the date shall be fixed from the passage of the granted by Congress the date shall be fixed from the passage of the act. Now, that is not fair. I stand here as one of the confederate brigadiers, so much abused by the other side of the House and by the press representing republican sentiment in the country; and I want to say that it is the purpose of the four or five confederates upon this Committee of Invalid Pensions to carry out in good faith the pension laws of this country as they have been passed by the representatives of the people. [Applause.]

Now, I know full well that rejections of pension claims have been made by the Commissioner of Pensions, and those rejections cannot be sustained either by the law or by any principle of centix that has made by the Commissioner of rensions, and those rejections cannot be sustained either by the law or by any principle of equity that has been taught any lawyer in this House. I can point to a number of such cases; I have myself examined some of them. I do not pretend to have any special knowledge about the merits of the particular case now before the House. But I will say to gentlemen on both sides of this House that if they want to make some meritorious amendment in pension laws I would advise them to strike out that section which makes a distinction between an officer and a private sciliar for the in pension laws I would advise them to strike out that section which makes a distinction between an officer and a private soldier for the same kind of disability. There is a section of the pension law which gives a lieutenant-colonel $30 a month for total disability, while the private soldier receives for the very same character of disability the miserable pittance of $8 per month. Now, I confess that my sympathy has been with the majority of these applicants here because they were private soldiers. I know that the officers have been enabled to draw around them such circumstances and to bring such proof before the Pension Office as would get their claims through, when one-half of the private soldiers presenting their claims could not get them passed.

not get them passed.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. CALDWELL. Certainly.
Mr. THOMAS. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that the Mr. THOMAS. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that the law with reference to pensioning officers has not been changed since the beginning of the war, while the law in regard to enlisted men has been so changed that a private soldier receives $72 a month for a total disability caused by the loss of both eyes, both arms, or both legs? The officer has to draw his pension according to the law as it existed at the beginning of the war. There never has been any change in the law in reference to officers, and they cannot draw a pension in proportion to the rank they held in the Army.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not care how far that law may reach back. It is wrong; it is in violation of the fundamental principle upon which this Government rests, which is the equality of all the people of this country.

of this country.

I defy any man in this House or elsewhere to give me any sound reason why two men entering the Army, both born in the same town, perhaps educated in the same college, and stricken down upon the same battle-field, yet because one of them was fortunate enough to hold the commission of lieutenant-colonel when he was discharged that he should receive $30 a month for the period of his life, while the man who carried the knapsack, and I presume did the fighting, can receive but $8 a month.

Mr. BRAGG. If the gentleman desires any good reason I will tell

Mr. CALDWELL. Well, tell me.
Mr. BRAGG. It is because that when the man accepted his commission as lieutenant-colonel and entered into the service of the Government the Government contracted to give him that rate of pension; and when the man entered the service as a private the Government and when the man entered the service as a private the Government contracted to pay him the rate of pension which he receives. It is simply carrying out the contract of the Government.

Mr. CALDWELL. My proposition is this: as I said to the gentleman on the other side of the Chamber who interrupted me, [Mr. Thomas,] if that is the contract, then it is wrong. It is violative of the very principle upon which this Government rests, the equality of all. There can be no good reason given why this distinction should be made, when both of these parties have been discharged from the service disabled for life and dependent upon the benefaction of the Government. Yet the Government will generously bestow $30 a month on the one and the miserable pittance of $8 a month on the other.

Mr. ATHERTON. And that same distinction extends to their widows and children.

ows and children.

Yes; it extends to their widows and children. Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire very much to vote upon these claims for pensions; and as we have discussed everything to-night except the pension bills on the Calendar, I ask that we now proceed except the pension bills on the Calendar, I ask that we now proceed to consider and vote upon them.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will detain the House but a moment. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen back to the question now in hand. If the amendments which have been offered to the pending bill shall be adopted, the bill will be left in such a condition that no member of this House will desire to vote for it, for the applicant will not be able to receive the benefit of the general pension law.

Now, in order to remove the confusion and difficulty arising from that I desire to offer a substitute for the original bill and the amend-that. I desire to offer a substitute for the original bill and the amendments, which substitute is in a form which the House has adopted and which provides that the pensioner shall receive a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. That provision is not in the bill before the House. I offer as a substitute for the pending bill and amendments that which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Leamy, formerly a second lieutenant of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry."

Mr. DE LA MATYR. If passed in this form, the bill leaves the whole question with Mr. Bentley. We all know what would be the result. I had a conversation with him; and he said that a bill passed in this form amounts to scarcely anything.

A MEMBER. It is worth nothing.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. No; it does not amount to a row of pins.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw my amendment in order that the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Prescort] may be

The question being taken on the substitute proposed by Mr. Prescott, there were—ayes 69, noes 31.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call for tellers. This substitute does not amount to anything.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask as a special favor that House bill No. 2303 may be taken from the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I object.

CAROLINE BOLL.

The next pension bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3099)

The next pension bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. K. No. 3099) granting a pension to Caroline Boll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Boll, mother of Lonis Boll, deceased, late a private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month, commencing on the 30th day of August, 1862, the date of the son's death.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as Ioliows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Caroline Boll, mother of Louis Boll, deceased, praying for a pension, report:

That Louis Boll, the son of claimant, was enrolled on the 12th day of November, 1861, in Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years, and was regularly mustered into the service of the United States as a private on the 27th day of November, 1861, at Annapolis, Maryland, in Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve for three years or during the war, and was killed in action at Bull Run, Virginia, on the 30th day of August, 1862.

This claim was originally filed at the Pension Office on the 25th day of January, 1873, and was, after a full compliance with all the requirements of that office, rejected upon a final hearing; cause, non-dependence. An appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior, who, however, sustained the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Your committee consider, after a careful investigation of all the evidence in the case, that the decision of the Pension Bureau was erroneous, in that it was based entirely upon a letter from the postmistress at Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, Mrs.

Jane Righter, whose statement was not made under oath, ignoring thereby the sworn statements (testimony) of sixteen unimpeachable and disinterested citizens of Mauch Chunk, who testify to claimant's dependency on account of old age and physical disability of husband. This postmistress, in her reply to Department letter of June 14, 1873, requesting her to forward an opinion relative to husband's ability to support his family by manual labor, and whether the son ever rendered the claimant any material aid, says:

"Upon inquiry have learned from a reliable source that Joseph Boll, the father of the said Louis Boll, has worked at Packerton, about two miles from this place, for the past ten or twelve years. Has supported his family without the assistance of the son, and is therefore not entitled to a pension. Mrs. Caroline Boll, is the wife of Joseph Boll."

The affidavits of Dr. Ludwig Flentje, (three in number,) family physician, clearly and unmistakably establish the physical disability of husband, as does also the certificate of N. B. Reber, M. D., medical examiner for Pension Bureau, who, in his report to the Pension Office, dated Lehighton, Carbon County, Pennsylvania, July 2, 1873, says:

"The said Joseph Boll, husband of Caroline Boll, who claims a pension as dependent mother of Louis Boll, is, and has been, physically incapacitated for the support of himself and family. Have had no acquaintance with Mr. Boll until at this examination. I find him suffering with salt-rheum on left leg with varicoseveins. The limb is very much atrophied. Apparently, his limb may have been affected some eight or ten years. He is now totally disabled, hardly able to walk, and that but a very short distance. His disability is probably permanent, since but very, very few cases of salt-rheum, complicated with varicose veins, are currable."

It is further shown in evidence that previous to deceased's entry into the service but very, very new cases of sample compositions to deceased's entry into the service of the United States he contributed the entire proceeds of his earnings to the support of his parents, being then not quite seventeen years of age; and that while in the service, it is shown by the affidavit of his captain, E. H. Rauch, that he, the deceased, on three or four occasions sent the greater part of his pay to his parents for their support. This fact is also corroborated by the sworn statements submitted in evidence by some of his comrades in the company of which he was a member. A letter from the deceased to his parents, inclosing funds for their sole use, is also in evidence.

ted in evidence by some of many learnes, inclosing funds for their sole use, is also in evidence.

Now, in view of the foregoing, and in addition thereto the affidavits of father and mother, in answer to the interrogatories of the Pension Office, setting forth their dependence on their son, and the manner in which he contributed to their support, all of which show conclusively their dependence upon and aid from that source, we are of the opinion that the mother is entitled to a pension at the rate of $8 permonth from the 30th day of August, 1862, the date of the death of her only son and support, and accordingly report a bill for that purpose and recommend its passage.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline Boll, mother of Louis Boll, deceased, late a private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. NEW. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Prescort] a question. Does he understand that the phraseology "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" will give to the person in whose favor a bill is passed by Congress the benefit of existing laws upon the subject of arrearages of pension?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am advised that it will; yet right in front of me a centleman says it will not, while in the rear of me my colleague.

me a gentleman says it will not, while in the rear of me my colleague [Mr. Lapham] says that it will.

Mr. NEW. The impression, so far as I could observe, among members when the substitute of the gentleman from New York to a former bill was voted on, was, that the language which I have quoted would give to the pensioner the benefit of all existing laws on the subject of arrearages of pensions. But I have just been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the Commis-chairman of the Committee on invalid Pensions that the Commissioner has held that those words will not give to those who are pensioners by special acts the advantage of the laws referred to. We should make no mistake in this particular.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Commissioner of Pensions has decided that under bills heretofore passed limiting the pension from and after the passage of the act the Pension Office cannot go back and allow arrears; but that a bill passed in this form with the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" covers arrears.

Mr. NEW. Will the gentleman permit me to inquire—not by way.

Mr. NEW. Will the gentleman permit me to inquire—not by way of cross-examination at all—the nature of the evidence which he has, whether founded on personal knowledge or not, that the Commissioner of Pensions so holds?

Mr. LAPHAM. The Commissioner informed me that the bills here-missioner of Pensions so holds?

Mr. LAPHAM. The Commissioner informed me that the bills heretofore passed have contained a provision expressly limiting the pension to take effect from and after the passage of the act. Upon such language the Commissioner's construction was of course proper. By this bill we propose to put the person on the pension-roll "subject to the provisions"—that is all the provisions—"of the pension laws."

Mr. PRESCOTT. I understand it to be the fact also that all these claims arose prior to the passage of the laws for arrears of pension; and by a bill in this form the only question as to whether or not these parties would be entitled to arrears of pension will be removed.

Mr. NEW. I am not free from doubt as to what the Commissioner of Pensions will hold on this point. My own judgment, however, is that the language "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," if included in any special bill now passed, would give the pensioner the benefit of all laws now in force upon that subject.

Mr. PRESCOTT. That is what I understand.

Mr. NEW. I have heard that the Commissioner held otherwise.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Not upon a bill drawn in this form.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have not intruded upon the time of the committee during this discussion. I merely wish now to state that I have at the present time in my possession a statement from the Pension Bureau, in full, of a case which meets the point made by the gentleman from New York, and the decision is one which covers all cases of this character. The number of this case I have in my possession, and any gentleman can investigate the case for himself. The decision to which I refer is set forth in writing, that in my possession, and any gentleman can investigate the case for himself. The decision to which I refer is set forth in writing, that in all cases where the pension is granted by a special act of Congress (not under a general act) the bill allowing arrearages of pensions does not touch the case, and consequently the pensioner could not receive arrearages of pensions. Now, if this fixed the time, (that it is to take effect from and after its passage,) the Commissioner of Pensions, I insist, would be compelled to go back on his decision already made—a decision that I believe is in accordance with law. I have stated that I can give the number of the case in which this decision was made. It was a case from my own State which I had personal charge of, and I spoke of it, therefore, from personal knowledge.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the committee had better rise to get some authority on this question, as there seems to be considerable doubt in reference to it.

doubt in reference to it.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I trust this bill will be passed before the com-

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I wish to ask whether there is any such thing known in the law as a "pension-roll," on which it is proposed to put these names. Is there anything else other than a mere list kept at the Pension Office for the convenience of the office?

Now, I have this suggestion to make. I have no doubt that the amendment can be put in shape so that it will accomplish the object of my colleague from New York; and it should be put in all of these

I desire to move, therefore, that this bill, with all of the other bills down to and including No. 3568 on this Calendar, be referred back to the Committee on Pensions with instructions to insert that amendment in each one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain that motion at this time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STONE. I hope we will not vote upon this bill at this time. I Mr. STONE. I hope we will not vote upon this bill at this time. I am sure that there is some misapprehension as to the ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions on this point. I examined a few moments ago the cases passed in the third session of the Forty-third Congress, and I have observed that on the list of pension bills passed at that time fully one-half of them provide that the pensioner shall be placed on the rolls subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, without fixing any date whatever. And yet the Commissioner of Pensions has decided, and his decision has been sustained by the Attorney General that in page of these cases can arrange of pensions torney-General, that in none of these cases can arrearages of pensions be paid. I should be glad to hear a ruling of the Department on this

Mr. NEW. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question— if he remembers whether these bills contain the words "from and if he remembers whether these bills contain the words "from and after the passage," &c. ?

Mr. STONE. Many of them do and many do not. If any gentleman will examine the acts passed in the third session of the Fortythird Congress he will see the point to which I refer. On referring to them myself I found what I have stated, and I hope the committee will rise until we can get some definite information in reference to this matter. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BAKER. I wish to propose an amendment, to insert, after the words "pension laws," in the substitute presented by the gentleman from New York, the words "including arrears of pensions."

Then it will read:

Then it will read:

Subject to the limitations of the pension laws, including arrears, &c.

Subject to the limitations of the pension laws, including arrears, &c.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I was going to make this suggestion to the committee, that if this bill should pass as the last was passed, and if all of these bills should be passed as it is proposed to pass them, and it should be found on inquiry that the Commissioner of Pensions has ruled and will adhere to the ruling that this does not cover the arrears of pensions, then we can offer a general resolution giving further construction, which would cover all of these cases.

Mr. COFFROTH. That has been done already.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana on condition that it be inserted in the other bills that have been passed.

have been passed.
Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "laws" insert the words "including arrears of pension act."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 25.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.
Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to withdraw his amendment.
Mr. DE LA MATYR. I move that the committee rise. If gentlemen desire to fool away the evening let us rise.
Mr. COFFROTH. As there appears to be a difference of opinion shout the construction to be given to these hills by the Commissioner.

about the construction to be given to these bills by the Commissioner of Pensions, I think it would be proper for the committee to rise, in order to get his construction of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is now pending.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that there are some bills here to which there can be no objection. For instance, there is one of which I have charge which does not ask for arrears of pension at all. I simply ask that my man be put upon the rolls subject to the limitations of the pension laws. Let that be taken up and the report read, and I pledge you I will not trouble you with any speech. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have one or two bills in the same condition.

Mr. BROWNE. My man is paralyzed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And my man is in a deplorable condition.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the House to hear me just a single moment. It is not often I ask the House to hear me upon any subject that I have any personal interest in. I have a personal interest here in this respect, that I represent the individual for whom I now speak. I wish to state, and the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will bear me out, that the bill which ought to come next on the Calendar to that which has just been considered is the bill (H. R. No. Calendar to that which has just been considered is the bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting an increase of pension to Richardson K. Baird. By some means it has lost its place on the Calendar, and has been put back one hundred and seventy-five cases lower down. I do not know how it has happened. I suppose it has been by a mere accident. I ask that the House take that case up and act upon it. This man Baird is now a pensioner for partial deafness, drawing $4 a month. He has made application for an increase of pension on account of increased deafness, and a bill granting it has been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and is now, as I have stated, on the Calendar. Calendar.

Mr. LAPHAM. Does it give arrears?
Mr. ATKINS. There are no arrears at all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to taking up the bill indicated by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BAILEY. I object.
Mr. DE LA MATYR. I insist on my motion that the committee rise. There seems to be no use in our remaining here. If there was, would stay.

Mr. ATKINS. Who objected to my request?
Mr. BAILEY. I did.
Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] made a request in favor of a man who was completely paralyzed. Let us take up that bill.

Mr. BROWNE. Why should we not pass some bills to which there Mr. BROWNE. Why should we not pass some bills to which there can be no objection. If gentlemen are in earnest and wish to do something, why not take up cases that are in no respect vulnerable?

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I will withdraw my motion if anything can be done; but I am tired of this wrangling.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. No. 591) granting a pension to Eliza K. Ashley. It is a case to which there can be no objection.

no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAILEY] withdraws his objection to taking up the bill I indicated.

Mr. BAILEY. I do. I made the objection under a misapprehension.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have been a member of Congress for three years, and have never asked a favor from the House before. I ask the House or to give unanimous consent to take up the bill I have mentioned and put it on its passage.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the bill now pending, (H. R. No. 3099,) granting a pension to Caroline Boll, be passed over, in order that the bills which gentlemen have indicated may be reached.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3099) was passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

RICHARDSON K. BAIRD.

Mr. ATKINS. I call up the bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting increase of pension to Richardson K. Baird. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $13 per month, the name of Richardson K. Baird, late a private in Company E, Second Ohio Cavalry.

The report was read, as follows:

This is a case where the petitioner, Richardson K. Baird, late a private in Company E, Second Ohio Cavalry, now drawing a pension of $4 per month for partial deafness in both ears, asks an increase on the ground that his deafness has increased to such an extent that it incapacitates him from performing the usual busily ness of life. That he is suffering from almost total deafness in both ears is verified by the testimony of three examining boards of surgeons, by the postmaster of his town, and by numerous citizens of his neighborhood. In a review of this case the Commissioner of Pensions says: "It appears from the evidence that he is suffering from severe deafness of both eass, and in view of the extent to which partial deafness interferes with the ability to obtain labor and the ability to perform certain kinds of labor, it appears to the Department that the law will justify the granting of a higher rate of pension for severe deafness than that now allowed. In view of all this testimony, and all things considered in a review of this case, your committee report favorably, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. RPAGG. That bill proposes to grant a pension of $13 a month

Mr. BRAGG. That bill proposes to grant a pension of $13 a month, and I must object to it.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I will move to amend, so as to make it $8 a month.

Mr. BRAGG. I will not object to that.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZA K. ASHLEY.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask that House bill No. 591, for the relief of Eliza K. Ashley, be now taken up.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of the law now in force, the name of Eliza K. Ashley, widow of John P. Ashley, deceased, late a private in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 591) granting a pension to Eliza K. Ashley, widow of John P. Ashley, deceased, late a private in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to submit the following report:

The committee find that Eliza K. Ashley and John P. Ashley were legally married in the county of Hopkins and State of Kentucky, as appears of record in said county court clerk's office. That on the 12th day of September, 1864, John P. Ashley was regularly enrolled as a private in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky, Cavalry Volunteers; that he was taken sick at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, about October 27, 1864, having performed active service from the date of his illness, and that he died on the 12th of November, 1864, from the effects of fever and flux, a disease contracted in the service of the United States, and that he was a sound and healthy man when he entered said service.

The application of Mrs. Ashley to be placed on the pension-roll was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, on the ground that there was no record of her husband's services at the War Department as a member of Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteers, and that the Adjutant-General United States Army refused to amend the records of his office unless she furnished the enlistment papers of said soldier.

to amend the records of his office unless she furnished the enlistment papers of said soldier.

Your committee find that said enlistment papers were destroyed or lost while the Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteers were stationed at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and after the death of John P. Ashley, as appears by the sworn statement of Captain James C. Wilson, late captain of Company B, and abundant proof of the enlistment, service, and death of said John P. Ashley is furnished by the sworn statements of said James C. Wilson, James T. Utterback, S. Southard, R. B. Utterback, Henry C. Ashley, Willis Revor, and Jeff. H. Ashley, all of whom served in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers.

Your committee further find that Mrs. Ashley is in needy circumstances; and at the time of John P. Ashley's death was left with four small children without means for their support, and that she has not since remarried.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill H. R. 591, and that the name of Eliza K. Ashley be placed on the pension-roll at $8 per month, subject to existing pension laws.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to say that I am personnel with the Captain Wilson referred to in this report.

Mr. BROWNE. That is all right; do not make a speech.

Mr. WARNER. It seems to me that the same amendment should

Mr. McKENZIE. This bill does not provide for arrears of pension, and grants but $8 a month.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ABRAM F. FARRAR.

Mr. BROWNE. I now ask that House bill No. 2303, granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar, be taken up.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Abram F. Farrar, late first lieutenant Company F. Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States. The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2303) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar, late first lieutenant of Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, would respectfully report:

The claimant alleges that in July, 1862, while first lieutenant of Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, after a hard and fatiguing forced march, he was attacked by typhoid fever; that the attack was severe and protracted; that constantly, from that sickness forward, while in the service and subsequent to his resignation in July, 1864, he was afflicted with severe pains in his sides and back, and particularly in the region of the spine; that these pains grew constantly worse, until April, 1871, when he was totally paralyzed from his waist down.

A pension was refused, because: 1. The record of the War Department did not show he had an attack of typhoid fever, although the record showed him absent sick. 2. He did not show hospital or other treatment subsequent to his sickness and prior to his resignation. 3. That his resignation was not tendered because of his bad health. And, finally, because, in the opinion of the Commissioner, the testimony was not sufficient to show the existing paralysis to be due to the alleged attack of typhoid fever.

Your committee think the last-assigned reason for refusing the application for pension includes the others.

The evidence shows that Lieutenant Farrar entered the service in April, 1861, when but twenty-three years of age; that he had superb health and was of an unusually robust constitution; that he had never been sick or in any wise disabled; that his habits were temperate and unexceptionable, and that neither paralysis nor like disease had ever afflicted any of his family.

Colonel John C. Walker, who was then Lieutenant Farrar's commanding officer and now a physician of eminence, testifies as follows:

"When he entere

As to his continued indisposition from the attack of typhoid fever until he was stricken with paralysis, the evidence is briefly as follows:

Martin Igoe, quartermaster, says: "His (Farrar's) health never became vigorous again while he remained in the Army, and that he resigned because of it."

Captains O'Brien and McHugh say that he never recovered his health while in the service, and add:
"He was at last under the necessity of resigning, owing to great suffering from neuralgia through the sides and back."

Lieutenant John C. Hibbetts says:
"He never become vigorous again while he remained in the service. Further, from the time of his sickness constantly forward while he remained in the service, and after he resigned in July, 1864, he complained of suffering from pains in the sides and back."

Frank Cunningham, adjutant, says:

"His health never became vigorous again after his sickness."

Jane N. Ewing, mother of the claimant, says that—"When at home on furlough in January, 1864, Lieutenant Farrar complained of pains in his sides and back, which suffering he still complained of after his discharge from the Army."

MEDICAL EVIDENCE OF SICKNESS AND TREATMENT SUBSEQUENT TO HIS RESIGNATION.

Dr. S. M. Linton, a physician of thirty-seven years' standing, a graduate of the Indiana College of Physicians and Surgeons, says:

"I treated him (Farrar) at Columbus, Indiana, in the years 1864 and 1865. He complained of pains in the back in the region of the spine. I attributed his condition to exposure and sickness suffered while in the Army, and it is my present opinion that his helpless condition and ailments were caused by sickness and exposure in the Army." exposure in the Army."

Dr. R. L. Metcalf, Saint Louis, Missouri, a physician of thirty years' practice, says:

"I treated him professionally in the years 1867, 1868, and 1869. He complained of great suffering with pains in his back in the region of the spine. Treatment gave only temporary relief. I at the time attributed his ailment to extreme exposure and sickness suffered while in the Army. Am satisfied, from my experience and what I know personally of the case, that his present helpless condition was caused by such exposure and sickness."

Hon. Benjamin Rush Plumley, who kept a hotel on the ocean beach at Galveston,

Hon. Benjamin Rush Flumley, who kepts are some actions as a says:

"In the early part of the year 1870—perhaps in January—he met Lieutenant Farrar, who had recently arrived in Galveston. He walked with a cane, and seemed to be an invalid. Witness became intimate with Farrar and watched the progress of his disease. He complained of intense pains in his back and loins. Witness suggested blister treatment, and was informed that he had been systematically cupped without benefit. Farrar then attributed his condition to his exposure and sickness in the Army service. Early in the next spring he was stricken with total paralysis of the limbs below the waist."

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Dr. Isaac C. Walker, professor of diseases of the nervous system in the Medical College of Indiana, and who has treated Farrar since his paralysis, upon a hypothetical case embodying the above facts, gives it as his professional opinion that the paralysis is the result of exposure in the field and the attack of typhoid fever. Dr. D. R. Wallace, a graduate of the University of New York, a surgeon in the confederate army, and at present superintendent of the State lunatic asylum. Austin, Texas, treated Lieutenant Farrar subsequent to his paralysis and then had a history of the case. It was his conviction then and is now that Farrar's condition is attributable to his exposure in the Army.

To this medical testimony may be added that of Dr. John C. Walker, now assistant superintendent of the Indiana asylum for the insane, who was the colonel of Lieutenant Farrar's regiment, and whose evidence we have already given.

REPORT OF BOARD OF EXAMINING SURGEONS

REPORT OF BOARD OF EXAMINING SURGEONS.

Drs. Stanton and Tyler, of Washington, District of Columbia, examining surgeons, report Farrar's condition as follows:

"There is complete paralysis of lower extremities, with great impairment of sensation; the bladder and rectum can only be emptied by artificial aid, but has sometimes involuntary evacuations from bowels; tenderness on pressure overspinous process of second lumbar vertebra, with great diminution of tactile sensibility; has no use of lower extremities; obliged to use two crutches; muscles of legs soft and flabby; circulation in legs and feet much impaired. Says he is unable to dress himself except in certain positions, or to raise himself on his feet. He requires the regular aid and attendance of another person.

"Disability total and permanent."

To sum up briefly, this evidence shows that this officer went into the service in most robust health; that he had never been sick or in any way disabled; that his habits were temperate and unexceptionable; that there was no taint of paralysis or other nervous disease in his family; that while in the service he had an attack of typhoid fever or other sickness as the result of the hardships of a forced march; that he left the service in bad health, and was thereafter constantly under treatment; and that he is now, and has been for nine years, a hopeless, helpless paralytic. Your committee believe, from the evidence, that his present condition is due to the hardships and exposure of the service.

To the above the committee desire to add that the evidence shows that Lieutenant Farrar is in extremely indigent circumstances, indeed wholly without means and without relatives able to furnish him any support; that he has a wife dependent upon him; that, as shown by the medical examination, he requires the constant attendance of an assistant, and is not in a fit condition to be provided for in a soldiers' home. He was a faithful and deserving officer.

For the reasons stated your committee recommend the passage of the bill

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I now ask the committee to take up the bill-Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I shall object to any bill being taken up which is later on the Calendar than the bill which I have referred to; for it would be an injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.]
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If his bill is further down on the Calendar than mine, I must object to it.
Mr. WILSON. It will take but a few minutes. It is House bill

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I shall object if it is later on the Calendar than mine.

Mr. McLANE. I demand that the pension bills on the Calendar be taken up in their order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I desire to call up a bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I have a bill that I want to call up.
The CHAIRMAN. This proceeding is by unanimous consent.
Mr. TAYLOR. I shall object to taking bills up out of their order on the Calcudar.

Mr. WILSON. If the report in my case is read, gentlemen will see that a more meritorious case never came before Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a suggestion which I think will be acceptable to gentlemen on both sides. It is that the pension bills on the Calendar be taken up in their order, and if any one is objected to then that it be passed over, and the committee can proceed to consider those bills to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. WILSON. The Chair has recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen will give attention for a moment, the Chair will say that he will recognize gentlemen alternately on the opposite sides of the House.

Mr. McLANE. I object to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I object to any further consideration of pension bills except in their regular order upon the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I move that the House now rise.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Let us have a half an hour mor Let us have a half an hour more, if we can do anything with these bills.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise;

and upon a division there were—ayes 36, noes 26.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call for tellers.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require a quorum for the committee to rise. But the Chair will submit the question upon ordering tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

The motion that the committee rise was accordingly agreed to

The motion that the committee rise was accordingly agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. STEVENSON reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the pension bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills, some with and some without amendments.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no; not until we pass the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill reported from the committee without amendment.

ELIZA M. FRICK.

The title of the bill was "A bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting a pension to Eliza M. Frick."

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BRAGG. I hope that bill will not pass, and I think if gentlemen shall understand it it will not pass.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I made a motion that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to press that motion.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman cannot take the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] from the floor by that motion.

The SPEAKER protectors. The gentleman made the motion be-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman made the motion before the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] obtained the floor. The Chair did not submit the motion because he did not understand the gentleman to press it. He says now that he insists upon his motion, and the Chair will submit it to the House.

The question was taken upon the motion, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. This claimant is the wife of an officer who, it is claimed, died in 1861 from a disease contracted in the Mexican war. In 1874 she appears to have had granted to her (it must have been by special act of Congress) a pension from that time of $20 a month.

Mr. COFFROTH. I rise to a point of order. This bill has been discussed in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House. Is it

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time; and until the House shall cut off debate by ordering the previous question discussion is in order.

A MEMBER, (to Mr. COFFROTH.) Demand the previous question.

Mr. BRAGG. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has the floor, and is entitled to one hour under the rules.

Mr. BRAGG. We have had under discussion during a great many Congresses the propriety of passing a general law granting pensions to soldiers who served with our Army in Mexico. No bill of that kind has ever passed, though one, I believe, is now pending in the House.

This bill comes in here now, taking out a single case—
Mr. TALBOTT. I rise to a point of order. What is the bill now

Mr. TALBOTT. I rise to a point of order. What is the bill now pending before the House?

A MEMBER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. The bill pending before the House is a bill to grant a pension to Eliza M. Frick, widow of Captain Frick, who contracted in the Mexican war in 1846 a disease which resulted in his death in 1861. In 1874 a pension of $20 a month was granted to his widow. This bill proposes to give her a pension from the time of her husband's death till 1874, amounting to some $3,000 and more. In other words, it will establish a precedent for granting arrearages of pension to soldiers of the Mexican war to whom pensions may hereafter be granted. I do not think we are prepared just now to establish such a precedent, and for that reason I oppose the bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the general theory on which we have granted pensions to widows of soldiers eral theory on which we have granted pensions to widows of soldiers of the Mexican war is not different from the principle which would be established by this bill in its present shape Mr. BRAGG. Entirely different.

Mr. BRAGG. Entirely different.

Mr. ATHERTON. In other words, as to soldiers of the late war, the civil war, pensions are granted in accordance with the principles of the arrears act; but if we attempt by bills of this kind to give special pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war or their widows special pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war or their widows and children, we do it in defiance of the general principle that has been established in relation to such pensions.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will ask that this bill be laid aside for the present. My colleague, [Mr. Klotz,] who is very much interested in it, and who reported it to the House, is now absent. I ask that the bill be laid aside until some future time when he can be heard.

Mr. BRAGG. I have no objection, provided the bill is not to be called up and passed at some time when no one's attention is drawn to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill, if there be no objection, will be laid aside, and will take its place as unfinished business from the Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside.

MARY ANN M'CARROL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary

Mr. PRESCOTT. I desire to know whether this bill is subject to the provision we have adopted as to other bills.

Mr. BAYNE. It does not provide for arrearages at all.

The bill, having been read, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2450) granting a pension to Mary Wade.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know whether this bill falls under the exception made by the gentleman from New York. Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask that the bill be read. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Wade, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, who is the mother of Jennie Wade, who was killed while baking bread for the Union soldiers, and to pay to said Mary Wade a pension at the rate of $8 a month from the 3d day of July, 1863, the date of her said daughter's death, to continue during the widowhood of the said Mary Wade, she having been dependent for support on her said daughter.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think this bill ought not to pass in this form. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA K. ASHLEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Eliza K. Ashley.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM F. FARRAR.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. LEAMY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was a substitute for House bill No. 228, a bill (H. R. No. 5803) granting a pension to George W. Leamy.

The substitute was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RICHARDSON K. BAIRD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting a pension to Richardson K. Baird, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to amend by striking out "$13" in the fifth line and inserting in lieu thereof "$8."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed; and also moved to lay the motions to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. COVERT, (at ten o'clock and twenty-three minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

APACHES IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. COKE. I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5161) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of certain Indians in New Mexico," approved June 20, 1878, to report it with a recommendation that it pass. The bill is a matter of very great importance, one that ought to be passed immediately; and I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It repeals the proviso to the act approceeded to consider the bill. It repeals the proviso to the act approved June 20, 1878, making an appropriation for the removal of the band of Apaches at Cimarron, New Mexico, to the Mescalero Apache reservation at Fort Stanton, New Mexico, requiring the removal of those Indians within thirty days after the passage of the act, and forbidding the issue of rations and annuities to them except at the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to them their supplies and annuities at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico.

Mr. COKE. I send to the table and ask the Secretary to read two letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs giving a full explanation of the bill.

at Cimarron. New Mexico, to the reservation of that tribe in Colorado, and also to remove the band of the Apaches at the same place to the Mescalero Apache reservation at Fort Stanton, New Mexico, with the proviso that "the President shall cause the removal of said Indians within thirty days after the passage of this act; and thereafter no rations or annuities shall be issued to said Indians except at the agencies of their respective reservations." In accordance with this law, an attempt was made to remove the Apache Indians, but they persistently refused to remove further south than the Abiquin agency, where they now are, and in a starving condition, the Department being powerless to extend them aid on account of restrictions contained in above act.

Owing to the impoverished condition of said Indians, and fearing an outbreak unless relief is extended immediately, I have the honor to recommend, that Congress be requested to repeal that portion of the act referred to forbidding rations or supplies to be issued to said Indians except at the agency located in the Mescalero Apache reservation.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT,

Department of the Interior.

Department of the Interior, Washington, April 10, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by your reference of a letter dated 7th instant, from Hon. Richard Coke, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, inclosing a copy of House bill No. 5161, "to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of certain Indians (Apaches) in New Mexico," and asking for any information in the possession of the Department relative to the same, "particularly with reference" to their removal from Cimarron to Fort Stanton, their refusal "to remove from their present situation," why the Department has "receded from its attempt to remove them," and what disposition it proposes to make of the band, and in reply to your direction for a report thereon, have respectfully to state that these Indians, numbering over four hundred, with three shundred Utes, were in 1862 placed upon what is known as Maxwell's ranche in Mora County, New Mexico, in the Cimarron Valley, a tract of land containing twelve hundred and eighty acres, which the Government rented at the nominal price of $20 per year for the term of twenty-five years, but reserving the right to relinquish the same at the expiration of five years from the date of the lease, or any time thereafter. The location was regarded as temporary in its character, it being the determination of the Government to place these bands of Indians upon reservations. In 1877 it was deemed best to discontinue the agency, as there were constant and serious complaints made by the settlers against the Indians, and as provision had been made by Congress to settle the Utes on the Rio de Los Pinos, in Southern Colorado, in compliance with their treaty of 1868, it was determined to send the Apaches to the Mescalero reservation. It was also determined to make the same disposition of the Utes and Apaches at Abjouit, New Mexico, who were similarly situated, the former numbering about nine hundred and the latter over three hu what Indians these are.

Mr. COKE. The Mescalero Apaches; they are Apache Indians.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire if the band referred to in the bill is not the band known as Victoria's band.

Mr. COKE. Not that I know of. I do not think that it is.

Mr. COKE. Not that I know of. I do not think that it is. Some other member of the committee may be able to state definitely.
Mr. TELLER. I do not hear a word that the Senator says.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that these Indians do not belong to Victoria's band, who are in Arizona fighting, while these Indians are in New Mexico starving.
Mr. TELLER. I understand that they do belong to Victoria's band, but I may be mistaken about that. I understand that while Victoria is fighting perhaps others of the band may be in some want; that is, the children and the old men.

I should suppose the committee ought to know whether that is true

Mr. COKE. If it is true, the committee have no information to that effect.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator from Colorado say that is true? Mr. TELLER. I say I understand so; I do not know. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 1027) to provide for the establishing of terms of court in the district of Colorado, and have directed me to report it back with sundry amendments. The bill makes no increase of officers in the district, and no change of the district. It is a bill that the Senator from Colorado nearest me [Mr. TELLER] thinks ought to be passed now so that it can be passed in the House in time to be operative for the ensuing term. It is satisfactory to everybody and unanimously reported by the committee. I therefore ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it increases the number of places where the courts in Colorado are

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, sir; it does not. Del Norte and Pueblo are fixed as the places in the act forming the State into a district. We have repealed the divisions of the district, and the courts are to be held in exactly the same places where they are now held by law.

Mr. ALLISON. The district and circuit courts are to be held in

Mr. ALLISON. The district and circuit courts are to be held in the same places?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In the same places.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator reporting the bill, what is the distance between the points at which the different terms are to be held?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] can answer the question better than I can.
Mr. TELLER. I will say that from Denver to Pueblo is about one hundred and twenty-five miles, or a little over, and to Del Norte is probably one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and fifty miles still further.

Mr. PADDOCK. From either point?
Mr. TELLER. From either point.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The courts are held at those places now?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The courts are held at those places now? Mr. TELLER. That is the present law.

Mr. PADDOCK. I did not make the inquiry for the purpose of making any objection to the bill, but for the purpose of information. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was in section 1, after the word "year," in line 9, to strike out all down to and including the word "instituted," at the end of section 4, as follows:

At Del Norte, on the first Tuesday in September in each year. Special terms of said courts may be held at the places aforesaid, and elsewhere in the district, as the said courts and the judges thereof may order and direct, but a special term of the circuit court shall not be held except upon the order of the circuit judge or of the circuit justice. Notice of any such special term shall be given as the court, or the judge ordering the same, shall direct, and any business may be transacted at any such special term, in like manner and with the same effect as at a general term.

any such special term, in like manner and with the same effect as at a general term.

Sec. 2. A clerk's office shall be kept and maintained at Denver, Pueblo, and Del Norte in said district, for each of said courts, in which shall be kept the records of the proceedings of the respective courts, and the files thereof, at the said places, respectively. A clerk shall be appointed for each of said courts in the manner prescribed for appointing clerks by the said courts, respectively, to reside at each of said places; and a seal for each of said courts shall be provided and kept at each of said places.

Sec. 3. When sitting at either of the places before mentioned, or at any place in said district, the said courts, respectively, shall have jurisdiction throughout the district, and any suit, action, or proceedings, civil or criminal, of which the said courts, or either of them, may have jurisdiction, may be instituted and brought at either of the places before mentioned.

Sec. 4. Any cause or proceeding, civil or criminal, which shall be instituted or brought in either of said courts at any of the places aforesaid may be transferred to another of such places for hearing or trial, as the convenience of parties or witnesses may require. Such transfer may be made upon application of any party to any such suit or proceeding by the court or by a judge thereof in vaccion; and upon any such transfer it shall be sufficient to certify a transcript of the proceedings of the court at the place to which the cause or proceeding, and transmit the same to the clerk of the court as the same had been there instituted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 4, section 5, to strike out the word "shall" and insert "may;" so as to read:

Whenever the terms of the said circuit and district courts shall be held at the same time and place, grand and petit jurors summoned to attend in either of said courts may serve in both of said courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 6, after the word "officers," to insert "of the district of Colorado;" so as to read:

The records of the district court in the several divisions of the district of Colorado, as declared by the act approved February 15, 1879, entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts in the district of Colorado," shall be kept and retained in the clerks' offices of the district of Colorado established by this act within the said division, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 13, to strike out the words "may have" and insert "has;" so as to read:

Actions, suits, and proceedings pending and undetermined in the district court for the southern and western divisions, as declared by said act, of which a circuit court has jurisdiction, may be certified into the circuit court sitting at the same place, for further proceedings therein and for final hearing or trial thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN MAINE.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is another bill reported by the Judiciary Committee to which the same reasons will apply for prompt action as those which applied to the bill just acted on. As it will take but a moment I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1979) regulating the times and places for holding the district courts of the United States for the district of Maine.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 1079. It will require but a moment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall not be so ungracious as to object, for my friend from Maine has allowed my bill to come up and be read, although it was defeated by the Senator from Missouri; but I give notice that after this I shall insist upon the Calendar. My friend from Missouri, whose turn it is to do to-day the ugly for the Calendar, has utterly failed for several days, and I shall have to take it upon myself.

him. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1079) regulating the times and places for holding the district courts of the United States for the district of Maine.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 5, to strike out "first" before "Tuesday" and insert "third;" in line 6, to strike out "March" and insert "April;" and in the same line to strike out "November" and insert "September;" so as to read:

That instead of the times and places now fixed by law, the district courts of the United States for the district of Maine shall hereafter be held as follows: At Portland on the third Tuesday of April and September, and at Bangor on the fourth Tuesday of June; and all recognizances, indictments, or other process or proceedings, civil or criminal, pending in or returnable to said court shall be entered at and have day in and be heard and tried at the term of said court next to be held as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill:

SEC. 2. That one body of grand and of petit jurors shall be summoned for both the circuit and district courts at Portland, and shall be taken and deemed to be for both thereof, and, being otherwise qualified, shall, when impaneled and sworn in either court, be competent to act in all proper matters in the other court, in the same manner and with the same effect as if summoned and impaneled for that court. Officers, jurors, and witnesses attending said courts shall be allowed only for travel and attendance as of one court.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator from Maine if we can enact by law that a recognizance stipulating that the principal shall appear at one place shall be so changed in its legal effect as to require him to appear at another?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, it is at the same place. The bill fixes the time for holding the district court at the precise time which the law now designates for holding the circuit court; and then the new section provides that the jurors shall be drawn and summoned for both courts at the same time

Mr. HOAR. My question related to the provision of the bill that all recognizances which are returnable at one time should be returnable at another.

Mr. HAMLIN. It only changes the terms from one time to another.
Mr. HOAR. The question is whether that can be done.
Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think there is any trouble about that.
The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. No. 1143) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Allison, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions. I ask it for the reason that this applicant for a pension is an old woman, nearly ninety years of age, the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812; and unless there shall be some prompt action in her case it is altogether proba-ble that if the Government of the United States shall seek to confer a benefit on her, it will have to follow her to another bourne. PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and is hereby, instructed to report, without unnecessary delay, a bill authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to place on the pension-roll of this Government the names of the surviving soldiers and sailors of the war between the United States and Mexico: Provided, That this resolution shall not apply to such as are now on any account drawing pensions, or who are laboring under political disability.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in presenting this resolution I hope I may be pardoned a few words in explanation. I am fully aware of the obstacles to be encountered. An impression has been created in certain quarters that we are already engaged in paying pensions in too lavish a manner. A note of alarm is raised on this floor whenever the subject is discussed. We heard it a few days ago in connection with a private bill to pension a disabled scout from West Virginia.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] drew a vivid picture of The Senator from Kansas [Mr. InGalls] drew a vivid picture of the dangers to which our growing pension list was subjecting the country. He announced that we were paying more money in pen-sions to disabled soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphans, than any other government in the world. This is true, and in my judg-ment it is greatly to our credit. While the governments of Europe pour out enormous sums in annuities and pensions on their royal families, and on their nobility, we are left free to expend similar sums, if we choose, on far worthier objects, on the citizen soldiery of the Republic, in grateful recognition of the fact that but for them the Union would not now exist, nor would foreign nations salute the the Union would not now exist, nor would foreign nations salute the American flag with respect.

I cannot consent that the policy of other governments on this subject shall be held up to us for adoption or imitation. There is nothing in the pension system of Great Britain for us to consider except as an example to be avoided. It is true that there is comparatively a small sum paid in pensions to her soldiers and sailors, but she has a pension list which is truly amazing to the eye of an American. Under the heads of hereditary pensions, political pensions, special pensions, annuities, compensation allowances, compassionate allowances, retiring allowances, and superannuation allowances, she pays more than $10,000,000 a year—in part to such as have retired from the different branches of her public service, and in part to a worthless nobility which has fastened itself by inheritance on the tax-paying toil of that kingdom.

I have examined that pension-roll. It is full of curious things. One man was pensioned for the sum of £7,191 on the excise, and for £3,384 on the post-office revenue, making the annual sum of $52,875, because he was descended from an illegitimate son of Charles the Second. His base but high-born ancestor had been pensioned, and the pension descended to those who came after him. In 1857 his government redeemed, as it is called, its excise and post-office revenues from this annual charge, by paying the pensioner £255,777 13s. 2d.; counted in our money $1,278,885, in round numbers. The old Duke of Schomberg fell at the battle of the Boyne, in 1690, and a pension of £4,000, or $20,000, per annum was settled upon his heirs. They have drawn more than $2,000,000 from the English treasury. The private purse of the Queen of England and her household expenses paid by the people amount to over $2,000,000 a year; and the annual allowances granted to her children reach the sum of five millions and upward; while adding marriage portions to their other allowances these favored youths have drawn from the revenues of their government ward; while adding marriage portions to their other allowances these favored youths have drawn from the revenues of their government the sum of $62,790,095 up to the year 1877.

Facts like these, it seems to me, ought to have a strong tendency to reconcile the most dissatisfied American citizen to the policy of his own Government even if we do pay our scarred and veteran soldiers liberal pensions, and even if for the time being at least we are denived of the blessings of really and the second of the blessings of the blessings of really and the second of the blessings of really and the second of the blessings of the blessings of the second For my part it does not alarm me at all that we are paying many times as much in pensions to our soldiers as Great Britain pays to hers; nor do I ever wish to see them deprived of their pensions or cut short in their rates in order to bestow them on the favorites of an empire, as is done in that country.

Sir, in addition, however, to what we have already done for the Sir, in addition, however, to what we have already done for the American soldier there remains, in my judgment, an imperative duty yet to be discharged. The soldier of the war with Mexico has not yet had justice. The life-time of a generation has passed by since he obeyed the call of his country and upheld its honor in a foreign war. Thirty-four years ago he moved with the elastic step of youth to battle and to victory. He is now old and waits from year to year for that recognition, which, though it may be small in amount, is always dear to a soldier's heart.

There is but little difficulty in making a correct estimate of the

There is but little difficulty in making a correct estimate of the number of soldiers and sailors who would be entitled to a pension for having participated in the Mexican war. The muster-rolls contain 101,000, all told, in the military and naval service against Mextain 101,000, all told, in the military and naval service against Mexico. Of these, however, 17,224 were re-enlistments, showing that there were in fact but 83,776 men in that service. From this number must be deducted the dead who died in Mexico, 16,000, and 11,000 heretofore pensioned for wounds and disabilities incurred in the line of duty. I regret to note the fact that 7,225 are marked as deserters. This leaves a body of 49,551 men to the accidents of time and the assaults of disease during a period of nearly thirty-three years of intense activity, and stupendous scenes of excitement, danger, and death.

It is known to all that the survivors of the Mexican war were among the foremost to take part in the war of the rebellion. They had been trained as soldiers, and they snuffed the approach of battle. Many of them died on the field or in the hospitals during the four bloody years. Others survive crippled, and drawing pensions for their services in the cause of the Union. All these circumstances, added to the natural death rate since the close of the war with Mexico, have reduced the number of soldiers and sailors now surviving, and who would be entitled to pensions, according to the most intelligent and careful calculations, to perhaps less than ten thousand. Very competent judges who have spent much time in gathering statistics on this subject put the survivorship entitled to pensions as low as seven thousand. It is said that the following facts are well authenticated: authenticated:

Of the two Pennsylvania regiments, mustered in with twenty-five hundred and ree officers and men, but one hundred and eighty-one survive.

Of the Second Mississippi, one thousand and thirty-five officers and men, forty-seven survive.

Of the Palmetto Regiment, one thousand and seventy-seven officers and men, only thirty-four are now living.

According to these melancholy illustrations no one need be alarmed According to these melancholy illustrations no one need be alarmed at the increase of our pension-roll, even if the veterans of Mexico are added to it. A million a year will pay what remains of them at $8 per mouth. A million a year! A single manufacturing establishment in the city of Terre-Haute, where I live, pays more revenue annually into the Treasury of the United States than it would require to pension every survivor of the Mexican war; and yet we are met with a sort of panic in regard to the increased expenditures of the Government the subject is mentioned. Six whether a bell part sort of panic in regard to the increased expenditures of the Government whenever this subject is mentioned. Sir, what we shall pay them is a mere atom compared to the mighty acquisitions of wealth and national power achieved by their courage and endurance.

The veterans of the Mexican war are not asking charity; they are not pleading for support out of the hard earnings of others; they simply desire an infinitesimal per cent, a per cent, so small that it cannot be designated, of that vast domain and inexhaustible treasure which they secured to their Government by their own exertions. Such a conquest of far-reaching boundaries, and of present and future wealth, power, and glory as was made by their arms has, perhaps, no parallel in human history. The ephemeral conquests of Alexander the Great, in the East, the subjugation of extensive portions of Europe by Cæsar, and afterward by Napoleon, the Norman conquest of England by William the Conqueror, none of these achievements were equal in their effects upon the progress of the world to those which were accomplished by the war between the United States and Mexico. Does this statement appear extravagant? Let the cold facts of history speak for themselves. A condition-precedent to the war was the annexation of Texas, a State larger in extent, more fertile in natural resources, and capable of sustaining a more numerous population than many of the leading powers of Europe. A settlement of the proper boundary between that State and Mexico followed the way and some of the disputed territory between the ment of the proper boundary between that State and Mexico followed the war, and secured the disputed territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, a territory as large and as rich as the State of Ohio. The Union was composed of twenty-nine States when the war closed, and by the treaty of peace a more extensive country than them all put together was brought under the authority of the American flag, and under the protection of American law. The boundaries of the American Republic were more than doubled, and fountains of wealth were secured which have revolutionized the commerce of the seas and the traffic of the civilized parts of the earth.

California, the queen of the Pacific, with her dower of gold, marks a new era in the activity and advancement of the human race. Enough of the precious metals have been taken from her mines alone, coined in this country and taken to Europe for coinage to pay our national debt. She has caused this continent to be spanned by an iron thoroughfare for the travel and transportation created by her wonderful products. The customs duties received by the Federal wonderful products. The customs duties received by the Federal Government at her ports in any period of five years since her admission into the Union, has been sufficient to defray the entire cost of the war with Mexico. Nevada, Utah, Colorado, a portion of Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico, with their tremendous capacities for future development, also stand to the credit of those who fought at Cerro Gordo, and in the Valley of Mexico under Scott, and at Monterey and Buena Vista under Taylor.

The imagination of man can hardly grasp the reality of those vast regions fifty years hence. If a statue of the precious metals was erected to-day to each surviving veteran of the Mexican war, instead of the enactment of a law giving them $8 a month for their lives and erected to-day to each surviving veteran of the Mexican war, instead of the enactment of a law giving them $8 a month for their lives and their widows after them, the expense would be but a barren pittance in comparison with what this Government has received as the proceeds of their privations and their valor.

Sir, why further delay this act of justice? It has already been far too long delayed for the honor of this Government. There is but a remnant of these heroes left. Their ranks are growing thinner from year to year like the gray locks on their honored heads. Those battle-fields on which they startled the world with the constancy and daring of American volunteers are beginning to be seen through the haze of long intervening time. Let us not wait until all who made these fields illustrious have gone to their graves before we recognize, in some slight degree, the debt we owe them.

Congress is far in the rear of a grateful public opinion on this sub-congress is far in the rear of a grateful public opinion on this subject. When we last considered it on this floor, less than a year ago, the Legislatures of twenty States had instructed their Senators and requested their Representatives in Congress to pension the veterans of the war with Mexico. Now, the Legislatures of twenty-five States have made similar instructions and preferred similar requests. There are fifty Senators instructed, and more than two hundred members of the House requested by their States to pension these surviving veterans without further postponement. Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, California, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Nevada, Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas, Alabama, Arkansas, Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, Missouri, New Jersey, and Massachusetts have joined their potent voices in this demand. Will they not be respected and obeyed? Who will presume to say so? And why defer action another day? The step is to be taken, the American people have so willed it; why not take it now? are fifty Senators instructed, and more than two hundred members

There is nothing sectional in this question. All the States in this Union have shared in the increased greatness of our common country. Every section has alike reaped the fruits of the fortitude and wisdom displayed in the field and in the national councils in the conduct and in the conclusion of the Mexican war. American enterprise and intelligence, from the hardy regions of New England to the Pacific coast, and from the northern lakes to the warm waters of the Gulf, have found new and boundless fields for their restless activity and their almost fabulous achievements. I cannot believe that there will be any further reluctance in any quarter to the small recognition and re-amy further reluctance in any quarter to the small recognition and reward which I ask for those who proved themselves the benefactors of every portion of the American people, and in fact of the whole commercial and civilized world. I ask that the resolution which I have offered may be printed and lie upon the table; and I give notice that I shall call it up at an early day for the action of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The discussion goes on by unanimous consent, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the same unanimous consent which was given to the Senator from Indiana to permit me to say a word on this subject. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not take more than three or four minutes. Just after the bill for pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war was rejected a little more than a year ago, on the last night or last but one of the session, I spent an evening in Massachusetts in the company of ene of the persons whom it was proposed to pension. He was a man forty-eight years of age, a giant in strength, of vigorous health, with I have no doubt a stronger constitution and greater prospect of life and health in the future than any member of this body. He was a man in affluent circumstances, and enjoying a large salary as the holder of one of the most important offices in the gift of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. He joined with me in emphatic disapprobation of the careless and reckless legislation which would put a man like him on the pension-roll of the Government.

I saw the next day or the next but one, by appointment, a soldier of our late war whose health had been wrecked by injuries received in the line of his duty. He was able to get about the streets, but not to go up stairs from his carriage; he required the constant attendance of one person to look after his wants; and yet under the general law as then and now existing he was entitled, I think, to but $50 a month.

I heard of another soldier who had been reduced by exposure in the late war and by a rheumatic difficulty, living in my native town and well known to my own relatives and friends, who was drawn up into the space of about four feet in length from the erect manhood of which he had been a conspicuous specimen when he entered into the war, and whose only desire and ambition in life was to have his pen-war, and whose only desire and ambition in life was to have his pension so increased that he could put a little veranda on the outside of his dwelling, on which his wife could drag him in the warmth of our New England summer to enjoy the air.

I think, Mr. President, that until provision is made by a general law for such persons as these we should, not refuse to pension the surviving soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, but apply to them the principle which every other government and this Government has heretofore applied to its pension-rolls, pension only those who are disabled, and not pension men without regard to their condition in life.

In regard to the soldiers of the Revolution we waited before we passed a general pension law until by the lapse of time every surviving Revolutionary soldier was disabled by old age. When we extended the pension system to all the survivors of the war of 1812, the youngest of those survivors exceeded seventy-eight years in age; and yet it is proposed here simply to transfer the provisions of that act relating to the soldiers of 1812 to the soldiers of a war which ended about thirty-three years ago, and many of whose surviving soldiers are men in the vigorous health of fifty years of age, most of soldiers are men in the vigorous health of fifty years of age, most of them within a few years of that age.

Now, I will join with the Senator from Indiana in placing upon the pension-roll every survivor of that war who comes within the principles which we apply to the survivors of the last war, or which we applied to the survivors of the war of 1812, or the Revolution; but I will not pension men wealthy, holding important offices under the Government, able to transact business, without a disability in the world, until the Government has exhausted the list of those wounded and sick and disabled in the war which saved the Union by very and sick and disabled in the war which saved the Union, by very largely increasing the restricted and narrow limits of our present pension-rolls; and I will not yield my judgment on this question as a Senator of the United States to that of any State Legislature, whether it be hastily or deliberately adopted.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I wish merely to state that when the resolution shall come up for action I propose to have something to say upon the subject, inasmuch as the committee of which I am chairman is by implication severely censured by the terms of the resolution. I think it premature, however, to discuss the merits of the question in advance.

Mr. VOORHEES. I never thought if the Committee on Pensions were instructed to do such a thing it would be a reflection on them. It never entered my head in any degree that this resolution reflected on a committee of which I was a member for two years when I first on a committee of which I was a member for two years when I first entered this body. I thought it would be a relief to the committee to have the sense of the body taken on a subject concerning which there has been much discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WITHERS. I simply wish to say that the bill proposing to pension the Mexican war soldiers has been referred to that committee, and this resolution of instruction to report it back in a certain form is to a certain extent a reflection on that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The Chair calls up the unfinished business, which is the Geneva

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Hoar, beginning in section 4, line 1, of the original bill, to strike out the following:

That so much of the twelfth section of the said act as provides that "no claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right or as assignee, or otherwise, in the right of a person or party insured, as aforesaid, unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses in respect to its or his war risks exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CALL addressed the Senate. [His remarks will be found in

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WILLIAMS in the chair.) The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar.] to strike out the fourth section of the bill down to the word "repealed" in the eleventh line.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the Secretary report what is proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] who has the bill in charge supposed that some other Senator would speak after the Senator from Florida. He expects to close the debate upon the proposition which comes up on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EATON. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that unless

Mr. EATON. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that unless some gentleman desires to go on immediately, after conversation with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I propose to move temporarily to lay the pending bill aside and take up the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I agree to that so far as I am concerned.

Mr. EATON. Informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to informally lay the pending bill aside, for the purpose of taking up the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. Senators in favor of that proposition will signify it by saying "ay;" the contrary, "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The consideration of the Geneva award bill is informally postponed. bill is informally postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine and infectious and contagious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5803) granting a pension to George W. Leamy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol;

A bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting increase of pension to Richardson

K. Baird;
A bill (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar;
A bill (H. R. No. 2407) granting a pension to Belinda Curtis; and
A bill (H. R. No. 2540) granting a pension to Mary Wade.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. EATON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consider-

Afr. EATON. I now move that the senate proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government priations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I will make a short statement for the benefit of the Senate before the bill is read, so that the Senate may know precisely what the bill is.

The amount of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives is $1,138,235. The amount of the estimates for 1881 was $1,185,135. The amount of the estimates for 1880 was $1,087,835. The Senate Committee and Approximations have in reconstituted by the House bill $2,000 colleges. mittee on Appropriations have increased the House bill $7,900 only, as follows:

For a new officer, a consul-general at Bucharest, $4,000. That is a city of one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, the capital city of the new kingdom of Roumania, which has a population of five million people. We have at the present time no diplomatic or conmillion people. We have at the present time no diplomatic or consular officer there. It was deemed very important by the State Department, by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and by the Committee on Appropriations that this officer at Bucharest should be appointed. For clerks at three consulates, $3,000; and for clerk-hire at the legation at Columbia, $900, making in all $7,900 increase by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

That makes the total amount of the bill as reported to the Senate $1,146,135, less than the estimates by $39,000, and exceeding the $1,146,135, less than the estimates by $39,000, and exceeding the amount appropriated for 1880 $58,300.

Perhaps that is sufficient to say at this present moment. After the bill is read I will make any explanation in my power that any member of the Senate may require. I now ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WILLIAMS.) The Chair would suggest to the Senate that unless the reading of the bill in full is demanded by some Senator, he will direct the Secretary to read only such clauses of the bill as are proposed to be amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is a rule of the Senate that all bills shall be read. I cannot consent that any bill shall be passed over without being fully read. It is not a very long bill.

Mr. EATON. I suppose it must be read, according to our custom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair merely suggested that the reading might be dispensed with unless it was called for.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. EATON. I will make the necessary explanations as the bill is read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and, having read the following clauses:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, at $12,000 each, $84,000.

Mr. EATON. I will say here for the information of Senators that precisely the same amount is appropriated this year for these officers that was given for the preceding year; that there has been, in other words, no change.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read the following clause:

For charges d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $20,000.

Mr. EATON. I ought to say to the Senate that this is a new item. Mr. EATON. I ought to say to the Senate that this is a new item. From 1856, as I understand, up to two years ago this amount of $20,000 has been appropriated by Congress on the estimate of the State Department. Two years ago the appropriation was not made, and last year it was not made. The Department of State are very anxious that this appropriation should be made. I believe it would be entirely safe to leave the $20,000 under charge of the Department of State and the Committee of Anxionistics of the Committee of State and the State an of State, and the Committee on Appropriations have recommended this appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Although it is not perfectly germane to what the Senator from Connecticut is explaining, I beg to ask him, in charge of this bill, whether any provision is made by the committee in the bill, as undoubtedly was not in the House, for the expenses of the special commissioners to China?

Mr. EATON. No; at the time the bill was considered by the Committee on Appropriations those gentleman had not been confirmed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That undoubtedly is an entire justification of the action of the committee, but I beg to suggest to my friend from Connecticut the propriety of adding an appropriation, to be available immediately, of a proper sum to pay their proper compensation and expenses.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will ask my colleague on the committee whether there was not something said in the committee in that connection, and we thought the appropriation for contingent expenses in lines 62 and 63 would cover it? That appropriation includes an additional amount of $24,000 or $25,000 allowed to the State Department, and it was supposed there would be a sufficient sum for this purpose out of the total sum of $80,000 appropriated "for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all the missions abroad." I ask my colleague on the committee whether that is so or not. is so or not.

Mr. EATON. There was conversation in regard to that matter, but I apprehend that neither of the two items to which attention has appreciated that neither of the two items to which attention has been called would contemplate that expenditure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the Senator from Connecticut is quite right in his reply to the Senator from West Virginia. Although there might be a sufficient fund there unexhausted, yet it would be rather a stretch of power in the President or the Department of State to take from the "contingent expenses" account the salary and expenses of a mission that the President and the Senate under the Continuous had provided for a gracular purpose. It would seem and expenses of a mission that the Fresident and the Senate under the Constitution had provided for a special purpose. It would seem hardly to fall within the scope of that. Therefore, I suggest, with great respect to my friend from Connecticut, that this might be a very convenient and proper place to make provision for that matter.

Mr. EATON. Let my friend from Vermont suggest to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the proper amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the bill goes on, we can fix that. Mr. EATON. I think the Senator from Vermont is quite right that

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill till he reached the first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which was after line 52 to insert:

For clerk-hire for the legation at the United States of Colombia, $900.

Mr. EATON. Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State and after full conversation with the minister at that point, and in consideration of the complications which may arise in the near future with regard to the canal question, we were perfectly satisfied, all of us, that this small amount of $900 ought to be allowed for clerk-hire at that legation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in "Schedule B," after line 66, to insert:

For a diplomatic agent and consul-general at Bucharest, $4,000.

Mr. EATON. I said in my opening statement all that I care to say unless some Senator requires further information in regard to this addition for a diplomatic agent and consul-general at Bucharest. Some gentlemen are here who may not have been in at the time, and I will simply repeat that Bucharest is a city of one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, the capital of the new kingdom of Roumania, which has five million inhabitants. We are led to believe that it is a very important new point. It may become very important in the distribution of our manufactures; and it will be a great commercial point, we hope.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 243, to increase the appropriation for allowance for clerks at consulates from $55,500 to $55,500.

Mr. EATON. In the original bill the allowance was $55,500. Examination was made at the State Department and a full and thorough classification of all the clerks at the various consulates, and after this classification made by the Department—and the Committee on Appropriations had full consultation with the Secretary and officers of the Department-we have come to the conclusion to adopt the suggestion made by the Department and take their entire classifica-

There are five or six different classes, from $3,000 down to $600 per annum, and in making the new classifications there is a saving of about $3,000. So, by the action of the Department and the Committee on Appropriations, we are enabled to reduce the total appropriation, as Appropriations, we are enabled to reduce the total appropriation, as we originally reported it, about $3,000, with a thorough and full classification of the various officers. Therefore we propose that the amendment I now send to the chair be substituted in lieu of the amount in the House bill and of the amendment reported by the Committee. If gentlemen will follow the printed bill from line 243, on page 11, they will see that the amendment I now send to the desk makes an alterwill see that the amendment I now send to the desk makes an anter-ation from $58,500 to $55,500, and then gives the names of all the officers, with their different classes. Each Senator can follow the Clerk as he reads it, and he will discover that the classification is somewhat different from that in the printed bill between lines 245

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11 it is proposed to strike out the sum named and insert in lieu thereof "$55,600;" and to strike out all after the word "follows," in line 244, down to the word "Provided," in line 259, and to insert in lieu of the matter stricken out:

For the consulat Liverpool, a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,500 for any one year; and for the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, Shanghai, and Rio de Janeiro, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, and Kanagawa, and for the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, and Chemnitz, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,500 for any one year; for the consul-general at Montreal, and the consuls at Bradford and Birmingham, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,200 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Calcutta and Melbourne, and for the consuls at Leipsic, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Tunstall, Antwerp, Bordeaux, Glasgow, and Singapore, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Belfast, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, and Matamoras, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $500 for any one year; for the consuls at Belfast, Naples, Stuttgart, Florence, Mannheim, Prague, Zurich, Panama, and Demarara, each, a sum not exceeding the rate of $600 for any one year.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to insert the words "Colon (Aspinwall)" after "Panama," in the amendment of the committee. I gave notice of an amendment yesterday predicated on the report of the committee, not in the amendment now offered by the Senator from Connecticut. I find that my amendment will come in with the consulates at ranama and Demarara. The consulate at Aspinwall is the most important that we have in South or Central America, with the exception of that at Rio de Janeiro. The income from that consulate is nearly $4,000 a year, whereas the income from the consulate on the opposite side of the Isthmus at Panama has not probably exceeded $2,000 at any time. It is a very unhealthly climate, and a very expensive place to live, and the consul has an enormous amount of business of the Isthmus at Panama has not probably exceeded $2,000 at any time. It is a very unhealthly climate, and a very expensive place to live, and the consul has an enormous amount of business and the consul has an enormous amount of business at the consultant and the consul ness owing to the large number of ships and the great amount of tonnage arriving at that port. It is the port from which the Isth-mus railroad is supplied with commerce from this side.

I was absent at the time the committee had this bill under consid-I was absent at the time the committee had this bill under consideration, and only arrived after the report was made, so that I did not have the opportunity of bringing this subject to the attention of the committee at that time. I saw the Secretary of State this morning on the subject, and he fully concurs, as I am authorized by him to state, in the adoption of the amendment allowing the consul at Colon (Aspinwall) a clerk. I think that the salary ought to be $1,000; but as we give by this scheme only $600 to the clerk on the opposite side of the Isthmus, I suppose I shall have to modify my wishes in that respect so as to conform to the action taken in reference to the consulate at Panama. The Secretary of State prepared a written recommendation for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when I was present this morning, recommending the allowance tions when I was present this morning, recommending the allowance of this appropriation; but unfortunately it has not reached the chairman of the committee yet. I have telegraphed for it and I have no doubt it will be here in the course of a few moments.

I am not prepared to present it to the Senate as an official recom-mendation of the Secretary of State; and yet I know that the Secretary of State very fully concurred in the view and wrote the recommendation while I was present. I gave notice of this amendment yesterday, and I suppose the committee will not be disposed to raise the point of order after that notice. I hope the Senate will insert the words "Colon, (Aspinwall,)" so as to give the consul at that point a clerk as well as the consul at Panama. It is very necessary indeed; it is a very important consulate, and it is almost impossible for any one man without the assistance of a clerk to discharge the duties of that important office.

Mr. EATON. I do not quite like to interpose a question of order here; but of course this motion is not in order. I only want to say that after full consultation with the Department of State, after a very thorough classification of all these various offices by that Department, I do not feel myself at liberty to vote for this amendment of my friend from Alabama. I will not interpose the question of order which I might do, because if the Senate agree to it, very well; but it strikes me that the State Department ought to have known from it strikes me that the State Department ought to have known from this consul, at this very important point that my friend from Alabama speaks of, of the existence of the very great necessity that he speaks of. They do not seem to have learned it; or if they have learned it, they have not communicated it to any of the committees of this body, either the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on Foreign Relations, or the Committee on Commerce. There should have been, as we have here with regard to all these various changes I have proposed, a written communication from the Secretary of State in regard to the matter. We have nothing of this sort in the present case, and therefore, while I will not interpose the question of order, I cannot vote myself to create this new office.

Mr. MORGAN. This amendment is offered to a proposition which has never been printed, which the Senate has not been in possession of, and is not in possession of except by hearing it read from the desk, and therefore I do not think a point of order would apply.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I will state to my friend from Alabama that it is in order for two reasons: first it is recommended by a Department; and secondly, it comes from a standing committee, from neither of which does my friend's amendment come.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment of the committee ought to have been laid before the Senate and printed, so that the Senate could have understood it. It is a very important amendment, and providing an entirely new classification of consular clerkships; but I make no point upon that. It is suggested by the Senator in charge of this point upon that. It is suggested by the Senator in charge of this bill that the State Department ought to be in possession of information in regard to the necessity of having a clerk at the point named by me. I can say to the Senator that the State Department has been in possession of this information, but it sometimes happens that the State Department omits to make suggestions which are important. Very important suggestions are brought to their attention by consuls. It is a very well known fact in that Department that there is no more efficient consul in the service of the State Department than this gentleman, Mr. Thorington, who was once a member of Congress from the State of Iowa. His own health is very poor; and so is that of his family. His expenses have been very much increased thereby. He is taking charge of the affairs of the Government down there in some very delicate and some very important trusts that have been confided to him.

He has a vice-consul who has no salary. He has no clerk. A very large amount of commerce, as is known to every Senator here, passes into that port, Colon, (Aspinwall.) Of course there cannot be a larger amount of commerce coming from the Pacific coast to Panama than comes from the Atlantic Ocean to Colon, (Aspinwall,) for they are different points on the same line of transit across the Isthmus. Then, why should there be a clerk at Panama where the income has not exceeded about $1,600 a year and no clerk at Colon (Aspinwall) where the income has exceeded $3,000? Why require one man to do a work which yields to this Government in fees more than $3,000 a year, and lives perhaps within twenty-five miles of another engaged in the same kind of business on the line of transit who does work not to same kind of business on the line of transit who does work not to exceed $1,500 or $1,600 a year iv fees, and to whom you allow a clerk? The injustice of the thing is entirely palpable.

I have no interest in the world in it except that I have been informed very frequently—having no personal acquaintance with this gentleman—that he was in great need of having some assistance there and that there was some omission in not providing it. Then when I went this morning and called the attention of the Secretary of State to the matter, he at once saw the propriety of it and made a written recommendation in my presence and sent it to his clerk to be copied, but it has been delayed by some means, I know not what, addressed to the chairman of the committee, recommending on behalf of the State Department the allowance of a clerk to this con-

I do not think the Senate ought to be very technical in voting down a proposition of this kind; or at all events I should have the benefit of delay upon this bill until that communication shall come in here from the Department, if that is required.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the committee not to make any point of order. Therefore the Senator's statement is accepted by the committee making the amendment in order. It is not worth while to delay the bill on that account.

worth while to delay the bill on that account.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it strikes me that as a matter of principle and as applying to a great many other similar questions that will arise, it is the duty of some Senator to make the point of order because the theory of the rules is that changes of this kind should have first been brought to the attention of the executive department of the Government that is primarily responsible for the due administration of the public service, and that the executive department having had it brought to its consideration should make an estimate or representation. I am not speaking of the mere form, but what amounts to a recommendation—that a thing of that kind should be amounts to a recommendation—that a timing of that kind should be done. In this particular instance, I dare say upon the statement of my friend from Alabama in which I implicitly rely, his proposition may be perfectly right. And yet this very act of ours will become a precedent for doing the same thing in instances that we are not so clear about. With great respect to him, inasmuch as I am sure that if this recommendation comes it will still be within the competence of the two Houses to act, for as some amendments are to go over to of the two Houses to act, for as some amendments are to go over to the other House, that House can amend one of our amendments by adding this if it wishes to, and so I shall not do any injury to the public service in making the point of order, I feel it to be a duty as a principle, and not in respect to this particular case, to make it, and I do make it. My point is that it is against the rule in respect of amending bills of appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not see very clearly the point of order, but would like the Senator from Vermont to enlichten him in regard to it.

lighten him in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will call the attention of the Chair, with great respect, to the rule that I think governs it. Will the Chair be kind enough to have the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama read? Then I shall be able to state my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to remark to the Senator from Vermont that my amendment is to an amendment that has not been printed—a long amendment of the committee that has not been printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Still it can be stated by the Secretary so that the ment providing for a number of—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is to the written amendment offered by the Senator from Connectiont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the written amendment be read and then we can understand the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. EATON.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment which is reported by the committee, and which I therefore assume is within the rule, is against the twenty-seventh rule as well as the twenty-eighth rule. The twenty-seventh rule, after the first clause about the reference of bills, provides as follows:

And no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

It has always been held by the Senate, and justly as anybody can see, that an amendment to an amendment, the original amendment itself being in order, falls within the principle and spirit of the rule, and therefore the amendment of my friend from Alabama stands in point of order exactly as if this written amendment had not been proposed but it were offered to the text of the bill. That, I think, I am safe in saying has been the constant practice of the Senate, and I presume nobody will question it. So then this amendment increases the appropriation contained in the bill and puts in a new provision for an expense in respect of a consular clerk at a particular place where the law does not now provide it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Alabama to say that the Secretary of State had prepared an estimate and a recommendation for this office.

Mr. MORGAN. I stated that I have seen the Secretary write a Mr. MORGAN. I stated that I have seen the Secretary write a recommendation to that effect, but I am not relying on that for the purpose of overruling the point of order. What I do rely upon, however, is this: the question is whether my amendment can be received. My amendment was received and was debated before the Senator from Vermont made his objection to it. The committee had made no objection. The Senate by unanimous consent, that is to say, because nobody had dissented, had received the amendment, and it was the senator in charge of the hill and myself subject of debate between the Senator in charge of the bill and myself before the Senator from Vermont rose to make the question of order. He came, therefore, too late, because my amendment had been received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think that has ever been the practice of the Senate because I could not interrupt either the Senator from Alabama or the Senator from Connecticut while on the floor discussing the amendment, as to whether it was in order; but the practice here has always been, as I think it ought to be, that whenever a Senator can get the floor properly to make a point of this kind he is in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels disposed to sustain the point of order. If the Senator from Alabama desires it, however, he will take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I do not think the matter is of sufficient consequence for that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Alabama will not understand me as opposing this proposition of his upon the correctness of the thing itself, which I do not perfectly understand, but I make the objection as a matter of principle governing the action of the Senate. That is all.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire my course in the Senate to be submitted to the severest tests, and make no complaint whatever of any Senator applying the rules to me. I wish only to say, however, that when a proposition is made to furnish money to the Chinese commissioners and matters of that sort, I shall have a right to object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will depend on whether the amendment is proposed by direction of a standing or select committee, or is made to carry out the provisions of something that the Senate has already done, as I believe we have public information that the Senate in this instance as to the Chinese mission has done something, which by the mstance as to the Uninese mission has done something, which by the way is nothing to me.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by force of any law but by force of an executive act of the Senate—not a law by any means. The country does not know anything of it by means of a statute.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that Singapore should be transposed from the place where it is now in the amendment of the Senator from Convertions and insorted into these Chespita. Connecticut and inserted just above Chemnitz.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment? I withdraw Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment 1 I withdraw the amendment with a view of offering it again as soon as I get the recommendation from the State Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose an amendment to the amendment by inserting "Singapore" before "Chemnitz," and then striking out "Singapore" where it is now in the amendment. This is a mere transposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that transposition ?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the object of it?
Mr. ALLISON. The object is to put Singapore in a different classification from that in which it now appears in the amendment of the committee

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does it not fall within the principle of the rule

Mr. ALLISON. By no means.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That depends on whether it increases the amount. Does it increase the amount appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. I find in the original bill asit comes to the Senate, and in the law as it now stands, and in the estimates of the State Department, a provision for a clerkship at Singapore at the rate of $1,500 per annum. Now, by this manipulation, or rearrangement, which perhaps is a better term, Singapore is put down in another classification. All I desire is that Singapore may be put in the relation and position that the statutes now put it in and that the esti-mates of the Departments now put it in and that the House bill puts

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not satisfied that this is a new appropriation. The appropriation is in the bill already, and therefore it does not come within the objection made by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. It is in the law, in the estimates, and in the bill. I do not see how you could get jurisdiction more completely than from these three things.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Iowa tell us exactly what

mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Schator from lowe tell us exactly what the law is now about Singapore, and then tell us exactly what his amendment is and what is the effect of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He undoubtedly has a clear and definite public

Mr. EDMUNDS. He understeady has a clear and purpose in what he proposes to do.
Mr. ALLISON. I have.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us understand it.
Mr. ALLISON. I find in the statutes, volume 20, acts of the Forty-fifth Congress, page 273, in Schedule B of the last consular bill, an allowance for clerks at the following consulates:

Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Rio de Janeiro, Nuremberg, Leith, Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500 for any one year.

Now I find in the estimates of the Department for this year, "consular clerks," &c., running through a number of places which I need not recapitulate:

Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500

Then running on down and submitting estimates for other consular clerkships, I turn to the House bill, which is the bill we are considering, and I find on page 11, line 255:

Naples, Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, &c.

Naples, Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator find at line 255?

Mr. ALLISON. "Singapore."

Mr. EDMUNDS. He finds that that is a provision to pay the consul-general at Berlin, &c., and to the consuls at Hamburg, Singapore, and so on, so much. That seems to be payment for a consul.

Mr. EATON. I think my friend from Vermont is mistaken. If he will look at the heading of the clause he will see it is for clerks. All between lines 245 and 259 is for clerks at the consulates named.

Mr. ALLISON. "For allowance for clerks at consulates," so many dollars, and then the paragraph proposes a distribution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes, that is true. I see it.

Mr. ALLISON. The State Department, in order to get in clerks for a few consuls that they did not estimate for, and to keep the total within the limits of the appropriation, have revised the list and cut down some and put up others. All I desire is that at this important consulate in the region of the equator, Singapore, where we have a great deal of commerce and where the Secretary of State says it is important that we should extend our commerce, there shall be the allowance that was made last year for a consular clerk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken in supposing that his amendment, which is to put the consular clerk at Singapore in a better condition as to pay than he is now, is to carry out the provisions of an existing law. I think that is a mistake, so far as he has based it upon the authority which he says is found in volume 20, page 273, where he says it is provided that at Singapore the pay shall be so and so. Now, if you turn to volume 20, page 273, and turn back to the beginning of that act, of the 27th of January, 1879, you find that it is an act making appropriations and nothing else, and it terminated with that fiscal year. The act of 1879, which the Senator has referred to, is not an act which says that the consular clerk at Singapore shall have a certain sum of money as his salary from year to year. It is simply a provision that for the year 1879-'80 we would give him so much, and that is exhausted. Therefore my friend cannot stand Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken in supposing so much, and that is exhausted. Therefore my friend cannot stand on that statute to get within the rule. It consequently comes, just as the amendment of the Senator from Alabama did, to increasing the appropriations contained in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Now my friend will allow me to interrupt him a moment i

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.
Mr. ALLISON. What is the object of having regular estimates from the Departments if we are not to be governed at least in a prima facie way by them? Here I find in the regular printed estimates an item for this sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS.

But the Senator will allow me to say that I had not come to that part of the case yet. The Senator relied, as he said, upon the statute of 1879 as bringing this within the rule which provides that, if you move an amendment to carry out the provision of an existing law, it is in order. I say that the amendment does not stand upon the provisions of an existing law. Now we come to the estimate

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the regular Book of Estimates, the most authoritative statement the Department can make, I submit to the honorable Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does appear that the estimates for this year are for a consular clerk at "Singapore"—leaving out the others—" a sum not to exceed $1,500 for any one year." If the Senator's amendment is to bring that item in the bill up to a point not exceeding $1,500 a year, then so far as it respects the estimate it would be in order; and the only other question then would be whether it had been offered in season and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut moves an amendment to a provision in the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives. That bill allows the sum of $1,500 for this particular clerksentatives. That bill allows the sum of $1,500 for this particular clerkship. The committee, through the Senator from Connecticut, move to strike out a number of lines, which includes the striking down of this Singapore clerkship, and I move to amend their amendment by putting Singapore in a different classification. If there is any rule of the Senate which excludes that sort of amendment, the sooner we modify the rule the better it will be for the business of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I understand the point of the Senator from Iowa is in effect to merely strike out of this committee amendment that part of it which changes Singapore to a different attitude from that part of it which changes Singapore to a different attitude from what it stands in the original bill. If that is the effect of his amendment, of course it is in order.

Mr DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I understand the Senator wishes to add this to another class, which of course will increase the appro-

propose.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. While I am disposed to think the Senator from Iowa is right as to the question of order, it is wrong to do what he proposes. I think the Senate ought not to consent to his amendment. Here is a recommendation of the Department carefully considered, a revision of these clerkships, and among them this one. I presume the Department went on the ground that business had changed, and that the salaries ought to be more in one place and less in another.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this must have been through inadvertence. I cannot think it possible it could have occurred under the circum-

I cannot think it possible it could have occurred under the circumstances stated by the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is a revision by the Department of the House bill. It would be very wrong to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, but I cannot help but think it is in order to propose it. I hope the Senate will not adopt it. We ought to take the amendment as it comes from the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is to reject the one offered by the committee.

one offered by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Pro tanto. It modifies the amendment so far as Singapore is concerned. I do not propose to interfere with the general classification of the State Department as proposed by the committee, but merely in one particular to make a little modification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that modification, the Senator says, brings it back to the House bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Brings it back to the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In that view of it, the Chair is disposed to think it is in order.

posed to think it is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt that the ruling of the Chair is en-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EATON. I say I have no doubt about the ruling of the Chair being entirely correct on this subject, and I have no more doubt that we ought to vote down the amendment. The Department of State we ought to vote down the amendment. The Department of State examined this subject with very great care. They know better than I—I will not say better than my friend from Iowa, but quite as well—better than I and quite as well as any member of the Senate can know with regard to what the proper salaries of these officers should be. Now, I do not know it to be so, but I suppose my good-natured friend, the Senator from Iowa, has got some acquaintance at Singapore who has a little pocket interest in this clerkship, and he had rather that his friend should not be cut down. I apprehend it is so; I certainly do not know it. If we are to make changes for reasons of that character, if there is any such reason, every Senator may have a friend—I certainly have one at one certain point who is cut down here; I am very sorry it is so, but I submit that we should vote down the amendment of my friend from Iowa.

ment of my friend from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Only one word in reply. I desire of course to be perfectly frank in reference to this matter. The consul at Singapore is a citizen of my State and is a very able and efficient consul. He has recently been charged by the State Department with important has recently been charged by the State Department with important duties, such as examining into other consulates in that region. He is allowed by the law and by the estimates of the Department a certain sum for a consular clerk. That clerk he undoubtedly has now. He is in a distant portion of the globe. Suddenly the State Department, in order to come within the $55,000 agreed to by the committee of the House and by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, wishing to add one or two consular clerks, finds it convenient to scissor off—if I may use a term which I have heard used sometimes—my friend who is in Siam: so that when the last of Inly comes instead of being off—if I may use a term which I have heard used sometimes—my friend who is in Siam; so that when the 1st of July comes, instead of being in the receipt of the emolument which he supposed his Government was willing to pay him for honest and faithful service in that distant country, where he is endeavoring honestly and faithfully to increase the commerce of our country with that distant region, he finds suddenly only a thousand dollars granted to him, instead of $1,500. That may be fair, but it is not quite according to my notions of what we ought to do here as legislators. I do not think we should run up and run down consulates or consular clerks in that way. If two more consular clerks are necessary at other places, why do we not in a manly way add two more consular clerks? And if it costs $2,000 more, so be it. Let us not, for the purpose of keeping within a specified sum of $55,000 or $58,000, undertake to razee a consular clerk here and one so, ooo or $505,000, intercake to razee a constant clerk here and one there who are performing faithful and efficient service.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows of any good reason why the Committee on Commerce should not have considered this matter before it was brought before the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I of course should have great respect for the opinion of the Committee on Commerce upon any question.

ion of the Committee on Commerce upon any question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I think there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from Iowa has said in relation to this appropriin what the Senator from Iowa has said in relation to this appropriation for consular clerk hire. Senators should reflect that our consular system is a paying system. It pays money into the Treasury. The consuls of the United States are the agents of our commerce over the world, and I do not believe it is a wise policy to cripple that service abroad. It has been said by the Senator from Iowa that it has been done for the purpose of adding a few other consuls to the list of those allowed clerks and still not increasing the sum total of the appropriation. If it became necessary, and I doubt not it was, to add a provision for clerks at some consulates where the consul had not heretofore been entitled to a clerk, very well; but from my knowledge of the consular system I am sure that the demands for clerical assistance are not less than they were formerly, and I am certain that assistance are not less than they were formerly, and I am certain that there are consulates provided with $1,500 for clerk-hire which are less important, where less business is to be done, and which are of less interest to the commerce of the United States, than this in Siam. If there is to be a discrimination there are other consulates where the commerce of the country can better bear it than in this case. an important consulate, and it is a very small matter to transfer it from the class of one-thousand-dollar clerkships, where I understand it has been put in the amendment of the Committee on Appropria-tions, back to where the House put it and back to where the original estimates of the Department placed it. It is a little thing, but it is a wise thing for the Senate to do to put it back. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment sent by the Secre-tary of State has recently been carefully revised after the House bill had been prepared, and the State Department ought to know what the duties of these different positions are, and after proper consideration it has placed the person now in controversy in a grade of thousand-dollar clerks. I see no reason why the Senate should change it after the Department has made this classification.

Mr. EATON. It is a very small matter, and I am somewhat astonished at the view which is taken of it. My friend from Iowa went a little further in my judgment than he would be willing on reflection to go, when he said that the Department of State in order to get two or three more consular clerks struck down this two or three more consular clerks struck down this—

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, Mr. President, I did not mean to say that.

Mr. EATON. That is precisely what I understood my friend to say, and precisely what my friend from Maine understood him to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I meant to state that the Department of State found itself requiring two or three additional consular clerks and found the committees of the House and Senate only willing to appropriate a certain sum, and therefore, in order to get the additional service, they were obliged to scissor off some of these salaries.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not think any such thing. One would suppose from what my friend from Iowa says that here was a consulate where the fees were $10,000 or more. The entire fees of this consulate are only $1,800. What an idea, that the consul there should receive $2,000 and that his clerk should receive $1,500, when his fees are but $1,800, for that is all they are! There is no propriety in it, and the Department of State have done well in cutting down this. The tax-payers will be glad, whether my friend from Iowa is or not, The tax-payers will be glad, whether my friend from Iowa is or not, when the Department shows a desire if possible to reduce expenses somewhere. I do not mean to speak harshly with regard to anything of this kind, nor do I mean to play the part of a demagogue; but I mean to say that when we can, without doing bad service to the public interest, cut down the expenses of our missions or consulates or any other expenses of the Government, it ought to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be read. Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the effect of my amendment is to place Singapore in one classification instead of another, increasing the compensation of the consular clerk

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we pass this clause, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how long by the present treaty or convention this Spanish claims commission, which has existed ever since I can remember, is to continue?

Mr. EATON. If it has continued as long as my friend from Vergett and the state of the mont can remember, I must say that I fear it will continue some time longer. We have the matter before us now in committee, and are trying to take some steps to hasten the action on this subject. I am not aware that there is any limit to the duration of the commission.

at the head of the Committee on Foreign Relations, will find some means, as we have been obliged on former similar occasions to find means, of bringing this matter to a conclusion, and not let this be made a sinecure where we are paying salaries to gentlemen who are quite able for some reason or other—probably not their own fault, I am not criticising anybody—to keep this a perpetual establishment when it ought to be a temporary and very short means of settling matters between the two governments. matters between the two governments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it does.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But they do not agree about it. That is the trouble. We want to make it so that they will agree. I understand the Spanish government, when it pays us the money, is to pay the expenses of the commission.

Now, I hope the Senator will let me add a few dollars for the benefit of a poor soldier, $60 for the messenger of the commission. The Spanish government has to pay this sum ultimately. When the commission was organized the messenger's pay was fixed at $50 a month, and a soldier who served through the war, a private soldier with a large family, occupies the position. His pay was fixed at that sum when the commission started. It then occupied a hired house, so that he had light and fuel given him. Now the commission sits, when it does sit at all, in the building of the Department of State, and the house is given up. I wish only to add $10 a month to this man's pay. I am satisfied the committee will not object. I will make the motion unless somebody objects.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to be a very meritorious case.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to be a very meritorious case. Mr. EATON. I could not hear the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. EATON. I could not hear the Senator from Illinois.
Mr. WALLACE. I rise to say in reference to the Spanish-American commission that some few months ago I introduced a resolution asking for information from the State Department in reference to the reasons why action was not had and the commission closed, and also for information as to the amount it had cost the Government up to that time. There was in reply to that resolution a large amount of documentary evidence sent to the Senate, which has been printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I unite with the Senator from Vermont in asking that the committee may take the subject-matter up and consider it at an early day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hearing no objection to the matter of the Senator from Plincia will receive it.

Mr. EATON. I make it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go on with the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.
Mr. EATON. I now move to amend by inserting, after the word dollars," in line 15:

For the compensation, at the rate of $10,000 a year each and the necessary expenses, of the commissioners appointed to act with the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China to negotiate and conclude by treaty a settlement of such matters of interest to the two governments now pending between the same as may be confided to said envoy and said commissioners, $24,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available immediately.

The salary of the two commissioners is not to exceed $10,000 each, and $2,000 is allowed to each for expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BLAINE. I am amazed that the Senator from Vermont permits that to go in—it is such a flat, palpable violation of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair understands that the amendment is offered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall never attempt to account for the amaze.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall never attempt to account for the amazement of the Senator from Maine. It is entirely too great a subject for me. I understand this amendment to be moved by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and is therefore, if so, strictly within the rules.

Mr. BLAINE. I am in favor of it, heartily.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to what the rules allow, whatever the Senator from Maine may think.

Mr. EATON. It is strictly within the rules.
Mr. BLAINE. Anything is in order by unanimous consent.
The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MORGAN. I move to insert the words "Colon (Aspinwall)" after the word "Bordeaux" in the amendment proposed by the committee which has just been adopted by the Senate, after line 244. I send to the desk and ask to have read a communication from the Secretary of State.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 14, 1880.

Washington, April 14, 1880.

Sin: I have the honor to request that provision may be made in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for the employment of a clerk at the commercial agency at Aspinwall, Colombia.

This consular post, as you are well aware, is established at one of the points of transit and exchange between North and South America, and at a port at which five lines of ocean steamers have their terminus.

The business of the commercial agency is very large and important, and it is thought to be necessary to secure the rapid and efficient discharge thereof that the staff of the commercial agency should be increased. I have therefore the honor to request that an allowance of $1,000 may be made for clerk-hire at Aspinwall.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS,

Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate

Mr. EATON. I shall not interpose the objection which I perhaps ought to interpose to the amendment, not in deference to the Department of State, for it was their business to have given us this information long ago, if there is any necessity for it, but out of deference to my friend from Alabama entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator from Connecticut said awhile ago that the State Department had recently revised the whole ques-

Mr. EATON. I shall not vote for it; I shall vote against it.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the letter shows that there has been a more recent revision.

Mr. ALLISON. They may revise it again.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that objection is made to the reception of the amendment?
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, and others. There is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move, in line 150, to strike out the word "Chemnitz," and to insert it in line 134, the effect of which is to change the classification of the consulate at Chemnitz from $2,000 to $2,500. This amendment was proposed some time ago—
Mr. EATON. I shall interpose an objection to it.
Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to state to the Senator that the amend-

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to state to the Senator that the amendment was proposed some time ago, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is certainly in order.

Mr. WITHERS. It has not been reported on.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It certainly increases, as I understand, the appropriation; it comes from no standing committee, nor is it recommended by a Department.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is recommended by a Department; in general terms it is recommended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The objection is urged because it is out of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is recommended by the State Department. It has been recommended very decidedly to me verbally. I have just received a telegram in regard to the matter. I have been absent two or three days, and was not here in time to attend to the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the telegram read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14, 1880.

[From State Department.]

Senator PADDOCK, United States Senate:

The State Department thinks that, in view of the large amount of business transacted by the Chemnitz consulate, an addition to the salary of the consul might be properly made. The reason why an increase was not recommended in the estimates is the same considerations would apply in perhaps an equal degree to several other places, and a general increase would not be regarded favorably by Congress.

mafes is the same considerations would apply in perhaps an equal degree to several other places, and a general increase would not be regarded favorably by Congress.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I desire to state—
Mr. ALLISON. I want to know who signs this telegram first.
Mr. PADDOCK. The Assistant Secretary of State, John Hay.
Mr. ALLISON. They seem to be still revising this consular system.
Mr. PADDOCK. It was an oversight on the part of the Department in not making this recommendation before. It was called to their attention some time ago, and they admitted that it was an oversight on their part not to have done it. The fees paid by the consulate of Chemnitz amounted to $11,057.50 for the last fiscal year, a larger amount of fees than was paid by any consulate in Germany, larger than almost any consulate in Great Britain, larger than any of the consulates in the class which receives $3,000 per annum salary—larger than either one of the consulates at Glasgow, Bradford, Demarara, Havre, Matanzas, or Vera Cruz, all of which except one receives $3,000 per annum. The demand in this case is only that it shall be changed to a twenty-five-hundred-dollar consulate. The consulate at Glasgow, a consulate which receives $3,000 per annum, pays but $9,000 in fees; that at Belfast pays but $9,000, whereas Chemnitz pays nearly $12,000. That at Bradford, which is one of the most important consulates in England, pays but $9,000. In Germany, Barmen pays but $6,250; Berlin pays but $6,255; Bremen pays but $3,650. All these most important consulates in Germany, for which the salary is $2,500, are vastly less in fees received than this. It is one of the most important consulates—the most important consulate in respect of the fees paid in Germany to-day, and the salary is the lowest of any of them.

I will state that this proposition was adopted by the Senate in the last regular appropriation bill, but for some reason or other it failed in the conference committee. It will be an injustice now if it should not be adopted.

not be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Connecticut raised

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Connecticut raised the point of order some time ago.

Mr. PADDOCK. The point of order does not hold good. Here is a recommendation by the Department of State which brings my amendment clearly within the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It certainly increases an appropriation now contained in the bill; the Senator himself has said so. It is not recommended by any standing committee, nor is it recommended by a Department.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is recommended by the State Department. I am surprised at the Senator's statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is recommended by the Department of State in the letter just read.

Mr. PADDOCK. In the telegram from the Assistant Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It stands exactly on the ground of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is the first time I have ever known the Senate to take a telegram as a recommendation from a Department; and it is not intended as a recommendation in the ordinary sense of the word. It is a mere telegram to a Senator and not to the Senate. How can it he a recommendation from a Department. to the Senate. How can it be a recommendation from a Department when it is a telegram to a Senator, addressed to him, and does not even say to the Senate anything?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is an answer to a telegram addressed by me to the State Department as a Senator of the United States, for presentation to the Senate. The statement made in my telegram to the Department was that I desired a statement to present to the Senate, that is, a statement from the State Department for that purpose. It is a recommendation in terms, in fact, and in deed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I cannot let the ruling of the Chair go without saying, with all respect to him, that it must be a mistake, and I want the RECORD to show that I do not submit to the ruling, though I am willing to have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia appeal from the decision of the Chair, or merely enter his protest?

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator has entered his protest and twice repeated it. I think that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. EATON. To settle that question, believing that the Chair is entirely wrong, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair in this case. I think the amendment is clearly out of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator will withdraw his appeal under the circumstances.

the circumstance

the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this appeal the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Mr. CONKLING. I ask to have the ruling of the Chair stated. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska was in order upon the ground that it was offered upon the recommendation of the Department of State, communicated to the mover by telegraph for the information of the committee and the Senate. Upon that the Chair sustained the amendment as being in order under the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire if the point of the Senator from Connecticut is that this is not a recommendation of a head of a Department?

partment !

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it is not a recommendation of the Department, but a telegraphic communication.

Mr. EATON. On the ground that there is no recommendation of a committee, no communication of a Department, but a mere private telegram to a member of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But intended, as stated, for the information of the committee and the Senate, communicated to the committee and the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska. Upon that ground the Chair ruled that the amendment was in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state again that this telegram is in answer to a telegram sent a little while ago to the Department of State, in pursuance of a verbal request and following up a written communication, which they had not the time to answer, requesting, because the bill was under consideration at the time in the Senate, that the proper officer there should communicate by telegraph rather than by letter. The Assistant Secretary of State, who happened to be in charge of the Department of State at the hour, telegraphs offi-cially to me, for the use of the Senate, exactly as I requested, and gives the information and the recommendation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask that that statement be read for the information of the Senate

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read again.
The Chief Clerk again read the telegram signed "John Hay."
Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if there is any estimate in that communication?

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state to the Senate that my communication to the Department was a request that the Department should recommend that the classification of this consulate should be changed from the two-thousand-dollar class to the three-thousand-dollar cla but instead of making a motion to change it thus, I simply ask that it shall be raised one point, which is to the twenty-five-hundred-dollar class. The Department recommends that it shall be increased. The lowest possible increase that can be made is to the next class. There can be nothing short of that. The next class is the twenty-fivehundred-dollar class. The Department recommending an increase, it is with a view that it should be at least $2,500, which is the next class. It might be assumed properly that the increase should be more; but at least it must be that because there could be no increase whatever unless it was increased to the next classification.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that telegram is not from the head of a Department. It is from an assistant secretary, I believe, and he does not recommend it even.

Mr. CARPENTER. The real objection, I think, to the ruling of the Chair is that that is not a recommendation or an estimate of the Department within the meaning of the rule. A telegram to a Sena-tor is no more a compliance with the rule than a telegram to a page in the Senate. It is a mere expression of the opinion of the man who sends the telegram, but it is not a communication to the Senate as the report of a committee is, and as the estimates of the Departments which are sent to Congress are, and that, therefore, is not within the rule. It would not do to sustain the ruling unless we set aside the rules entirely.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Wisconsin had Rule No. 27 before him he would I think have made the remark he has but with perhaps more precision. The rule does not refer to the recommendation of the head of a Department or to any act whatever of the head of a Department save only that act as "an estimate." That is a well-understood term. We know what "the estimates" are. It is not a telegraphic dispatch addressed to the whole Senate nor to any committee of the Senate, nor to any Senator, nor is it a communication put in writing, however formal, unless it be an estimate.

Now, I suggest to the honorable Senator from Nebraska with whom I sympathize entirely about this proposition, that the difficulty is that I sympatrize entirely about this proposition, that the difficulty is that this communication is a mere explanation or statement of the reason why no estimate was made. Not only it is not an estimate, but it is an assignment of reasons for not estimating. Surely, I think, the honorable Senator from Nebraska can scarcely ask us to vote that that is a compliance with Rule 27 which, among other things, declares that no such amendment under any circumstances shall be in order unless it is "in pursuance of the estimate of the head of some one of the Departments."

For myself I will do anything for the honorable Senator from Netherlands.

For myself I will do anything for the honorable Senator from Ne-braska except to vote something which I believe to be wrong, and I should be willing to submit to him that it is quite impossible under this rule to sustain this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator who occupied the chair when this question arose ruled this amendment when offered to be in order, and that from that ruling an appeal was taken to the Senate. The question then is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question being put, it was decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is ruled to be out of order.

of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In explanation of my ruling I desire to state to the Senate that that telegram was not read entirely through at the time I gave my decision, and really at the time I gave the decision I thought it was signed by the Secretary of State, the head of the De-

Mr. Morgan. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment to this bill, inserting, in line 134, page 6, after the word "Dresden," the words "Greece, Athens," so as to establish a consulate at Athens, Greece, of the fourth class.

Mr. EATON. I could not hear the Senator from Alabama; but I am compelled to say that his amendment is out of order. There has am compelled to say that his amendment is out of order. There has been no report of a committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer it by order of the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the honorable Senator is chairman.

Mr. EATON. Ah! I was not aware of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I send to the Secretary's desk the correspondence with the State Department on the subject, which can be read.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether he does say that this is a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. That is my understanding of it. I was so directed, and I called the subject to the attention of the Secretary of State under the direction of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean for one to challenge the statement. I can only say that I was not aware that there had been such a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am in that respect as unfortunate as the honorable Senator from Connecticut the chairman of the committee. I have no doubt it is true, however.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say, in the first place, that this is creating a new office; and, in the next place, it is out of order, because so far as I know it has not been referred one day in advance to the Committee on Appropriations, as required by the rule. I never heard of it until now.

Mr. MORGAN. In presenting the amendment I merely discharge a duty that I supposed to be made imperative on me by the Committee on Foreign Relations. This subject was under discussion by that committee; they resolved to recommend to the Committee on Appropriations, whenever this bill came to the Senate, the establishment of a consulate at Athens, Greece, on the grounds set forth in the letter to the Secretary of State transmitted by citizens of the United States residing at Athens, very recently, requesting that this consulate should be established.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must request the Senator from Alabama to suspend. A question of order is made, which is not debatable. The Senator from West Virginia objects to the reception of the amendment under the twenty-eighth rule, which reads:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

This bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations on the 7th day of this month, and at that time it did not contain an appropriation for a consulate at Athens. The consequence is that no committee could propose to insert that without its having been one day beforehand introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senate will indulge me a moment to state that it is an embarrassing position to be put in when the chairman of a committee does not remember the action of that committee in reporting this amendment to the bill. The committee took its action in my absence on necessary business, while I was away from the Senate for ten days or more. This bill came from the House. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I supposed, would chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I supposed, would bring the subject to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, of which he is a member. He did not do so, however, and I had a duty to do to the Committee on Foreign Relations that I simply performed by bringing the subject to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to this bill?

this bill

Mr. EATON. Owing to the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Alabama, relative to the appointment of a consular clerk, it will be necessary to change the figures on lines 243 and 244, from $55,600 to $56,600, in order to cover the additional $1,000. I propose simply to correct the gross amount for clerk-hire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be ead a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine, and infectious and contagious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals; of which 65,000 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 20,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills of the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol;
A bill (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar;
A bill (H. R. No. 2407) granting a pension to Belinda Curtis;
A bill (H. R. No. 2450) granting a pension to Mary Wade;
A bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting increase of pension to Richardson K. Baird; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5803) granting a pension to George W. Leamy.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. GORDON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution No. 116, being a resolution to correct the sundry civil bill. The resolution has passed the House, and is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. The Geneva award bill was laid aside informally, and according to the decision quoted the other day that informality displaces it entirely if it is not resumed to-day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We can take it up before we adjourn. I move that the unfinished business be resumed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not require any motion. The Geneva award bill is before the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. I am willing to lay it aside informally to take up the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the Geneva award bill be laid aside informally in order to consider the resolution indicated by the Senator from West Virginia. Is there elication?

objection?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know whether you can grant unanimous consent with a condition; but I do not want to give way so that this shall displace the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly not; it is not intended to displace it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAINE. The unanimous understanding is that the Geneva award bill will remain the unfinished business when the Senate adjourns to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is laid aside informally and the joint resolution be taken up and disposed of to-day, the Geneva award bill will be resumed as a matter of course without any motion. If this resolution should threaten to go over until to-morrow, then in order to keep the Geneva award bill the unfinished business, it will be necessary to lay the resolution on the table or postpone it and take up the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There will be no trouble about it.

I will give way whenever the friends of the Geneva award want it

Mr. HOAR. What is the objection to a unanimous understanding, such as the Senator from Maine who just addressed the Chair has stated, that the Geneva award bill be laid aside informally and this resolution taken up, with the understanding that at the adjournment of the Senate the Geneva award bill be considered as the unfinished business? Certainly that can be accomplished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia proposes that if the Geneva award bill be laid aside informally and this joint resolution be taken up, it shall be taken up subject to a call by any Senator for the regular order and that will achieve all the Senators desire. Is there objection?

Mr. BOOTH. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California objects. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution No. 116.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by postponing the pending order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There will be no trouble about that, Mr. President, if the Senate is willing to take it up. We have now part of the evening. It is a House joint resolution looking to amending the sundry civil bill of last session, and there is no trouble in the world about its giving way to the Geneva award bill.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the intended amendment will the Sena-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will have it read for information, and then the Senator can understand it.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, penses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now let the Secretary read the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations, so that the Senate will know what the joint resolution is.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments, which were, in line 10, after the word "examination," to strike out "into the States" and insert "of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products, into the respective States when requested by the authorities thereof," and in line 18, after the word "examination," to strike out "into the States" and insert "of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products, into the respective States when requested by the authorities thereof;" so as to make the joint resolution read: ties thereof;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

ties thereof;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the first clause under the heading "Geological Survey," in the act "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879, and providing for said survey, is hereby amended by inserting, after the words "national domain," in said clause, the words "and he may extend his examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products, into the respective States when requested by the authorities thereof;" so that the paragraph of the amended clause will read: Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain; and he may extend his examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products, into the respective States when requested by the authorities thereof.

Mr. CONKLING: The amendments are proposed by the committee

Mr. CONKLING. The amendments are proposed by the committee of the Senate to the House resolution?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARPENTER. What "authorities of the State" does it refer to?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It means the governor, I suppose.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the resolution is taken up, then we can discuss the merits of it. I understand that it is not competent to discuss the merits before it is taken up.

Mr. BLAINE. If this is going to lead to discussion it is very evident, at twenty minutes of five o'clock, that there will be no opportunity to conclude it to-day. I am with the Senator for the measure;
but I consider it my duty, whether ineffectually performed or not, to protest against the dislodgment of the Geneva award bill until the indgment of the Senate is pronounced thereon. It has been booted judgment of the Senate is pronounced thereon. It has been booted about for the last two and a half months, giving way to everything, and postponed on the most trivial occasions. While I am with the Senator from West Virginia on this measure, which I aided him in reporting to the Senate, I am very sure that I shall not discharge my own duty unless I protest against any postponement of the Geneva award bill at all except those inevitable postponements which come from appropriation bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague on the committee will allow me just one moment. It is understood that to-morrow morning the Geneva award bill will be the pending order. That is the general understanding.

Mr. BLAINE. By unanimous consent I was willing to let this come up, but the Senator from California would not consent to that arrangement. Then the Chair ruled, according to the rules of course, that the joint resolution could only be taken up by a formal vote displacing the Geneva award bill. Then the Senate will adjourn with it as the unfinished business, and we do not get back the Geneva award as the unninshed business, and we do not get back the Geneva award bill except by a formal vote again.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my colleague on the committee that I shall move myself to lay the joint resolution aside if it be not disposed of to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. That still is only an evidence of the good-will of my friend. That does not control the Senate at all.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. It is likely the Senate will take the senate at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is likely the Senate will take up the Geneva award bill to-morrow. I hope my friend will not enter an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move to postpone the pending order, so as to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, I hope the joint resolution will not be taken up at this hour of the afternoon, under the supposition that it can be disposed of in twenty minutes. There is no measure of more importance for good or for evil to be brought before this Congress than this one. It may be very beneficent; it may prove in its effects all to be good, but on the other hand it is a most serious question whether we have a right to pass it as a resolution at all, and it is morally certain if was decreased. ally certain if we do pass it that it will lead to an expenditure which no man here to-day can compute. To spring it at the very close of a day's business, and ask that it may be interpolated and decided in twenty minutes, seems to me to be absolutely preposterous and

I have another reason to urge why the measure should be post-coned, and I think it will commend itself to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It is well known to me, whether it be to him or not, that the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] who is now absent, desires to be heard at length upon this proposition. It is a proposition of so much importance that a day ought to be assigned for its consideration, so that it may be known when it shall come up and it may be thoroughly discussed. It involves constitutional principles, and it involves, as I said before, the commencement of an expenditure the end of which we may see predict.

enpies, and it involves, as I said before, the commencement of an expenditure the end of which no man can predict.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is: Will the Senate postpone the Geneva award bill with a view to take up the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate had better dispose of this question first or it will come up to-morrow.

Mr. BOOTH and others. Vote it down.

Mr. CONKLING. Pending that, I move that the Senate do now adjourn adjourn.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the best motion that can be made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let me make a statement to the Senator from California, [Mr. Booth,] my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations. I had no idea that he wished to make any remarks upon the joint resolution which I have moved. He now submits that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] wishes to be heard. That I knew nothing of whatever. That being the case I of course withdraw my motion that the Senate lay aside the pending order in order to take up the joint resolution; but I shall ask that at some early day it be taken up and acted upon. The Senate now hear some early day it be taken up and acted upon. The Senate now has notice of it, and I shall call it up the very first opportunity I can get. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from West Virginia is withdrawn. The Senator from New York has moved that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 14, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

YAKIMA LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. BRENTS. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 1291) creating Yakima land district in Washington Territory, which was reported from the Committee on the Public Lands by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. RYAN,] with an amendment, in order that the amendment may be concurred in and the bill passed at this time.

Passeu at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Carlisle in the chair.) The Chair understands from the gentleman from Washington Territory that the gentleman from Georgia, who objected yesterday to the consideration of this proposition, to-day withdraws his objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; I withdraw my objection after conferring with the gentleman from Washington Territory, and understanding this proposition comes with the recommendation of the Committee on the Public Loads, baying the sphice; in charges.

on the Public Lands, having the subject in charge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the House Calendar in order that the bill and amendment may be brought before the House for consideration at this time?

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the following words in the first section:

words in the first section:

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

A point of the intersection of the line between townships 6 and 7 north, and between ranges 27 and 28 east of the Willamette meridian; and running westerly along said line between townships 6 and 7 north to the summit of the Cascade Mountains; thence northerly along said summit to the boundary-line between the United States and British Columbia; thence east along said line to the Columbia guide meridian; thence south on said meridian to the line between townships 16 and 17 north; thence west along said line to the line between ranges 27 and 28 east; thence south along said line to the place of beginning.

Mr. BRENTS. I move that amendment be agreed to.

Mr. BRENTS. I move that amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT DODGE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 3191) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of a part of the Fort Dodge military reservation to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, which has been reported from the Committee on the Public Lands with an amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. How much time will it take up?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. It will take but a very short while.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and it was brought before the House for action.

The amendment was to strike out the following words:

The following line, to wit: Commencing on the east side of the said reservation, at the southeast corner of section 24, township 26 south, of range 24 west; thence west to the southeast corner of lot number 4, section 20, township 26 south, of range 24 west.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

The strip of land owned and occupied by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company for right of way for its railroad.

So the bill will read:

Whereas that portion of the Fort Dodge military reservation hereinafter described is no longer needed for military purposes: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause all that portion of the Fort Dodge military reservation, in the State of Kansas, being and lying north of the strip of land owned and occupied by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company for right of way for its railroad; and to cause the same to be surveyed, sectionized, and subdivided as other public lands, and after said survey to offer said lands to actual settlers only, under and in accordance with the homestead laws of the United States.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move that the amendment be agreed to. Mr. McMILLIN. Does that make an exception in favor of a railroad?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. No, sir; that is a boundary line; that is all. Mr. ATKINS. How long will it require to consider this proposition?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Not two minutes. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been reported.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. R. FRIERSON.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5804) for the relief of J. R. Frierson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF INTERNAL-REVENUE REPORT.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to move that double the usual number of the report made by the Committee on Ways and Means on the proposition to amend the internal-revenue laws, House bill 4812, be printed. The usual number, I believe, is about three hundred; and there is a great demand for the report. The additional cost will be trifling.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to know whether this comes from any committee or not. We are doing a vast amount of printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it does not come from any committee.

ome from any committee.

Mr. WILSON. Let it go then to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the proposition to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the reference to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and the resolution for printing was referred to the Committee on Printing.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS, ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Mr. MORTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4985, a bill (H. R. No. 5805) to increase commercial relations between the United States and the Argentine Republic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. A few days ago I submitted a resolution that on and after Monday next the daily hour of meeting should be at eleven o'clock a. m., and I rise now for the purpose of asking for the action of the House on that resolution.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it not require unanimous consent to take this subject up?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The rules require that one day's notice should be given of the introduction of the proposition, and that one should be given been given, and therefore my request is now in order.

day's notice has been given, and therefore my request is now in order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That resolution, in my judgment, should be referred to some committee, as it is now too early in the session to submit a proposition for the meeting of the House at eleven o'clock

each day

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I want to test the sense of the House Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I want to test the sense of the House on the proposition at this time. We have now on the Private Calendar 480 bills which ought to be disposed of; in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union 267 bills and joint resolutions; upon the House Calendar 192 propositions; unfinished business and business upon the Speaker's table, 16; Senate bills on their first and second reading, 74—making 1,014 propositions of all sorts upon the several calendars and on the Speaker's table. I see no upon the several calendars and on the Speakers table. I see no necessity for committees reporting and crowding the calendars if nothing is to be done by the House. Let us dispose of the business now upon the calendars before anything else is put upon them. We want to dispose of the business now upon the calendars.

Mr. ATKINS. Before the gentleman makes a speech on the subject would it not be well to determine whether we shall consider it or not?

Mr. EPVE. Lyish to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that Mr. FRYE. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that the Committee on Rules considered that proposition this morning and agreed to report favorably on it, and probably will report as soon as the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is all right; but let us take the sense of the House on the subject now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that under any rule this is a privileged motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The rule requires one day's notice, and one day's notice has been given, and it is now a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a privileged motion to offer it at the proper time perhaps; but when offered, unless referred by the House, it goes to the Speaker's table, as the Chair supposes. There it must be reached as any other business on the Speaker's table is reached.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the resolution fixing the time of meeting of the House is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Virginia call the attention of the Chair to any rule of the House which makes

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1049) to amend section 2447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the issue of patents for private land claims confirmed by act

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Mr. MULDROW. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time a memorial from the State board of health of Mississippi, in relation to epidemic diseases, for reference to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ask that the memorial be also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly. The memorial is as follows:

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, April 5, 1880.

To the honorable Senators and Representatives of Mississippi in the Congress of the United States:

Gentlemen: The undersigned, members of the United States:

Gentlemen: The undersigned, members of the Mississippi State board of health, present at the regular annual session of the board now being held in the city of Jackson, deem it their duty to inform you that the National Board of Health has promptly extended us during the past year all the aid needed by us to protect our State against another epidemic visitation of yellow-fever. We desire to express, in the most emphatic manner, our opinion that the affairs of the National Board of Health have been administered with great prudence and ability.

We believe that it would be unreasonable, in the present condition of sanitary science, to expect that or any similar organization to accomplish in a day results that can be reached only through a long series of years, in which ripe experience, founded on patient and laborious investigation, shall fully determine the practical details of sanitary work.

We therefore view with a feeling of great concern the indications of a prejudiced hostility to the National Board of Health which have been manifested in certain quarters, and we would most respectfully urge you, in view of the recent sanitary legislation of our own State Legislature, to support the National Board in its laudable efforts to carry out the great work imposed upon it.

We would remind you that our Legislature at its recent session amended our health statutes so as to confer on the State board of health absolute power in matters of quarantine, and made a liberal appropriation to enable us to enforce these statutes.

We do not hesitate to say, in view of the great responsibility resting upon us ters of quarantine, and made a neural appropriate statutes.

We do not hesitate to say, in view of the great responsibility resting upon us, that we cannot efficiently discharge our duty without the aid and co-operation of the National Board of Health, and that any action on the part of Congress tending to restrict the power or to withhold the means needed to carry out the recommendations made in connection with the National Academy of Sciences by the National Board of Health in its annual report would be regarded by us as a direct blow at the most vital interests of our beloved State.

Praying your earnest consideration of this important subject, we beg leave to remain, with sentiments of the highest regard,

Your most obedient servants.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 53) making appropriations for acquiring sites and the erection of suitable posts for the protection of the Rio Grande

An act (S. No. 631) donating six condemned cannon and cannonballs to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes;

An act (S. No. 837) to donate twelve condemned cannon to the Blair Monument Association, of Saint Louis, Missouri; and An act (S. No. 1475) to change the name of the steamer J. H. Kelley to John Thorn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLS. I now demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order will be the morning hour.

Mr. WELLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour to go on with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not wish to antagonize the motion to go on with the Indian appropriation bill at this time, but I shall oppose the motion to dispense with the morning hour for the reason that I propose to call up after the morning hour to-day a contested-election

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri to first dispense with the morning hour is in order. That motion will require two-thirds.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 24.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

I now move the House resolve itself into the Com-Mr. WELLS. mittee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Whitthorne in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill has been dispensed

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the attention of the House at this time only a few minutes, and that for the purpose of stating that this bill as now reported from the Committee on Approstating that this bill as now reported from the Committee on Appropriations is with few exceptions the same as the one reported from the committee a few weeks ago and recommitted, and those items are so few I will refer briefly to them: First, striking off or discontinuing the agent at the Papago agency, which was recommended by the Department of Indian Affairs; reducing the number of interpreters at one agency and increasing at another, but not increasing the number in the aggregate; and reducing appropriation for contingencies of the Indian service $2,500, same being recommended by the Department; and providing for the payment of the sum of $79,723.96, interest due March 1, 1881, to the Osages, of Kansas, on their trust fund arising from the sale of their lands; increasing appropriation for expenses for board of Indian commissioners $2,500, making the total appropriation $10,000. In the bill last year there was appropriated appropriation $10,000. In the bill last year there was appropriated for said service $15,000.

for said service $15,000.

This bill is founded upon the estimates of the Department. The estimates for this service there found amount to $4,992,845.86. The bill as submitted recommends $4,571,869.02. Of this amount $2,376,027.86 is appropriated under treaty stipulations, $1,180,100 for removal, settlement, and subsistence of various Indians, $225,000 for transportation of Indian supplies, $182,900 for general incidental expenses, $140,800 for salaries for inspectors, agents, and interpreters, $99,218 for interest on trust funds. The bill of same character providing for this current year became a law at the sum of $4,713,178.58, being $141,308.76 more than the sum recommended by the present bill. I yield the remainder of my time to the centleman from Indiana.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana,

[Mr. BAKER.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, it must be a matter of regret to every one who has paid any attention to the management of the Indian affairs of this Government that from the organization of the Government to the present time we have had no fixed Indian policy. We have continued to drift on the current of events without any definite aim, or without any apparent fixedness of purpose in our dealings and relations with the Indian tribes. During the last twenty years we have expended more than $50,000,000 in the prosecution of Indian wars in the Indian country, and largely, in my judgment, on account of the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely, too, on account the description of the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely, too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely, too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely, too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely, too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the absence of any fixed Indian policy, and largely too, on account the account the account to the account the account the account the account the account to the account the acco count of the disregard paid by the Government and our people to the count of the disregard paid by the Government and our people to the obligations imposed upon us in our relations with the various Indian tribes by treaty stipulations.

We often hear surprise expressed, Mr. Chairman, that we fail to manage our Indians as successfully as our neighbors in Canada do theirs. But to those who have given any consideration to the subject it is not a matter of surprise at all. The Indians have been pressed by the greed and the avarice of the white men from one point to another until they have reached the utmost verge to which they can be pressed. And even after they have been placed on reservations which it has been stipulated they should enjoy without interference as long as grass grows and water runs, that has been no protection against the avarice and the greed of the white man, and has not appealed to the Government as it ought to have appealed to insist on the vindication and protection of the rights that have thus been

It will be true, Mr. Chairman, for the years that are to come, as it has been in the past, that this will be a source of trouble and of difficulty; that we shall have Indian wars and that we shall have outrages upon our frontier settlements until some definite and determined policy shall be established which shall be at once wise and humane on our part and just and beneficent as relates to the Indians.

numane on our part and just and beneficent as relates to the Indians. There are three things that must be attended to by this Government that have already too long been neglected before we can set on foot any policy that shall have any definite aim or purpose in view. The Government ought long since to have done what I am about to mention; and it ought not to delay a single year further in the initiation of a policy that shall look to the accomplishment of those three chiects. In the first place Mr. Chairment it is intended to the control of the control o tion of a policy that shall look to the accomplishment of those three objects. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, it is important that the lands that are reserved to the Indians should be segregated and divided among them, and that the title to the lands should be inalienable for a long period of time. In the next place, it is essential that we should observe the treaty stipulations that we have with at least nine of the largest and most powerful Indian nations looking to the establishment of industrial schools, where the youth of these Indian tribes should be educated in the elementary branches of English learning and in the ordinary avocations of life. We are bound to-day, and have been for a series of years past, by solemn treaty obligations requiring this Government to inaugurate such a system as this among nine of the leading tribes, including among them the Aranahoes. mine of the leading tribes, including among them the Arapahoes, the Cheyennes, the Sioux, the Apaches—requiring us to establish industrial schools among these Indians for the education of their youth trial schools among these Indians for the education of their youth between the ages of six and sixteen, one school for every thirty of these youths; and yet notwithstanding the treaty obligation that we assented to at the earnest instance and request of these Indians, from year to year we have been neglecting this duty that we assumed and entered into treaty obligations to carry out with the Indian tribes.

In the next place, Mr. Chairman, it is important that we should bring all the Indians within the limits of the United States under the operation of our civil and criminal laws, treating them as subjects if not citizens of this country. Until we shall have done these things we may look to a continuance of the hostility that has been exceed during the past hundred years, whereby we shall have Indian evoked during the past hundred years, whereby we shall have Indian wars and difficulties and shall continue during the indefinite number of future years that are to come to feed an ignorant and savage and of little years that are to come to feet an ignorant and savage and idle race of people. There are to-day as many Indians within the limits of the United States as there were at the time of the organization of our Government, and we must initiate this policy that I have suggested or else we must look to the policy of exterminating these Indians, a policy from which the heart of every right-thinking man

It was not my purpose, however, Mr. Chairman, to say more than a very little touching the general subject of the methods to be observed in the management of our intercourse with the Indians. I served in the management of our intercourse with the Indians. I have said enough to indicate the views I have, as the result of three years' study of this question in connection with the preparation of bills for the support of the Indian tribes within the limits of the United States. I desire now to draw attention for a few moments to some of the features of this bill that I trust will be changed in the Committee of the Whole, and I hope these changes will be assented to when the committee shall report the bill to the House.

There are sixty-nine Indian agencies scattered over a half of the North American continent. In order that the operations of these agencies may be understood by the central office here at Washington, it was provided by law there should be five inspectors appointed, men whose duty it should be to go from one to the other of these agencies from time to time, for the purpose of examining into the condition of the Indians and the condition and management of the agencies. It has been the policy in the preparation of this bill to cut off two of these five inspectors and to reduce the number to three. These inspectors, Mr. Chairman, are the eyes of the Indian Bureau, with which they see what is going on over half this continent. They are the ears with which they hear. And if you cut off this branch of the service to the extent of nearly one-half you paralyze and cripple to that extent any wise and just administration of this Department. It is no wonder, Mr. Chairman, that we hear charges against the administration of this Department of the service when there has been a policy during the time I have been here in Congress constantly pursued of hampering and crippling this Department in the proper avenues of obtaining information.

There is another anomaly connected with this. It is an anomaly in republican representative government. It originated in the year 1869 in an anomalous appropriation that was made in that year.

In an anomaious appropriation that was made in that year.

Instead of appropriating for specific objects, as we have been in the habit of doing for years, for some reason or other in that year a gross sum of so many millions of dollars was appropriated for the entire Indian service, and a provision was made for designating ten men by the President of the United States to act without salary, men of philanthropy, to act in conjunction with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the distribution of that money.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Indian appropriation was made in a gross sum?

Indian appropriation was made in a gross sum?

Mr. BAKER. It was, as will be seen by reference to volume 16.

Mr. BAKER. It was, as will be seen by reference to volume 10, Statutes at Large.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not recollect it in that way.

Mr. BAKER. It was done in 1869.

Mr. BLOUNT. In 1869? I beg the gentleman's pardon; I misunderstood the date.

Mr. BAKER. These commissioners were vested with jurisdiction to act in conjunction with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the distribution of this vast sum of money among the different Indian tribes in accordance with their wants as they appeared to exist.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. BAKER. Certainly.
Mr. HOOKER. By the the terms of the act of April 10, 1869, was not that commission limited in the discharge of their duties to advising and acting with a commission appointed to expend the money appropriated, and would it not have expired except for the revival of the act?

Mr. BAKER. I was about to say that this arose from the anomalous condition of the appropriation bill. It was continued, by what means I am unable to say, but it still remains and is a greater anomaly in the administration of departmental services than it was when it was first originated. It is an anomaly that we should have a Department officer who is charged with the execution of certain specific duties, and should also have a commission vested with concurrent jurisdiction; and, more than that, vested with jurisdiction to examine and try, and, if you please, impeach the head of the Department.

As well, and with as much harmony in the administration of the business of any department, might you say that there should be like commission of ten men to sit in supervision of the discharge of duties by the head of the Treasury Department, or of any other department. Indeed, if there is to be a decemvirate, if there is to be an institution, like the octroi of the Spartans, for the purpose of supervising the lawful management of any department of Government, I think it would be quite as well to authorize ten philanthropic gentless. men, serving without compensation, to sit as a revisory board for the purpose of determining what laws enacted by the Federal Congress shall go into execution.

If we desire to have an honest, an economical, and a faithful administration of any department, the experience of all ages demonstrates that it must be managed by one head, and that that one head must be held amenable alone to the representatives of the people. I hope that that feature will be removed, because it is an expense without profit; it is an impeachment in advance of the honesty, the integrity, and capacity of the man who has charge of that Department; it is saying that you will select ten men who shall be volunteers without pay to sit in judgment, to sit upon the head of the Department in the execution of the laws relating to his Department.

There is another feature in this bill, or rather other features in it, that I shall have accession to call attention to work in detail have that I shall have occasion to call attention to more in detail hereafter. Many of the agencies that are provided by this bill are agencies that have relations with large bodies of men, men who are semi-savages, men who only know and largely know of the Government from the relations which the agents sent there have with the Indians.

The agent is a living representative of the Government, a living embodiment of its power, and he ought to be a man of such weight of character, of such solidity of judgment, of such discreetness as would impress himself upon the minds and indeed the lives of the people he is called in a measure to govern and preside over.

Now, how can we expect to obtain such services as those in these remote frontier sections of the country at a compensation less, in a majority of cases, than is received by a departmental clerk in this city, for performing mere clerical duties here? You send an agent out there to take charge of three or four or five thousand Indians, and you pay him a salary less than the compensation of a clerk in one of your committee-rooms who performs perhaps an hour of clerical service in the twenty-four.

I submit that there should be some wisdom manifested in this regard, and that such a rate of salary should be provided as will secure the services of men competent to impress themselves upon those under their charge, upon these Indians, with the dignity and power of this Government, and at the same time to impress the Indians with the importance of taking upon themselves the habits of civilized life.

There is another general feature of this bill, running through the whole of it, to which I cannot give my assent. The revival of business during the last year has occasioned a large increase in the cost of the supplies and commodities that go to the support and clothing of these Indians. Yet the Committee on Appropriations have recommended to this Committee of the Whole, for its sanction and approval, a bill which appropriates $220,000 less money than was appropriated for similar purposes during the current and the preceding fiscal years. Even with the lower prices at which supplies were obtained than they can be obtained during the fiscal year for which we are about to appropriate, instead of the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year, there are large deficiencies that have occurred and must be appropriated for even for the present fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, these deficiencies occur largely in connection with the great and warlike tribes of Indians—the Arapahoes, the Cheyennes, and the Wichitas. My friend from Kansas has some recollection about these people, who made a raid through the western part of his State only two or three years ago, marking their track by conflagration and murder. The deficiencies occur also in connection with the Sioux Indians, a body of savages of nearly twenty-two thousand, having their six or seven thousand warriors sand, having their six or seven thousand warriors.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that unless we change this bill in the Committee of the Whole, unless we increase it in these particulars by quite a large amount, we shall be confronted with a large deficiency next year; and the probability is that we shall be confronted with other Indian wars, expensive and cruel in their features.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I view with alarm the policy which seems to be foreshadowed by this bill, of undertaking to cut down the food and clothing provided for these savage men of the plains. Far better would it be, if we must economize, to cut down where it can be done without imperiling the peace of the country, without jeopardizing the lives of our fellow-citizens who have taken their all and gone to the distant frontier to make their homes. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole shall consider the bill by paragraphs, I shall have occasion to call attention more in detail to these graphs, I shall have occasion to call attention more in detail to these matters. Instead of cutting down these appropriations, as they have been cut down in this bill $220,000 below the act which made appropriations for the current fiscal year, my judgment is that the interests of the Indian service, the interests of peace, the interests of the country demand that these appropriations shall be increased by not less than $400,000 or $500,000—say $300,000 in addition to the amount appropriated for the two preceding fiscal years. If we should make this increase, it is extremely doubtful in my mind whether we would not even then find ourselves confronted by a deficiency in view of the great increase in the cost of provisions, clothing, and the thousand and one articles necessary to be purchased for the supply of the Indians.

One word further and then I believe I shall have closed my preliminary statement touching this appropriation bill.

I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, that under the law as it now exists the board of Indian commissioners, to whom I have had occasion already to allude, are allowed so wide latitude in respect to their purchases for the Indians. At least two thousand different varieties of articles are purchased for the Indians, and the law requires that these shall be purchased by bid after public advertisement. I had supposed that the Indian commissioners were tied down in some way so that facilities for favoritism and corruption would be cut off. But such I find is not the fact. After an advertisement has been issued calling for bids for supplies, these gentlemen have it in their power (and they exercise this discretion as I personally know) to give contracts for supplies not to the man or firm who offers the required article at the lowest price, but to pass over the lowest bidder and award the contract to a man whose bid is higher.

There ought to be some revision in this regard; and I hope the Indian commission-

Indian commission—
Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. BAKER. Certainly.
Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the gentleman is proposing to legislate on this bill with the view of abolishing the Indian commission. I understand further that he proposes to legislate in reference to the salaries of Indian agents with the view of increasing them. Now I submit whether, in his judgment, such things are in order under the rules, and whether, according to the position he has taken in reference to other bills, he can afford to advocate such propositions.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have not said one word about offering any amendments for the purpose of increasing the salaries of the Indian agents; I do not know that I shall do so, in view of the fact that the Committee of the Whole is hampered and tied down by a Procrustean set of rules which virtually prevent this body from doing what it may desire to do. I do not know that I shall be able to get any change in legislation for the purpose of doing away with the Indian commission.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did not the gentleman help to make this "Pro-

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, the particular purpose I have in view now is to call the attention of this body and the country to the fact that we have been drifting along from one generation to another in this country without undertaking to develop any Indian policy looking to anything further than the robbery of the Indians and the plunging of this country into war after war. It looks as though the only Indian policy in this country is to try to destroy the Indians from the face of the earth, so that their feet shall have no resting place on the continent that their fathers owned. I do not expect, I have no hope, that we shall accomplish any reform in this respect to-day; but I do hope that the time is not far distant when the good men, the philanthropic men, the patriotic statesmen, will take this matter in hand and will see to it that there shall be devised for the government and regulation of our intercourse with the Indians a system looking to peace, looking to their civilization, looking to their upbuilding, looking to the development of the peaceful charities that ought to obtain among the representatives of a great people in their intercourse with these feeble wards, instead of that other policy which has been marked by entrage, and the foot-prints of which have been tracked in rapine and blood.

Mr. Chairman, in further answer to the gentleman from Georgia, I will say that I do not know I shall offer amendments touching anything except an increase of appropriation in those particulars in which an increase can be made under the rules of the House and without making myself amenable to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate fixed by the House has terminated; and the bill will now be read by paragraphs for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from Missouri having charge of this bill [Mr. Wells] will consent to an extension of the time for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the general debate was closed by order of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I move, then, that the committee rise for the purpose of having the general debate extended by order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Mississippi that cannot be done except by unanimous consent, inasmuch as the motion by which the general debate was closed in committee was reconsidered, and that motion was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not care; I make the motion; and if gentlemen choose to cut off general debate on this important question, they can do so.

Mr. WELLS. The general debate was limited to one half hour. Mr. HOOKER. Here is a bill appropriating nearly $5,000,000; and the Committee on Appropriations have taken up all the time allowed for general debate, without any other member in the House being permitted to say a word. It is an outrage.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 57.

So the committee refused to rise. The Clerk read as follows At the Klamath agency, at $1,100.

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out "$1,100" and insert "$1,300."
Mr. WELLS. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on that amendment. This compensation for the Indian agent at the Klamath agency at $1,100 is fixed by law, and this is a change of law and an increase of expenditure. Under the rules it is not in order to change a law and at the same time increase expenditure on an appropriation bill. As I have said, the salary of this Indian agent is fixed by law at $1,100; and the gentleman's amendment moves to increase it to $1,300, which is a change of law and an increase of expenditure, and therefore not in order under the rules.

Mr. BAKER. The salaries of Indian agents, as we find them in the appropriation bill for last year, were fixed as one of the items in that appropriation bill. In the law under which they have all been fixed appropriation bill. In the law under which they have all been fixed at the sum of $1,500, this one at the Klamath agency is included. Now, in the revision made last year it was only for the current fiscal year. I hold that law in my hand. It was revised on a scheme that was considered by the committee having this bill in charge so as to put the salary of some of the Indian agents above $1,500 and others below it. The revised statute which fixes the salary of Indian agents fixes it at $1,500. That statute has not been changed. The change nxes it at $1,500. That statute has not been changed. The change in the appropriation bill last year was simply a temporary and not a permanent change in appropriating for the Klamath agency $1,100 instead of the amount fixed by law, namely, $1,500. I submit, therefore, the point of order does not lie for the reason that there is nothing to be found in the appropriation bill that I hold in my hand fixing the pay for the current year at $1,100 that changed the revised statute which had previously fixed the salaries at all agencies at $1,500 a year. Consequently my amendment still leaves the salary of this Indian agent $200 below the amount fixed by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HAZELTON. What agency does the gentleman refer to?
Mr. BAKER. It is the Klamath Indian agency, where there are a large number of Indians; and this amount of $1,300 for the Indian agent at that agency is recommended by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HAZELTON. There are a great many other agents in precisely the same position; and I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana why it is the committee did not provide for them

Mr. BAKER. That calls for something I am not permitted by the rules of the House to disclose. I should like to call attention to the Revised Statutes which fix the compensation of all these Indian agents; and I will do so as soon as I can get it. I have already sent

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the salary of these Indian agents is con-cerned the provision in the Revised Statutes to which the gentleman proposes to refer does not control. It is well known to you, sir, and to many gentlemen in this House, that during the Forty-fourth Congress the salaries of officials in all the Departments of the Government, the salaries of Indian agents as well as other officials, were reduced; and the construction in the various Departments from that day to this has been that the legislation at that time then fixing the salaries of these various officials at the amounts then stated was a salaries of these various officials at the amounts then stated was a change of the law; and that amount of salary, as fixed by the law, was the amount which was then determined by the action of Congress. That law in every Department of the Government from that day to this, as I have already stated, has been held to be conclusive. It has been recognized by these officials themselves, and no claim has been made for any additional compensation beyond what was then provided. The very estimates themselves, coming from the several Departments, ask for nothing beyond the amount then fixed by the law.

Mr. BELFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. BLOUNT. I decline to be interrupted; I wish to say what I have to say on the point of order without interruption.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the gentleman from Colorado speak in his own

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly. Mr. Chairman, the action of Congress reducing these salaries in the Forty-fourth Congress is at present held by all the Departments to be the law of the case, and this amendment contemplates legislation with a view to a change of that law and an increase of expenditure.

My friend from Indiana refers to the fact that this increase ought to take place, and he wants to have it provided for in this general appropriation bill. But, as he has stated, he finds this Procrustean bed in his way, which that side of the House heretofore has been so much delighted with whenever it touched political riders. Then it was considered all right, and this legislation changing the law was considered infamous; but now, when it touches increase of salaries, this same Procrustean bed seems to the gentleman to be disgusting and objectionable.

I hope, sir, that the Chair will see fit to take the law of this case as it is taken and recognized by the Department and accepted by the officers of the Government, and unquestioned anywhere.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BAKER. I want to say a word further upon the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized by Mr. HENDERSON. I want to present this consideration to the Chair. I do not know whether the Revised Statutes fix the salary of the Indian agents or not. I take it for granted from the statement of my friend from Indiana that the salaries are fixed in the statutes. Now, it occurs to me that an appropriation bill which does not in terms repeal or propose to repeal a statute, and which only refers to the fiscal year beginning at a certain time and ending at a certain time, cannot, in my judgment, be so construed as to repeal a statute. It is simply an omission on the part of Congress to appropriate the full amount of the salary fixed by law.

What is the case before us here? Here is an appropriation bill, which is to take effect on the 1st day of July next and end on the 30th day of June, 1881. It says that so much money shall be appropriated as the salaries of certain Indian agents at specified agencies. The law says the salary of the Indian agent shall be so much. Now, it seems to me that can hardly be construed as a repeal of an express statute fixing a salary, but simply as an omission to appropriate the full amount of salary for the year fixed by the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to know of the gentleman if there has been any claim of that sort set up on the part of anybody; if there has been any construction of that sort put upon the law by any officers of the Department or of any Department of this Government; or if there has been any estimate for any deficiency by reason of such construction on the part of any Department of this Government?

Mr. HENDERSON. In response to the gentleman from Georgia I would say that the officers of the Treasury Department cannot pay a dollar out of the Treasury for the salary of any officer of the Government. ment, or for any purpose whatever, except it be appropriated by

Mr. BLOUNT. They can make a ruling on a claim and send in an estimate to Congress to cover the deficiency.

Mr. HENDERSON. The officers of the Government, in their disbursements of the public moneys, must conform in every particular with the provisions of the appropriation bills, and they are unable to pay a dollar unless it be appropriated. They cannot pay the salaries of members of Congress, the President of the United States, or any other officer of the Government, as I understand it, unless the money other officer of the Government, as I industrate it, the state is appropriated in advance by Congress.

Now, I regard it as an important matter that this point should be settled as to whether an appropriation bill which can hardly be called a permanent statute but which makes temporary appropriations for the fiscal year and which does not propose in its terms to repeal a statute is in effect a repeal of such statute. It seems to me to be simply a failure on the part of Congress to appropriate for the time being the amount of money the law fixes as the salary provided by law. Mr. BAKER. I desire now, Mr. Chairman, to say a word further on the point of order. I think I shall be able to make it entirely plain that the point of order raised against the amendment will not lie. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read section 2055 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2055. Each Indian agent shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of $1,500 a year, except as herein otherwise provided for.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the permanent law of this country unless it was altered or repealed by the provisions of the appropriation bill of last year.

I hold in my hand that bill, and I desire to state, and the statement,

I apprehend, will not be challenged, that there is not one single word contained in the law of last year, now in force, that looks to the repeal of the Revised Statutes so far as they touch the question of the salary of these Indian agents.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, what is the rule of legal construction in such cases? You accompany the consideration of the legal question by the statement of the fact that there is a permanent law on the statute-books which regulates for all time until repealed the salaries of these agents, what then occurs? It occurs that during the fiscal of these agents, what then occurs? It occurs that during the iscal year while that law is in force an appropriation bill is passed that fails to appropriate the full amount that the agent by the Revised Statutes is entitled to, and it is gravely urged that the failure to appropriate the money during the current fiscal years operates as a limitation upon the power of the committee for the year to come.

How does it happen, Mr. Chairman, that an appropriation bill that simply appropriates to an officer a portion of the amount he is entitled to receive under a permanent law, for a given year, repeals that permanent law when there is not a word in the appropriation bill that suggests it? It is what is known in law as a repeal, if it be a repeal at all, by implication; and what is the rule that obtains when it is understood that a law is repealed by implication? The rule is that you must construe the law that is said by implication to repeal that you must construct the law that is said by implication to repeal the general statute, strictly, giving it no further force than is required to carry out the apparent intent of the last law? What was the apparent intent of the last law? The only intent that can be drawn from it is that the man for that one year shall have a salary less than the amount fixed by the law. But it does not profess to interfere with the question for the next year as to whether or not the Congress shall appropriate the whole that he is entitled to, or a less sum.

It therefore appears to me absolutely incontrovertible that it cannot be claimed that this statute by implication repeals a permanent law by reason of the fact that it fails to appropriate for a single year the amount that was required by law. In order, Mr. Chairman, that it should have the effect of operating as a permanent repeal by implication of that statute, it would be necessary that there should implication of that statute, it would be necessary that there should be words contained in the appropriation bill that appropriated the less sum declaring that for the future no more should be appropriated than the amount fixed in this bill. That by implication would change it for future years, but less than that will not.

Mr. WELLS. The law which was read by the Clerk at the request of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, provides that unless otherwise provided the salaries of these agents shall be so and so. That was an authority to the Department to arrange and regulate the salaries of these agents. But by the law of last year and of the year previous, in fact ever since these agencies have been established, the salary has been fixed at $1,000. It must be remembered when the law passed in 1873 there was a much less number of agencies than to-day. The number of agents has been increased; of agencies than to-day. The number of agents has been increased; their duties have been diminished; and the number of Indians under their control has been decreased largely. In this case the number is about five hundred.

Mr. BAKER. The number is one thousand and twenty-three at the Klamath agency.

Mr. WELLS. It strikes me the point of order should lie. The appropriation in the bill is in accordance with the law now on the statute-book, and which has been there for two years. During that time the salary has been but $1,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has referred with a great deal of triumph to the Revised Statutes as containing the general law upon the subject of the salaries of Indian agents, and has recited rules of construction upon the subject. Now, if the gentleman had taken the pains to have gone a little further he would have seen that the section of the Revised Statutes, to which he refers, simply has a reference to ah Indian appropriation bill, such as we have here now, providing that the salaries of the Indian agents at certain places shall be thus and so. I have the Revised Statutes before me.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. BAKER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this is not in terms a general statute; whether it was not codified and inserted as part of the Revised Statutes; whether it has not stood so for a long number of years.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as that is concerned I say it was simply the law as contained in an appropriation bill of a given date; and the revision of the statutes did not mean to do more than the law had already done. It is a collation of it; and if you want to understand what that section of the Revised Statutes is, the proper plan is to refer to the statute itself. It was simply the arrangement of the salaries at that time. They have been changed since the adoption of the Revised Statutes by the very same method, by a provision in an appropriation bill; and the Indian appropriation bill last year and

When the gentleman proposes to resort to rules of legal construction it may be well for him to remember that we are not in the courthouses of the country here; that we are dealing with public affairs; that we are here in connection with the Departments of the Government; that those Departments have their law officers who are making constructions from time to time in reference to their duties; and that the committee have here to-day the construction of that Department in their Book of Estimates fixing the salaries of Indian agents and reciting the acts passed subsequent to the Revised Statutes as indicative of what those salaries are.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

BLOUNT] to claim that the appropriation made at a former session of Congress is the law. Suppose, sir, to test the strength of the gentleman's argument, the Appropriation Committee last year had fixed the salary of this agent at $100; would it not be in the power of the House to change it? Is that the sort of law the Appropriations Com-

House to change it? Is that the sort of law the Appropriations Committee propose to make? It is an absurdity on its face.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think so, too, and the Appropriations Committee never did any such thing.

Mr. HOOKER. It only needs to be stated to be refuted.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly. It could not pass the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I know it could not pass the House till it passed the Appropriations Committee. But I think the House has some the country of the state of th power over a matter which comes before it, notwithstanding the judgment of the Appropriations Committee against it.

The Committee on Appropriations is but the servant of the House, The Committee on Appropriations is but the servant of the House, and its duty is to report propositions to the House for its consideration. It is a strange and startling doctrine to say that because the Committee on Appropriations of last year failed to make an appropriation for a salary as fixed by law, therefore that failure becomes the law. Apply that rule to the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court. Suppose that in your legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill you fail to appropriate the amount required by law to pay the salaries of the supreme judges, does the gentleman mean to say that that would be the law; that the failure on the part of that committee to report an appropriation for the full amount of the salary fixed by law is to be the law governing the House for all time to come? If that is so, then the boast of the gentleman from Georgia as to what was done in the Forty-fourth Congress never could have been accomplished. It is in the power of the House to change the law or rather to change the appropriation on that subject, but that would be no law. If we should assent now to the proposition of the gentleman no law. If we should assent now to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] and fix the salary of these Indian agents from Indiana [Mr. Baker] and fix the salary of these Indian agents for this year at the maximum sum appropriated by law, $1,500 a year, that would not be the law of this year, but it could then be changed and altered by the House.

Now, because the Committee on Appropriations has undertaken to fix the compensation of these agents at this rate, or because the Department in its discretion has undertaken to fix the rate of compensation that makes we law higher ways the House hat the House has the House had been seen to the House had been also because the House had been also been also because the House had been also been a sation, that makes no law binding upon the House, but the House itself must pass upon the question in a general law. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that the rules and regulations of the Department fix this matter. Suppose that the Department in its estimate had fixed these salaries at $1,500 a year. Does the gentleman mean to say that because the Committee on Appropriations followed the estimate of the Department therefore the House has no power to increase or diminish the amount according to existing law? Why, sir, increase or diminish the amount according to existing law? Why, sir, such an idea as that would make the appropriation bill of the last year a fixed law like that of the Medes and Persians, with no power on the part of the Government to overturn; or it would make the interpretation of the Department such a law.

There are many parts of this bill to which we intend to propose amendments, not only to this, but to several other portions. I think it extremely questionable whether the sixty-nine agencies which the Committee on Appropriations have appropriated for are properly apportioned. Surely because the Department has undertaken to say that they would limit the expenditures to a certain amount, and have that they would limit the expenditures to a certain amount, and have sent their estimates to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations have probably in many respects followed those estimates implicitly, therefore the House has no power to change it under the general law read by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Baker,] which makes the maximum salary $1,800 a year. To say so would be to make the report of the Appropriation Committee, and the bill passed in accordance with that report, an unchangeable law.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It seems to me that if gentlemen who are advocating this amendment accommiss their nurroese they would rather

Mr. MAGINNIS. It seems to me that if gentlemen who are advocating this amendment accomplish their purpose, they would rather injure than benefit the Indian service. It is true that some time ago all these salaries were fixed at $1,500 a year. But it is also true that there are a great many agencies which are of much more importance than others. In order, then, to graduate the agencies in accordance with the importance of the duties there performed, the Secretary of the Interior recommended and the Committee on Appropriations of a former House reported a bill arranging the salaries of the agents in some sort of accordance with the importance of the agents. Some of the salaries were reduced below $1,500 a year and others, as they should be, were placed above $1,500.

Now, if we say that the provision of the Revised Statutes is to be the law governing this case, it seems to me that by bringing down the salaries of the important agencies to $1,500 a year we would do a great deal more harm than if we were to allow the salaries to stand as the Committee on Appropriations have reported in their bill. Some of them are now $2,000 a year; some of them are below $1,500. If you think those are too low, no amendment will be in order to raise the salaries to $1,500, and the only effect of the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] would be to cut down the higher salaries to $1,500.

gentleman from Indiana [181]. Dakan higher salaries to $1,500.

Mr. BELFORD. I have not been a member of this House long enough to understand all the parliamentary technicalities that seem to control matters here. I rise for the purpose of asking the Chair one question, in order that by the answer I may be guided in my action hereafter. I want to know whether this House is absolutely bound to refrain from altering the recommendations made to it by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. BELFORD. That committee comes in here with a bill recommending that the salaries of these Indian agents be fixed at a certain

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman permit me now?
Mr. BELFORD. Certainly.
Mr. BAKER. I understand that the House is bound to follow the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations just so far as it and no further.

Mr. BELFORD. Very well; that is what I want to get at. This Committee on Appropriations reports a bill fixing the salary of Indian agents, we will say at $1,000 a year. A member of the House, anxious to carry out the recommendations of the Interior Department, proposes that that salary be increased to $1,500. Thereupon a member of the Committee on Appropriations rises to a point of order, and says that the House is absolutely bound hand and foot by the dictation of the thirteen despots who constitute the Committee on Appropriations

Mr. ATKINS. Oh, no; there are fifteen of them.
Mr. BELFORD. Yes; and eight of this number rule the repreentatives from thirty-eight States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact known to the country that for the last three years the Commissioner on Indian Affairs has importuned Congress to increase the salaries of these Indian agents. He stated that there were grave and important reasons why Congress should appropriate sufficient money to employ the best talent in this country to preside at these different agencies. I think it was in his last report that he suggested that Congress should place at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior $30,000 to be distributed by him among these various agents as a constal for maintribute sortions against these dis these various agents as a reward for meritorious services at these distant agencies. Why has not the committee given some heed to these recommendations? The duties of the agent are exacting and important; stationed for the most part in the heart of a wilderness, practically shut out from communication with civilized communities, deprived of the society and association of those with whom he has been accustomed to associate, denied all protection save that which springs from the fear the Indian may entertain for the national authority. We charge him with the government and control of a race, savage and brutal by nature; a race accustomed to respect nothing but force, and we expect him unaided and alone to conduct this brutal but force, and we expect him unaided and alone to conduct this brutal and savage race from barbarism to civilization. The compensation allowed is a bar against the employment of great talent. Men of brains and character, men capable of awing and controlling a turbulent and restless tribe are not willing to assume the perils of so hazardous a position for the miserable pittance which Congress allows. Whatever changes you may introduce into your Indian policy they will be unaccompanied with beneficial results unless you attach to the office of agent a salary large enough to command the ability of men absolutely competent, and then make their tenure so certain and permanent that the fear of removal may not be added to the other fears nent that the fear of removal may not be added to the other fears and alarms which environ them. A man fit to be governor of a wild and barbarous race, whether it be white, black, or red, is necessarily a man of great executive ability, of unquestioned courage, and of unconquerable will; lacking in any one of these attributes, he is destined to fail.

The idea of sending a man and his family out to the desert to superintend a part of the seventy-five thousand wild Indians who roam over it, and who are ignorant of the most elementary principles of civilization; who despise labor; who value the earth simply for what is on it, and not for its uses and capabilities, and having him remain there as the embassador of this great nation to the Indian nation at $1,000 a year, is abhorrent to my sense of right and justice. I have no respect for such economy. It carries in it the seeds of the failure that has cursed and disgraced your whole Indian system. I think it proper that we should pay to our agents who go to the frontier to preside over and control these Indians a liberal salary in order that we may get good men—men of acknowledged ability, of unquestioned integrity, of undoubted courage, who while able to preside over the fortunes and interests of the Indians may have the courage to represent in a befitting manner the dignity of this great nation.

Now it seems to me that the point taken by my friend from Indians resent in a befitting manner the dignity of this great nation.

Now it seems to me that the point taken by my friend from Indiana is well taken. The Revised Statutes fix the salary of each Indian agent at $1,500 a year. The Committee on Appropriations in this bill say, that notwithstanding this positive declaration of law found upon the statute-book, the salary of these officers shall be fixed at $1,000. If there is any new legislation it is on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, who are seeking to introduce new legislation by changing existing law. I have said this much generally because this Indian question is viewed very differently in the East from what it is in the West. We are in practical relation with this people on the frontier; we have gotten far beyond the poetry and sentiment of the question, and look at it in a practical light. The safety of our homes, the peace of our communities, the growth of our settlements, the westward course of our civilization, all depend on the treatment which this Government accords the Indian and the agents sent to control him. He is a barbarian, to be governed by force and sent to control him. He is a barbarian, to be governed by force and not sentiment, and we need agents who represent the power rather than the sentiment of the nation—agents who bring to the discharge of their labors a large intelligence, and, in my judgment, such cannot be secured for $1,000 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. To any gentleman who considers this subject fairly and calmly it is a matter of amusement to observe the premises which and calmly it is a matter of amusement to observe the premises which gentlemen construct from their fancy as to the power of the Committee on Appropriations, the propositions which they make to this House, and the conclusions which they deduce from their premises with a flourish of trumpets, as though they had accomplished some great triumph, when they have only done what any boy of ten years of age is quite capable of doing. The gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. Belford,] simply because heretofore on an appropriation bill the salaries of Indian agents have been fixed, branches into a tirade as to the power of the Committee on Appropriations. Why, sir, he ought to understand that we come before this House with our recommendations simply as other committees do.

ought to understand that we come before this House with our recommendations simply as other committees do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thought the Chair would give me the same latitude he extended to the gentleman from Colorado when he pictured the Indian agents roaming about among the Indians, and when he denounced the Committee on Appropriations.

the indian agents roaming about among the indians, and when he denounced the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sympathy with a younger member of the House, but not so much with an older one. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, sir, I submit.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia to state the basis on which the committee has made this apportionment of the salaries of Indian agents—whether it is on the basis of the number of Indians in the particular tribes.

the number of Indians in the particular tribes.

Mr. BLOUNT. In answer to the gentleman I have simply this to say: During the Forty-fourth Congress, after conference with the officers of the Indian Department and an examination of a great multitude of details, which I could not state here in a day if I were allowed to do so, these salaries were raised. They are not rearranged every year. The case is the same with these as in reference to the salaries, for instance, of our consuls, which are fixed at one place at one rate, and at another place at another. We have not seen fit, in view of the fact that gentlemen on the other side of the House, aided by many on this side, have seemed to be quite jealous of the Committee on Appropriations, declaring that they were undertaking to do too much

Mr. BENNETT. I simply asked a question. I would like to ask one other—whether these salaries as fixed in this bill are as recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. BLÖUNT. I simply say to the gentleman that the committee have desired some changes; but as gentlemen on the other side have for some time, especially during the consideration of the rules, objected to our doing anything except reporting here the salaries fixed by law, we have yielded much. There are many changes which we might have made in this and in other bills, but we have respected what we regarded as the sentiment of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I simply wish to refer to one or two agencies in

Mr. BLOUNT. Perhaps it would suit the gentleman better to take up these matters in detail when we reach them. We are now on a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT. I am aware of that. Mr. HOOKER. But the point of order applies to all the other cases

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that; still the question whether the law fixing this salary is right or wrong does not come up.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that the question before us is whether the Committee of the Whole has now, under the rules, the privilege of considering any amendments to this bill increasing any of these salaries. I thought this was the time to make the suggestions I might desire to make in regard to that matter. I notice here—
Mr. BLOUNT. With great respect, I submit that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish simply to say if this question is determined favorably on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, we will have no opportunity of showing the injustice of some of the provisions in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will look further, he will find some agencies are as high as $2,000 a year.

Mr. BENNETT. I am aware of that.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia whether it will be in order to move to reduce those two-thousand-dollar agencies when we come to those paragraphs in the bill?

cies when we come to those paragraphs in the bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. It will be if your Indian Committee see fit to do so.

Mr. HOOKER. Cannot an individual do it? Do you mean to say under the rules it cannot be done except on motion of the Indian

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit under the rules it cannot be done other-

Mr. HOOKER. Why, that is a horrible idea. [Laughter.]
Mr. BENNETT. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, if I am proceeding in order, that the salaries should not be graded in these Indian agencies by the number of Indians who may be included under the care of the agent. I wish to call attention to a few of these Indian agencies simply by way of illustrating my point. Here is the Crow Creek agency at $1,400, one of the most peaceable agencies on the Missouri

River, one of the most manageable, where there is little or no difficulty in dealing with the Indians. Here is the Sisseton agency on the eastern border of Dakota, where you give the agent $1,500. That agency is surrounded by civilization and settlement. It is no more It is no more trouble to conduct the affairs of that Indian agency than it is the business of an ordinary retail dry-goods store.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this open to discussion under the rules?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to hear the point that is made by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BENNETT. The Lower Brulé is put down at $1,200, an agency with the most intractable Indians on the Upper Missouri River, the hardest agency to handle, with Indians warlike and unmanageable. hardest agency to handle, with Indians warlike and unmanageable. These Indians are beligerent; it is an unpleasant place to live, and it is hard to get a man to go there to take charge of the agency. It is necessary to have a capable man for the purpose of managing those Indians. Every year half of them run off to the hostiles if they are not carefully watched and looked after. You want a good man at that agency and every agency of a like character, and I venture to say you cannot get such a man at $1,200 a year.

I started out by saying, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the number of Indians at an agency which should determine the salary of the agent, because at all these agencies it requires the whole time and attention of the agent to properly care for the Indians placed under his charge.

of the agent to properly care for the Indians placed under his charge. To say you will give one man $2,250 a year and another $1,200 a year is simply to make a bid for incompetent and inefficient men at these Indian agencies. The result will be that the Government will get men who will not take the proper care in the management of the agencies.

I wish to say, with all due respect to the Committee on Appropriations, and I have no war to make on that committee, that there are some things in connection with Indian affairs and the management of Indians on the frontier which the honorable gentlemen who compose that committee may not be fully advised of. There are some things which this House would like to know and to understand, and, in order to reach that information and that it should be brought intelligently before the House, it is necessary that gentlemen who do know something about these agencies, their wants and their necessities, should have an opportunity of presenting amendments to this bill so it may be perfected, and in that way advance alike the inter-ests of the Government and the Indians.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire especially to defend the Committee on Appropriations so far as this bill is concerned, but I do invite the attention of the gentleman who has just resumed his seat and the gentleman from Colorado to a suggestion which I am about to make. I ask the gentleman from Colorado whether in his judgment it would be better in the distribution of these salaries we should be governed by the statute which has been read by the gentleman from Indiana, or whether the scheme which has been presented by from Indiana, or whether the scheme which has been presented by the Committee on Appropriations is not a better scheme—whether the scheme presented by the Committee on Appropriations is not a better scheme than for us to act entirely within the letter and within the spirit of the Revised Statutes which my friend from Indiana has read? Now, it is well enough to assail the Committee on Appropriations on this question. I undertake to say, from the examination I have given it, that the scheme they have presented is better than the Revised Statutes. They have acted under the rules and have made the same appropriations which had been made in the past and they the same appropriations which had been made in the past, and they have not attempted to repeal this provision of the Revised Statutes; and if this scheme goes out on this point of order, or if this point of order is ruled in favor of the gentleman from Indiana, this scheme

Now, I say that the gentleman from Colorado should not come in here and criticise the Committee on Appropriations for its action in this matter. If you want a new arrangement of this matter or if you want a general law, why do you not bring in a bill here, a general statute, and pass it over to the Committee on Appropriations, and say, "Make your appropriations in accordance with that general statute, which we have enacted for your guidance?"

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to sale him general statute.

ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Not now.

Mr. HOOKER. That is exactly what the gentleman from Indiana proposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will take the Committee on Indian Affairs as an illustration. That committee has full jurisdiction of the subject-mat-ter presented here. We have been in session for a considerable length of time. The Committee on Indian Affairs have had the power to investigate this subject-matter and readjust the whole scheme of the salaries of these agents; and if they had proposed a bill of that kind and passed it, then there would have been nothing for the Committee on Appropriations to do but to appropriate the money to pay the salaries in accordance with the law.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the gentleman from New York permitme to ask him a question? The gentleman from New York speaks of a general law. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] called the attention of the committee to a statute now in force and on the statute-books which the Committee on Appropriations has not seen fit to regard in making my this bill up this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. They ignored that statute, because they have done it before in making up the appropriation bills, and felt warranted by former precedents.

Mr. HOOKER. A good reason!

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, if the point of order is raised here that the salaries are to be fixed in accordance with that law, they should all be placed at $1,500.

Mr. BLOUNT. Some of them are now receiving as much as $2,000

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; many of them reach $2,000, and the question I ask the gentleman from Colorado is if he does not believe that justice will be done by regulating these salaries in accordance with the duties imposed upon these agents?

Mr. BELFORD. I regard all of these salaries as entirely inadequate. I do not believe we pay a single agent the salary that the Government ought to pay for the service performed. I do not intend to reflect upon the Committee on Appropriations, but I insist that so far as these Indian agencies are concerned the Government is not paying a decent salary or a sum sufficient to justify competent men in accepting the position.

Mr. HISCOCK. I agree with the gentleman from Colorado that these salaries are all too small, but I believe the Committee on Approximation.

propriations have gone as far as they can consistently go, or as far propriations have gone as far as they can consistently go, or as far as they can with propriety go in violation of statute law. And I say to gentlemen here that it is entirely out of place for them to arraign the Committee on Appropriations, when the fact is that the Committee on Indian Affairs could have brought in a bill fixing the salaries and making a scale of salaries appropriate for these different men, and that would have left nothing to do but for the Committee on Appropriations to provide the money in accordance with the salaries fixed therein. But the Committee on Indian Affairs have brought in no such bill.

There was some question asked me by the gentleman from Missis-sippi which I did not answer at the time, though I did not mean to be discourteous to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I did not suppose the gentleman from New York intended to be discourteous. My question was simply this: The gentleman from Indiana referred to the general statute upon the subject regulating these salaries, and the gentleman from New York, in reply thereto, said the Committee on Appropriations have gone as far as they ought to go in fixing these salaries. Now suppose that the Committee on Appropriations had reduced the salary at this agency to $300, does the gentleman mean to say they would have had the right to do it?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt they would have had the right to do it.

Mr. HOOKER. Do not you think they ought to do it?
Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt that it ought to be done; but the

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt that it ought to be done; but the committee has simply followed the precedent of past years in making up this appropriation bill, and felt warranted in fixing the salaries as stated in the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from New York pretend to say that if the Committee on Appropriations had failed to appropriate last year money to pay the salaries of the Supreme Court judges or the President that they would have been justified or would have had warranted to the salaries of the Supreme Court for the salaries of the salaries of the Supreme Court for the salaries of t resident that they would have been justified or would have had warrant for failing to do it during the present Congress?

Mr. HISCOCK. I say it would have been their duty to have done it. And I say that if there was a general statute fixing the salaries, then there would have been nothing for the Committee on Appropriations to do but to appropriate the money for the payment

Mr. HOOKER. If the Committee on Indian Affairs had introduced a bill here of the character the gentleman refers to it would have found its tomb in the Committee of the Whole or on the Calendar, found its tomb in the Committee of the Whole or on the Calendar, and the House would never have heard anything further of it. And the only way that we can practically reach this question is to reach it in an appropriation bill in this manner. Unless you get the law on an appropriation bill you never can get it passed.

Mr. HISCOCK. If a bill brought in here by the Committee on Indian Affairs would have met that fate it would have been the fault of the House or the fault of the rules; it would not have been the

Mr. HOOKER. If the Committee on Indian Affairs had brought in such a bill it would have been in accordance with the law as it now exists in the Revised Statutes as pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust my friend from Indiana will withdraw his amendment, for the reason that I believe the scheme which has been amendment, for the reason that I believe the scheme which has been adopted by the Committee on Appropriations is a more just and fair one than we would obtain if we complied strictly with the statute to which he has called the attention of the House. I believe that so far as the Committee on Appropriations has departed from that statute it has been in the interest of liberality and of grading justly and fairly the salaries of these men; and it has gone as far as it could in that direction in view of the existing law.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to make a statement, and I shall follow that statement by withdrawing the amendment I have offered.

I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Appropriations would have been ready to acquiesce in the request of the Department, a request that grows out of the experience of that service, and would have allowed an increase to have been made in the salaries of certain of these agents, the gross amount of which would have been under $3,000. That is all we have asked in the way of increase.

I was one of the gentlemen that spent a considerable time in conjunction with the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs in readjusting the schedule of salaries as they now exist in the appropriation law, and which did not meet the entire approbation either of myself or of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The distribution was made of the whole amount of money required to pay the agents at the salary of $1,500, amounting in all to about $102,000. That amount of $102,000 was distributed by paying some agents $1,000, some $1,100, some $1,200, some $1,300, some $1,400, some $1,500, and as high as $2,200; in the aggregate, however, only equaling the amount that would have been required if all the salaries had remained at $1,500. We did this at the earnest solicitation of the Department. It was our junction with the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs in readjusting did this at the earnest solicitation of the Department. It was our belief, and it is still the belief of the Department, that this distribution was wise, but it is felt that the amount ought to be increased $2,000 or $3,000.

But, Mr. Chairman, as I understand that, if the amendment I have offered is held to be in order, a point of order will be made against the salaries at all of the agencies where the amount fixed by the bill the salaries at all of the agencies where the amount fixed by the bill reported exceeds $1,500, thereby, if that should be done, doing very great injury to the service, I feel as though it were my duty in the interest of the service to withdraw the amendment I have offered and to allow the scheme to stand as it has been reported. It does not meet my approbation. I could wish that the amount could be increased by about $3,000 in the particular cases in which I propose to increase the amount in the bill. This would add to the efficiency of the service far more than the increased expense. But in order that a greater damage shall not be done the service by striking at those agencies where the amount exceeds $1,500, I think we had better adopt the scheme which would leave it the same as it would be if we followed the Revised Statutes, allowing $1,500 to each agent.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I renew the amendment.
Mr. BAKER. It will do a very great injury to the service if those agents who receive above $1,500 should have their salaries reduced by the excess above that amount.

by the excess above that amount.

Mr. WELLS. I make the point of order on the amendment as renewed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to give his opinion on the point of order raised. The Chair has been referred to a section of the Revised Statutes fixing, as has been alleged, the salaries of Indian agents, and it is claimed that that is the existing law. If that be true as a legal proposition, then the point of order would not lie. But the question is, is that true?

Laws may be expressly and directly repealed, and they may be repealed by implication. It is true that repeals by implication are not favored, and that statutes claimed to be repealing statutes are to be strictly construed. The law in this case to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] has referred has not been expressly repealed. The question then is, has it been repealed by implication? The Chair assumes this to be the fact: that since the Forty-fourth Congress continuously the rate of salaries as found in the present bill has appeared from time to time in the different appropriation bills. Under tinuously the rate of salaries as found in the present bill has appeared from time to time in the different appropriation bills. Under the existing law these are the salaries as now fixed. This having been continuously so for years, having been acted upon by the Executive Departments of the Government, having been acted on by the parties directly interested, and in addition it being shown that in no instance has a claim or a representation been made by the Department on the writer since the Earth Courth Course was for a definition.

in no instance has a claim or a representation been made by the Departments or otherwise since the Forty-fourth Congress for a deficiency, the Chair thinks he is warranted in assuming that by this continuous action of the legislative department of the Government in connection with the action of the executive department of the Government the law as it appears in this section of the Revised Statutes has been repealed, and is not the existing law of the land. If the Chair held that it was the existing law, then the point or argument made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] would hold good, and the Chair would be compelled to hold that every increase of salary that has been made since the date of the act referred to in the Revised Statutes and any increase in this bill going beyond the sum of $1,500 would be out of order. Looking, then, to the construction given to the salary act by the action of all the Departments of the Government and the parties directly interested, the Chair holds that the appropriation made for the last fiscal year is partments of the Government and the parties directly interested, the Chair holds that the appropriation made for the last fiscal year is the existing law, and that therefore the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] is well taken.

Mr. BRENTS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BELFORD. Oh, no; let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The Delegate from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of this committee? mittee?

Mr. POEHLER. Does the Chair decide that this committee can-not increase any amount reported by the Committee on Appropria-

The CHAIRMAN. Without qualification of words, yes.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the Chair also hold that the salaries cannot be reduced?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so hold.

Mr. BRENTS. I withdraw my appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal having been withdrawn, the Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following: At the Devil's Lake agency, at $1,200.

Mr. HOOKER. By instruction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Mr. HOOKEK. By instruction of the Committee on Indian Analis, I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$1,200" and inserting "$1,600."

Mr. WELLS. I make the same point of order on that amendment that I did on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. And, for the reasons already given, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I felt bound to offer the amendment, although I knew it would come under the ruling which the Chair had made.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

At the White River agency, at $1,400.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to strike out the clause just read, providing for an agency at White River. It is well known to this House and to the country that during the month of September last, Mr. M. C. Meeker, late agent at the White River agency, was massacred in cold blood by these Indians. It is a well-known fact that at that time these White River Utes broke into the Government store-house and carried off all the Government goods. It is well known that at that time they fired a number of Government buildings. It is well known that they not only murdered Mr. Meeker, but they practiced the most that they not only murdered Mr. Meeker, but they practiced the most atrocious horrors on the employés at that agency.

It is well known that since September last these villainous Indians have not been at the White River agency, but a part of them have been down at Los Pinos, and a part of them in the extreme southern part of Colorado engaged in murdering our citizens. I see no necessity for perpetuating this agency at White River. First, because there are no Indians there at the present time, and I cannot conceive of the hardihood of even an official leech who would go to White River as an agent to represent the beauties of sentimentality and gush on the Indian question. It seems to me, therefore, that we should abolish this agency.

Who is to be benefited by it? The Indians are not there; they are down in the southern part of Colorado looking for scalps, or else over in Utah, or up among the Sioux Indians. I say that in the interest of economy, retrenchment, and reform I am in favor of abolishing this agency and allowing these "gentle savages," who add to their character of murderers that of thieves, to shin for themselves in the western country and earn their living as other people do.

I am opposed to the whole system of legalized pauperism which has been santioned by this Government for so many years. If these mild been sanctioned by this Government for so many years. If these mild savages can murder Indian agents and rob the Government stores, I say that they should be left to shift for themselves. Inasmuch as there is no necessity for a mere agency on paper, I say this should be abolished.

Mr. WELLS. The Committee on Appropriations were governed in this matter by the recommendations of the Indian Bureau. The act-ing Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the Committee on Appropriations a few weeks ago and he made no recommendation for abolishing this agency. Personally I care nothing about it.

Mr. BELFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to state that there are any Indians at all at this agency at the present time?

Mr. WELLS. I know nothing about that. I am only saying that the Indian Breson saled for this agency.

the Indian Bureau asked for this agency. The Department may have some reason for maintaining this agency. So far as I am personally concerned I care nothing about it.

Mr. BELFORD. There has been none there for the last four or five months.

Mr. WELLS. If it is deemed necessary when the bill goes to the

Mr. WELLS. If it is deemed necessary when the bill goes to the Senate this provision can be stricken out.

Mr. BAKER. I trust the suggestion of my inflammatory friend from Colorado [Mr. Belford] will not be rushed through with the hot haste he desires, for the reason that we have the general statute that authorizes and requires the President of the United States to discontinue any agency at any point whenever in his judgment it can be discontinued without injury to the service. I will read it; it is certiful 2053 of the Beying Statutes. is section 2053 of the Revised Statutes:

It shall be the duty of the President to dispense with the services of such Indian agents and superintendents as may be practicable; and where it is practicable he shall require the same person to perform the duties of two agencies or superintendencies for one salary.

Now, if this committee, without any recommendation from the Interior Department or from the Executive, shall vote to discontinue this agency it would be a most unprecedented thing. It is my judgment that we had better pass this bill in accordance with existing law and in accordance with the recommendations of the Department, and leave to the President under the general statute to discontinue this agency when it can be discontinued; for the law makes it his duty to do so, and we have no reason to suppose that he will not perform his duty.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I would like to inquire whether the Indian agents have not discontinued this agency, without any regard to the Revised

Mr. BELFORD. Of course they did—last September.
Mr. BAKER. In reference to that, I wish to answer that whether or not it is permanently discontinued is a question that does not depend upon the fact whether these Indians are having trouble with their white neighbors who trespass on them. After this agreement has been ratified and become a law, they may, in the judgment of the President, be brought back there, or they may be located elsewhere. It may be important and necessary that we should have this agent, although he may perform his duties at some other point, the statute authorizing the transfer from one point to another.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to know whether the gentleman thinks Mr. Meeker and his family "trespassed" on these "gentle savages." I would like the gentleman to point out one single instance in which any one in the State of Colorado has "trespassed" on the Indians.

Indians.

Mr. BAKER. It is wholly immaterial what my judgment may be in reference to the origin of this trouble with the Utes. But the fact that these Utes have had association with the white people from their earliest settlement beyond the Mississippi River down to a very recent time, when their territory was trespassed upon, is pretty strong reason to lead me to think they are like the lamb in the story of the lamb and the wolf.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Colorado whether there has been a treaty made by the Government with these

Mr. BELFORD. There was a treaty made in 1868.
Mr. HISCOCK. Has one been made since?
Mr. BELFORD. Yes, a treaty has been made with the head-men of the Ute tribe by the Secretary of the Interior, which has been submitted to both branches of Congress, the bill having passed in the Senate and being now before the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand, a treaty has been made with these tribes, and the Department, in carrying out that treaty when ratified, may beyond doubt need this agency.

Mr. BELFORD. No; the treaty contemplates the abolition of this

Mr. BELFORD. No; agency at White River.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then it would be abolished under the Revised Statutes

Mr. BAKER. It would be abolished by the treaty when confirmed. The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Belford, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eleven for the tribes in Dakota, namely, two at Fort Berthold and one each at Yankton, Crow Creek, Standing Rock, Cheyenne River, Sisseton, Devil's Lake, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Lower Brulé agencies, at $300 per annum each, $3,300.

Mr. ERRETT. I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to move to amend so as to make this paragraph read:

Twelve for the tribes in Dakota, namely: two each at Fort Berthold and Pine Ridge, and one each at Yankton, Crow Creek, &c.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this increase the appropriation?
Mr. ERRETT. It increases this appropriation $300; but another appropriation on the next page is reduced $300.
The amendment of Mr. Errett was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Six for the tribes in Nebraska, to be assigned to such agencies as the Secretary the Interior may direct, at $300 per annum each, $1,900.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend by striking out $1,900 and inserting

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional payment of the said interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000; in all, $26,800.

eretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000; in all, $25,800.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to withdraw my point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I am not fully informed in reference to Indian affairs, but it does strike me, on reading this bill, that it is a singular production, and if not excused by precedents would seem a very marvel of legislation. Three hundred dollars appropriated at this place, and $300 at that, to provide for the payment of interpreters! Here an agency and there an agency all over the western country, and large amounts appropriated to pay agents; and an aggregate amount of $5,000,000 is appropriated to keep up a lot of paupers, who should go to work and earn their bread like white people. This is an extraordinary species of legislation, with which I have no sympathy. When my colleague, [Mr. WRIGHT,] in a time of great distress among our own people, the industrious people of the country, made an effort to relieve them by an appropriation of lands and money, his proposition met with no favor in the House. But few gentlemen voted for it, met with no favor in the House. But few gentlemen voted for it, and it was alleged that the Government should not be a paternal government in its relations with its citizens, in which view I fully concurred. But here comes tribe after tribe of Indians, who have muscles and sinews and strength, who have all the requisite ability to work and earn their livelihood, and yet the bounty of the Government must be extended to them year after year out of the taxes paid by the people!

I have moved the amendment to strike out the pending paragraph,
Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of putting myself on the record as expressing my entire dissent from measures of this character. I think that the Government of the United States ought to permit these people to adapt themselves to the civilization which prevails in this country. Any Indian may go and acquire a piece of land, go upon it, improve it, and maintain himself and his family by honest labor. I protest against this whole scheme of taxing the industries of this country to maintain a lot of paupers in this way. I think it is a shame and disgrace; and I object to it. I want to put my protest on

Mr. HAZELTON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment, to explain to the House our treaty relations with the various

Mr. BAYNE. Ido not care anything about our treaty relations. I see here references to treaties. I know commissions are being appointed to make so-called treaties. I know that these tribes of worthless dependents are dignified into independent nations, as it were, treating with the United States Government, and acquiring rights; and all the while, under the obligations of these treaties, the Government of the United States is paying to them millions and millions of dollars every year. This is not right. It is a gross injustice, and this money could be infinitely better applied in paying off the nation's real debt.

Mr. HAZELTON. What are you going to do about it?
Mr. BAYNE. Why all this talk in behalf of the Indians? In the West, where they are known, it is regarded, as has been well said by the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. Belforn,] as an exhibition of "gushing sentimentality." It is nothing but gush and sentimentality. How are you going to ameliorate the condition of these people if you keep on in this way? You deprive them of the great educator, nekeep on in this way? You deprive them of the great educator, necessity. Necessity is what develops and makes men and civilization. The men who landed at Plymouth Rock had no government to provide bounties for them. They had to contend with a barren soil and a cold climate and work their way through trials. Look at their achievements. I tell you that if you pay these bounties year after year to these Indians you never in God's world will make them any better than they are. They must be taught self-reliance. There is but one teacher of that—necessity. As long as you support them as papers, just so long will they be paquers. paupers, just so long will they be paupers.
[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in reference to this motion to strike out lines 189 to 192, inclusive—

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman from Mississippi proceeds, I wish to withdraw my point of order, as it seems we may have a revival

Mr. HOOKER. It is the first instance of liberality on the part of the Appropriation Committee, and I commend the gentleman from Georgia for the spirit in that behalf which he has evinced.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am glad the gentleman has found something to Mr. BLOUNT. I am glad the gentleman has found something to commend outside of himself.

Mr. HOOKER. When I do, I will do it with the greatest grace in the world. I will not withhold from the gentleman from Georgia anything he is entitled to. He is distinguished for his liberality, and especially so in appropriation bills. That committee limited the general debate on this bill to half an hour, and he and the gentleman from Indiana, also a member of the committee, took it all themselves and, as for the balance of us, said, oh! why, we will hear you in the Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman was in the House, or I suppose he was in the House, and did not claim the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. You and the gentleman from Indiana have occu-

Mr. HOOKER. You and the gentleman from Indiana have occupied all the time you have conceded the general debate on this bill appropriating $5,000,000. Now, I want to say in reference to this measure, it is in keeping with the whole of the appropriation bills coming from that committee. Never has there been a bill presented to Congress which clothed the Department with such absolute power as this bill clothes them, and gives such command of money. Not only this clause, but when you turn to the other clauses of the bill, (and we have scanned it in the Indian Committee,) never has there been such an appropriation bill which voted to the Department of the Interior such unlimited power as this does. Interior such unlimited power as this does

Here it proposes to give the Secretary of the Interior under this provision of law an additional $4,000—

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.
Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman mean to say this appropriation here is the first ever allowed?

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, no. I mean to say you committed the same crime for the last four years.

Mr. BLOUNT. And does not the gentleman know it has been done all the time?

Mr. HOOKER. I protested against it all the time. I protest against it now, and I am going to be heard under the five-minute rule which the liberality of your committee allows me to be heard under.

I wish to say in reference to it, Mr. Chairman, there ought not to be an appropriation of a dollar of the people's money except for some be an appropriation of a dollar of the people's money except for some specific object. The same rule which applies for the military appropriations under the charge of the Military Committee, and which applies to naval appropriations, Mr. Chairman, under the committee of which you are the distinguished chairman, ought to be applied to the Indian appropriation bill. Accusations have been made in reference to these Indian matters recently, and you had a Commissioner of Indian Affairs dismissed from his position. Why? Because you clothed the Department, under the bills which give them unlimited command of money, you clothed them with authority you have not given to any other Department under the Government. That is the reason.

Why, sir, you appropriate $7,500 in this bill for ten inspectors, and for the last three years you have been appropriating $15,000 for these ten inspectors, who inspect everybody and everything, who go to every agency. You have modestly reduced it now to $7,500. Why did you do it? It is a condemnation of your former action when you gave them $15,000; and this appropriation of $4,000 over and above what is necessary to pay interpreters, in the discretion of the Department, is in keeping with that appropriation.

is in keeping with that appropriation.

If you want to have the Secretary of the Interior and his Department inspected, why do you not have ten inspectors for the Treasury Department, ten for the War Department, and ten for the Post-Office Department? Why not enlarge the number of men whose salaries you will pay in the shape of expenses for public service rendered while traveling over the country? This bill contains many other enormities. The training the grant property of the contract is but one ties. That which the gentleman has moved to strike out is but one of them. I intend to speak on all of them, every one of them, and I intend to call the attention of the House to them. I intend that the Indian Committee shall not be responsible if you do retain clauses in the bill making appropriations without a specific object, without enu-merating specifically the purposes for which the money of the people is to be taken. If you need interpreters, employ them, pay them according to the time they serve, and do not give the Department unlimited control and command of money in reference to this matter. I repeat, sir, why appropriate $4,000 in addition for these interpreters? If you need interpreters for the Indians, why not say for such an agency you need an interpreter and you will give so much, and for such another agency you need an interpreter and will give so much,

Why give this unlimited control to anybody, to any man, to any head of a Department? It is in violation of the true rule which should govern this Congress in appropriating the people's money. That money, Mr. Chairman, should be appropriated for specific purposes—purposes clearly indicated and fully set forth in the bill and poses—purposes clearly indicated and fully set forth in the bill and expressed beyond the possibility of doubt or controversy. Hence it is sir, that in England when they are making appropriations for the sup port of the army they make it but for a single year; and when they appropriate for the support of the army in India they deny the government the power, despotic and all-powerful as it is—though not as despotic and all-powerful as some of the inside corporations in this House—despotic and all-powerful as it is, it dare not use a dollar of the expression in India for any other property. the appropriation in India for any other purpose.

the appropriation in India for any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. HOOKER. I hope the committee will, by unanimous consent, extend my time a little further.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move the gentleman's time be extended.
Mr. COX. I take the floor and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I thank the gentleman from New York.
Mr. WELLS. Let us know how long the gentleman intends to occurry the floor.

occupy the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. I will get through with what I have to say in a short time

The CHAIRMAN. The committee cannot extend the time. Mr. WELLS. The gentleman will have many opportunities before the bill is passed to say what he has to say.

Mr. HOOKER. If the Committee on Appropriations is so anxious to occupy the floor I will give way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

The gentleman from New York having taken the floor and yielded his time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I have the floor, then, in the time of the gentleman from New York, who has yielded it to me?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in all seriousness that every clause in this bill deserves the earnest attention and consideration of this committee. It deserves it for this reason, that the Committee on committee. It deserves it for this reason, that the Committee on Appropriations have in this appropriation bill gone on as they have done for the last four years making appropriations according to the estimates of the head of the Department of the Interior and the clerks employed by him without reference to the specific objects for which the appropriations should be made. Every item of expenditure should be specified precisely as I have heard the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs urge that everything appropriated for the Navy should be specified, and citing on this floor the action of the British Parliament in that respect. There they are required to give specific items. Here we have an item of $4,000 for these interpreters, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It is very easy to say, if you need an interpreter at this point you should pay him so much; and if you need an interpreter at that point you should pay him so much. point you should pay him so much.

While you give to this Department and this Indian Bureau these five and six millions of dollars to be expended in the large discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs it is no wonder that you require to have a Commissioner sometimes dismissed; it is no wonder that you hear that contracts are made with parties who contract to furnish one sort of goods to the Indians and furnish another. It is no wonder that the newspapers are full all over the country of accounts of illegal expenditures made in the Indian Bureau. But if Congress will specify precisely what an appropria-tion is made for, and will require all executive officers who have con-trol of this money, and its disbursement, to account to Congress for every dollar they expend, and the mode and manner in which it is expended, then there would be no room for these frauds in the Indian

I fully intend before this bill is disposed of, and I give notice to the gentleman having charge of it, that at the proper time and at the proper point, I intend to apply the incisive pruning-knife to this whole system of fraud and robbery and peculation which has characterized the management of Indian affairs. I propose to do this by an amendment providing that on and after the expiration of the next fiscal year the management of Indian affairs shall be transferred to the War Department, where the responsibility will be in one person and where there will be a class of agents who will command not only the confidence of the people they represent, but the confidence of the Indians themselves.

I shall never forget when the commission was sent out to ascertain what had been the mode and manner of conducting Indian affairs what had been the mode and manner of conducting Indian affairs and we were interrogating a chief, and asked him a question as to the manner in which the affairs of the Sioux, the largest of the savage tribes of Indians, had been conducted, how he said, "We never had an agent who did not tell us a lie except when we had Captain Lee, of the Army; we knew whenever he promised anything we could rely upon it." And so they said of that gallant soldier and distinguished general who has earned more honor in Indian wars carried on among the rocks and in the wilderness where there is no large. on among the rocks and in the wilderness where there is no laurelwreath to be wound around the brow of the conqueror. No man has done better for his country while at the same time he obtained the good-will of the Indians than General Crook, who is now, and has so long been, commanding on the frontier.

We want a set of men to conduct Indian matters who will be plain, straightforward, and direct in their dealings; who will be honest to the Government and honest to the Indian.

Mr. HISCOCK. As bearing on this question of fraud and this matter of stealing, which it is stated has received the indorsement of the Committee on Appropriations, I will read the provision in the Revised

SEC. 2068. An interpreter shall be allowed to each agency. Where there are different tribes in the same agency, speaking different languages, one interpreter may be allowed, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for each of such tribes. Interpreters shall be nominated, by the proper agents, to the Department of the Interior for approval, and may be suspended by the agent from pay and duty, and the circumstances reported to the Department of the Interior for final action.

This particular item appropriates the enormous sum of $4,000 to provide for interpreters to some seventy different tribes of Indians; and I believe the highest salary that is paid to any one of these interpreters is $300 a year.

Mr. BAYNE. More than many a workingman earns in a year

Mr. BLOUNT. I am much surprised the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Hooker,] who has been here for many years, who has been acquainted with the Committee on Appropriations in the mean time, and has paid his respects to them often, has never before expressed his intense horror, as he has done on this occasion, in regard to this fund for the payment of interpreters. And I congratulate him that for the first time he has conceived and announced the theory to the House that it is right to transfer the Indians from the Interior Department to the War Department.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I made a speech an hour in length in support of that proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman announced it with such a gusto that I supposed I must have been under some illusion.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman had read my speech he would have known what my views were on that question. Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman ought to find time for me to read his speeches

Mr. HOOKER. I am sure the gentleman would be much improved by reading my speech. [Laughter.]
Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as this sum is concerned there is nothing unusual in it. It existed long before the Fortyfourth Congress; it has existed always, so far as I know, and it ought to exist.

You have an interpreter for a tribe, and you want a portion of that tribe to come to Washington, and you need here a medium of communication with them. You have an interpreter for a tribe who has a fixed salary, and he becomes sick, and you desire intercourse with him. There are many instances in which it is right and proper that this fund should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Inte-

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] seems to be astounded at such a sum being appropriated in this way. There is in every Department of this Government and in all their bureaus what every Department of this Government and in all their bureaus what is known as the contingent fund, in many instances far greater than this. Has it come to this, that you cannot trust anybody with any sum of money at all? Heretofore the course of action has been in favor of detailed appropriations. That plan is being followed more and more every year wherever a reasonable suggestion is made that it can be done. I submit, however, that it would be impossible in this case. The gentleman desires to fix by law what amount shall be maid to an interpreter for a given service on a given occasion, which paid to an interpreter for a given service on a given occasion, which you cannot anticipate at all. You cannot tell whether the occasion for the service will ever arise. You therefore must give some fund to be used in the discretion of the Department.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BAYNE, and was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of three Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $9,000. For necessary traveling expenses of three Indian inspectors, $4,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the two paragraphs just read in relation to Indian inspectors. Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] if this is a recommendation of the Committee on Indian Afffairs, or whether he makes the motion on his individual responsi-

Mr. HOOKER. Yes.
Mr. BLOUNT. It is from the Indian Committee?

Mr. VALENTINE. Does the gentleman say that this amendment authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs?
Mr. HOOKER. Yes.

Mr. HASKELL. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is mistaken.

Mr. HOOKER. The Committee on Indian Affairs authorized any member to offer any amendment he desired.

Mr. HASKELL. Any amendment below the estimate.
Mr. HOOKER. No; any amendment to this bill.
Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand my friend to state that the Committee on Indian Affairs has authorized any member of that committee to offer any amendment he wanted to this bill?

Mr. HOOKER. To offer any amendment he desired. That was so decided by the committee this morning, I understand, when I was not present. There are so many errors in this bill that it was a very difficult matter to point them all out at once, and we must take them seriatim as we come to them.

The proposition to amend this bill came originally not from myself but from our absent and permanent chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. SCALES.] He made the suggestion to the committee on this subject, and called particular attention to this clause now under consideration, for the pay of three Indian inspectors at $3,000 per annum each, and for the necessary traveling expenses of three Indian inspectors $4,000, making $13,000 in all for three Indian inspectors.

When you come to look at the law on this subject you will find this provision:

There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a sufficient number of Indian inspectors, not exceeding five in number, to perform the duties required of such inspectors by the provisions of this title. Each inspector shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President.

Now there is no use for these inspectors, and the amendment which I have offered to strike out these clauses is in conformity with the rule, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill and in the line of retrenchment. What duty do these inspectors perform?

Mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOOKER. I will.

Mr. DEERING. Do I understand the gentleman to state that he offers this amendment by direction of the Committee on Indian Af-

Mr. HOOKER. I state this, that I was informed by Mr. GUNTER, who is a member of the committee, and by Mr. ERRETT, who is chairman pro tempore of the committee, that this morning the committee adopted a resolution authorizing any member of the committee to offer to this bill any amendment he pleased. It is true that this particular amendment was once before the committee, and rejected by a vote of 5 to 4. But allow me to say that was several days are. This vote of 5 to 4. But allow me to say that was several days ago. This morning I understand, though I was not present, the committee authorized amendments to be offered.

Mr. DEERING. But not having this special amendment in view.

Mr. HOOKER. Any amendment.
Mr. HOOKER. Any amendment.
Mr. HOOKER. It was given to any member of the committee.
Mr. DEERING. But not carrying with it the indorsement of the

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say with reference to this amendment that I can see no use for these inspectors. If you will look a little further on in the bill you will find a provision to which I will refer in connection with this subject:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and their offices, and for pay of employés, and for pay of two special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $35,000.

Now, I say there ought not to be an officer in the Indian Bureau or in the Department who has no particular functions to perform specified by law and regulated by law.

Though it may be true that every Indian agency is properly conducted, though there may be not a single complaint, yet if you make in this bill these appropriations the money will be spent whether there is occasion for the expenditure or not. If honest agents be appointed, if the agents give bond and report properly to the Department, where is the necessity for these appropriations? Further along in the bill you will find, in keeping with this provision, an appropriations of the second tion for paying the expenses of ten inspectors or commissioners as they are called $7,500. These officers serve without bond, without salary, and without prescribed duty except the general duty of visiting the agencies. They have power to try anybody, to displace any agent. I say that all these appropriations are unnecessary, and that by making them we are simply multiplying the number of irresponsible officers who have no special functions to perform. If the Department has occasion to send out an inspector it ought to take from the Department some man familiar with its rules and familiar with Indian affairs and send him upon this duty. There is no occasion for Indian affairs and send him upon this duty. There is no occasion for these three inspectors; there never was occasion for them. The Secretary of the Interior has power now to detail from his office men for this duty. He constantly details from the Land Office men to go to various portions of the country and investigate questions in connection with the public lands. In the same way men can be detailed from the Indian Bureau to go and inspect Indian agencies.

This appropriation for the expenses of these officers is as useless as the fifth wheel to a wagon. If the Department is honestly conducted, if honest agents are appointed, there is no occasion for the appropria-

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] misunderstands, I think, the action of the committee in several important points. In the first place, the amendment proposed here to strike out the three inspectors was, as I understand, defeated by a formal vote of the committee. Again, this morning the committee authorized any member not to offer any amendment that he chose, but to move to raise the amounts appropriated for subsistence and supplies up to the amount estimated for by the Department.

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; it was a general power.

Mr. HASKELL. What I have stated was the motion I made myself in the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. Then the chairman did not understand it.

Mr. HASKELL. If I was not understood it was not my fault; for I tried to be explicit.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did you move in committee, and did your committee adopt, a proposition to grade upward and not to grade downward, to increase expenditures, but not to diminish them?

Mr. HASKELL. We did nothing of the sort. Here are five inspectors allowed to the Indian Bureau by the law as it stands. Only three are given by this bill. They are the eyes of the Indian Bureau. Your Indian agencies, sixty-nine in number, are scattered over an area of territory larger than the thickly settled portion of the country this side of the Mississippi. How is the Secretary of the Interior to detect fraud at these agencies or to administer the affairs there if he has no power to send any man there to see what the transactions of the agencies are?

A MEMBER. Let him appoint good men to office.

Mr. HASKELL. The Great Master who gave us a great code of morals had a Judas among his disciples; and even a republican administration of the Government, in the appointment of sixty-nine officers, may have one or two Judases.

More than that, these inspectors are not sent to hunt dishonest agents, but to inspect methods; to investigate the condition of things as well as the condition of men. Why, sir, the Internal Revenue Department, with no greater extent of territory, has twenty-eight special agents; the Post-Office Department has a larger number. Yet the Indian Bureau having under its control practically all the country west of the Mississippi River, being charged with the care of all these agencies, has but five inspectors by law, and this bill cuts the number down to three. This bureau should rather have the number fixed by law than the number named in this bill. If this bill is to be attacked, according to the indications here to-day, and if the Indian Department is to be crippled day by day and year by year, by the action of this Congress, I want the individual members of this House to know that upon them will rest all the degradation and infamy that may come from maladministration—more than that, upon their heads will rest the blood of the slaughtered settlers upon our frontier, More than that, these inspectors are not sent to hunt dishonest heads will rest the blood of the slaughtered settlers upon our frontier, for you have stood here year by year refusing to fulfill treaty stipulations, refusing appropriations, and compelling this bureau to violate the letter of the law.

Mr. WILLITS. I desire to have read the statute which defines the duties of these inspectors.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a sufficient number of Indian inspectors, not exceeding five in number, to perform the duties herein required. Each inspector shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President, and he shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and his necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding ten cents a mile for actual travel while in the discharge of his duty, a statement of which expenses as to each inspector shall accompany the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior. Each Indian superintendency and agency shall be visited and examined as often as twice a year by one or more of the inspectors. Such examination shall extend to a full investigation of all matters pertaining to the business of the superintendency or agency, including an examination of accounts, the manner of expending money, the number of Indians provided for, contracts of all kinds connected with the business, the condition of the Indians, their advancement in civilization, the extent of the reservations, and what use is made of the lands set apart for that purpose, and, generally, all matters pertaining to the Indian service. For the purpose of making such investigations, each inspector shall have power to examine on each all officers and persons employed in the superintendency or agency, and all such other persons as he may deem necessary or proper. The inspectors, or any one of them, shall have power to suspend any superintendent or agent or employe, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject agent or employe, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject agent or employe, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject agent or employe, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject agent or employe, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject agent in the superintendency or to the approval of the President, making immediate report of such suspension and designation; and upon the conclusion of each examination a report shall be forwarded to the President without delay. The inspectors, in the discharge of their duties, jointly and individually, shall have power, by proper legal proceedings, which it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the appropriate district duly to effectuate, to enforce the laws, and to prevent the violalation of law in the administration of affairs in the several agencies and superintendencies. So far as practicable, the examinations of the agencies and superintendencies shall be made alternately by different inspectors, so that the same agency or superintendency may not be examined twice in succession by the same inspector inspectors.

Mr. WILLITS. So much for the statute which has existed since 1873. What the law was prior to that time I am not advised. It is manifest from that statute there are duties assigned to inspectors which are important, and it seems to me it would be contrary to pubwhich are important, and it seems to me it would be contrary to public good to abolish these officers. They ought to be increased in number. That law provides for not less than five. This bill appropriates for three. In my judgment the number should be increased to five. How can the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs know the workings of the different agencies except through these inspectors? They are the eyes of the Indian Department. It seems to me it is unwise to abolish them. We should rather increase they also belief them. than abolish them. If not subject to the point of order, I would move they be increased to five.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] will be adopted. It is urged that we ought to have these officers for the purpose of watching other officers of the Government and seeing that they discharge their duties under the law. The gentleman from Kansas places his support of them on that ground.

Mr. HASKELL. And upon other grounds.

Mr. McMILLIN. To-day if you offer to strike down or diminish the salaries of any one of these officers who require so much watching the gentleman from Kansas will be among the very first to interpose to prevent striking them down in any degree whatever. The plain English of this section is that we must have one set of officers to discharge the duties necessary to the carrying on of the Government, and another set to watch them and to see that they discharge their duties. But who is to watch this second class and hold them to the discharge of their duties? I do not know, and we are not told. Who are to watch the watchers? [Laughter.]

The gentleman says they have a right to have a few corrupt men. He compares those of his party who are corrupt to Judas. I think it is rather hard on Judas to have the comparison made. [Laughter.] For they have never, like Judas, done themselves and the world the justice to hang themselves on account of their transgressions. I can hardly say I hope this amendment will prevail. I would have been pose to prevent striking them down in any degree whatever.

hardly say I hope this amendment will prevail. I would have been more accurate if I had said I desired it, for, judging the future by the past, it is bound to go under, as a great many meritorious measures have done.

We have officers ad infinitum. We have officers to discharge real duties, officers to fill sinecure places, and officers to watch those who have real duties to perform. Where it is to end no man can tell. Already the hungry swarm numbers more than one hundred thou-sand. Yet it is claimed we have not enough. One gentleman tells us his committee solemnly authorized the members of the committee to try to increase the number of these vigilant officers who are to supervise and superintend others, who are sworn and have to give bond to discharge their duty.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? I did not state the committee had authorized the increase of anybody's

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not wish to be understood as stating that you did say you had been authorized to increase salaries.

Mr. HASKELL. I thought you did.

Mr. McMILLIN. I said you said you had been authorized to move an increase of the number.

Mr. HASKELL. Not of number, but we were authorized to increase the amount of money for subsistence stores. That is what I

Mr. McMILLIN. What you get under one name and what under another it is useless to discuss. But sufficient is it for us to know that we are overrun with officers and with tax-gatherers to support I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is entirely correct, that we ought to have no funds appropriated except for specific purposes; we should never relax the purse-string till we know exactly where the money is to go. It leads to fraud, it leads to corruption; and no Government which has an immense fund, where public officers can go and place their hands and grab it at will and dispose of it on personal favorites, will ever flourish long. I think it is time for a reform, and am glad to hear the announcement by the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that the tendency in framing these bills is toward the making of all appropriations specific.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the amendment presented by the gentleman from Mississippi. I am exceedingly anxious that these inspectors should be sent to the western country; and I propose to tell the House why. We have a board of Indian commissioners under this Government, and every member of that board, with the single exception of the gentleman from the State of Michigan, is taken from the East. We have about seventy-five thousand wild Indians out on the frontier, and we have got a board of sentimental gentlemen all taken from the East to civilize and Christianize this noble race of red men.

A year ago when I went down to the Interior Department to ask to have a western man appointed an agent for an Indian tribe I was informed by the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was also taken from the East, and whose morality and virtue overtopped and overpeered the morality and virtue of the West, that in all the western country you could not find a man who was fit to be appointed ern country you could not find a man who was nt to be appointed as an Indian agent and placed in charge of an Indian agency. I now declare that in all the western country you cannot find any man for Indian Commissioner who would be willing to steal a mine upon an Indian reservation. [Laughter and applause.]

I say the only method by which the Government can be informed in regard to the condition of these Indians is either through the local agent or through the inspectors sent there by the Government, and who are sent there to inquire into the condition of the Indians, to ascertain their circumstances, to learn whether trespasses are made on their reservation, to ascertain whether they are maltreated in any degree by the people of the West.

It is well known, at least I have heard it said, that under the administration of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs an Indian agent was expected to misrepresent the people of the West on this Indian question. That seemed to be one of the fundamental requirements of that gentleman who presided over the destiny of seventy-five thousand wild and blanketed Indians in the West. Now, if we are to have three inspectors, I think, owing to the usual generosity which characterizes the Department in making these appointments, we may at least get one inspector west of the Mississippi River who has actually seen an Indian, who knows how he looks, how he feels, how he acts seen an Indian, who knows how he looks, how he leels, how he acts; and then, by and by gentlemen who live in these Eastern States, once occupied by the noble red men, may know all about them, and especially my friend from Indiana who declared to-day that the people of the West were trespassing on these Utes. When I heard that I could not help asking myself the question, what has become of the Delaware Indians who used to live in Indiana, and what has become of the Pottawatomies, and what has become of the great crowd of Indians who used to roam in that country north of the Ohio River? I can tell the gentlemen; they have put their infected goods into our cellar, and now they say, "Gentlemen, you are trying to steal something." [Laughter.] Notwithstanding your board of Indian commissioners is made up of eastern men, more frauds have been practiced on the Indians during their reign than at any other period in our history. The people of the West are in no manner responsible. voice in the appointment of this board; we have no voice in the appointment of agents or inspectors. The people of the West who have to endure the burden of the Indian's presence are never consulted about his affairs. It is sufficient that we endure their incursions; it is sufficient that we passively witness their trespasses and depredations.

They live among us, threaten our homes, murder our citizens, burn our property, steal our horses, and spread terror and dismay in every direction, and yet we are never consulted as to the appointment of an agent who is to deal out rations, or an inspector, whose duty it is to inform the Government of the conduct of these savages.

We have schools and churches, we have philanthropic and Christian people in great abundance in the West, but our eastern friends, with their peculiar notions as to the civilization of the Indian, so dominate the Indian Department that a western man when named in connection with Indian affairs is regarded as a barbarian as fierce as one of the

vandals who sacked Rome.
Years ago, at the bidding of this eastern sentiment, we transferred the Indians from the War to the Interior Department; we inaugurated the United the Quaker policy; we placed the East in full possession of our Indians, and the result has been most lamentable: War with the Sioux; war with the Cheyennes; war with the Bannacks; war with the Nez Percés; war with the Modocs; war with the Apaches; war with the Kiowas and Comanches; fraud with the Poncas; shameless slaughter of Dull Knife's band, and other atrocities too numerous to mention. In view of this record, I ask, could the neople of the West if intrusted In view of this record, I ask, could the people of the West if intrusted with this whole Indian business manage Indian affairs in a worse way? By all means let us have these inspectors. By and by the light of truth may penetrate the cloud of hypocrisy and false sentiment that has for years overshadowed this Indian business. By and by they may teach us that a gigantic system of legalized pauperism is not the best system that can be adopted. By and by they may teach us that there is no law in nature which compels an able-bodied white man to labor for the support of an able-bodied Indian pauper. We need light; we need knowledge; we need some practical experience on this sub-ject, and God grant that we may get it through these inspectors.

Ject, and God grant that we may get it through these inspectors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman from Colorado talks about the Delaware Indians having lived in Indiana. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Delaware Indians, if he will study the history of that band of noble red men, to use his elegant and enphonious phraseology, never happened to live there at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELFORD. They did happen to live there.

Mr. BAKER. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not see how it is any worse for the General Government to send out Indian agents from worse for the General Government to send out Indian agents from somewhere down in the East, because perhaps it has been the misfortune of those men to be born in the East, than it is for the State of Colorado to elect a Pennsylvanian to come here and represent them in Congress. [Laughter.]

But I do not want to spend any time about this. I have heard a long discussion about the necessity of sending these men west of the Mississippi River, a matter which any business man would have passed Mississippi River, a matter which any business man would have passed upon in two minutes. More time has already been occupied on it than would be sufficient for a question of much graver importance. The question is whether or not three inspectors, in order to perform duties required by law, shall be at the disposal of the Interior Department, to go on such errands, to make such inspections, as from time to time may be necessary. Why, the gentleman from Tennessee talks long and loud about Tilden and reform. He did not say anything about his "barrel," but Tilden and reform, as though it was a monstrous thing. Mr. Chairman, we should have three inspectors in the Indian service who should go to see the condition in which these agencies were under, not upon the assumption that these agents were dishonest, but to see whether they were exercising wise agents were dishonest, but to see whether they were exercising wise and just discretion in the management of the Indians placed under their charge.

There is no other way in which this can be investigated except through the inspectors; and it is one of the items I should like to see increased. I think it would be wise to increase the number from three to five. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WELLS. I desire to give notice now that hereafter I shall insist upon the rule being observed in respect to the limitation upon delagate.

In connection with this amendment I wish to say that the committee have endeavored in preparing the bill to conform to the law in all respects as far as they believe the requirements of the service would demand in regard to the number of these inspectors. The Department recommend that the number should be five; but the committee determined to appropriate but for three, believing that number would be sufficient to perform all of the duties required. For many years past, although the law on the statute-book provides for five, only three have been appropriated for, except in the year 1874. In my opinion it is a very important provision. These agents have a great deal of work to do; and they are able to save money to the Government. I regard the payment for their services as money well and properly expended. I think, however, the number provided for in the bill is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading and read as follows:

For buildings at agencies, and repairs of the same, $15,000. For vaccine matter and vaccination of Indians, $500.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to strike out lines 199 and 200, which provide for vaccine matter and vaccination of Indians, $500. I make this motion, Mr. Chairman, in the line of retrenchment and reform. [Laughter.] I do not know of any reason myself why the people of this country should take so large a portion of the public money for the vaccination of these Indians we have heard so much talk about here to-day. I believe that the medical and sanitary statistics of this country show that we are to have just about so much of contagious and epidemic diseases annually throughout the land; and for my own and epidemic diseases annually throughout the land; and for my own part, and speaking for my own section of the country, I am quite willing to allow the small-pox to go West. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. And grow up with the country.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and grow up with the country, as my friend from Indiana suggests. [Laughter.]

Again, Mr. Chairman, I ask in all sincerity [laughter] why are we to take from the public Treasury such a large amount of manner and to take from the public Treasury such a large amount of money and expend it in the vaccination of these wild men of the West in prefexpend it in the vaccination of these wild men of the West in preference to men who are right here in our midst that we are bound to by ties of affection, blood, and sympathy? Look all over the country. [Laughter.] I say look all over the country on the condition of things. I have no doubt my friend from Pennsylvania over there, [Mr. WRIGHT,] possibly the next President of the United States, may have constituents himself who would like to be vaccinated. [Laughter.] Why shouldn't we vaccinate them in preference to the Indians? I have no doubt that my gallant friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] who has spoken so logically and forcibly to-day on this bill may have somewhere down in the Mississippi lottoms constituents whom has somewhere down in the Mississippi bottoms constituents whom he would like to have vaccinated out of the public Treasury.

A Member. Or who ought to be.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; who, if they have not been vaccinated ought to be. But why take this money of the people to do it with? I say again, why take this money out of the Treasury and put it away out there in the West among the Indians, among the rocks, [laughter,] among the mines where they have plenty of money, and don't need it ? [Laughter.]

it? [Laughter.]
Again, Mr. Chairman—now to be serious. [Laughter.] I want to be serious now. I say that this appropriation is against public policy. I say it is against Christian policy. It is against morality. It is against everything that is good. [Great laughter.] Why make an appropriation here at all, gentlemen, for that purpose? I say why make an appropriation from the public money to preserve the laverage of these men and thereby increase the appropriation. and increase the number of these men, and thereby increase the appropriations of the Indian Committee every year? [Laughter.]

Mr. VALENTINE. I am with you on that point.
Mr. BAILEY. That is sense. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I have not time to compute the saving to this country. It will amount to millions and millions of dollars. [Laughter.] I do not know how much.

Who knows if we appropriate this money how far its ramifications will extend in the future? Why build up here a great vaccination school, a hospital, a training ship or a receiving ship, a house of refuge, or whatever you may choose to call it, in order to perpetuate these Indians and swell their numbers to undue proportions—to plant them and make them grow as it were? [Great laughter.]

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this House should pause [laughter] and cry halt in these public expenditures; and I say, in the language of my young and distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, that we should pause in this expenditure of the people's money, and not expend it on these red men of the West while there is such abundant need for it at home.

med for it at home.

Mr. Chairman, if I had the time— [Great laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Extend his time.

Mr. BAILEY. And if the gentleman from Missouri, in charge of Mr. BAILEY. And if the gentleman from Missouri, in charge of this bill, [Mr. Wells,] had not given me notice about the limitation on this debate I would like to have made a speech on this important question. [Laughter.] I tell you here that the country is watching you to-day, and there is no mistake about it. They are getting serious in this country now, [laughter,] and before the two great national conventions meet this summer the man who goes on the record in favor of expending this money in this reckless manner will find cause to regret it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEELE rose and said: I yield my five minutes, or whatever time I have, to my serious friend from New York, [Mr. BAILEY.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who believe that the Indians have an hereditary and inalienable right to the soil of America. A wise Providence did not design that this fair land of ours should, for all time, be peopled by savages, whose creed is war and plunder, and who have only proved themselves efficient in the and plunder, and who have only proved themselves emeient in the use of the scalping-knife and tomahawk.

Gentlemen have said during this debate, and undoubtedly have truly said, that there have been grave and serious abuses committed in the management of the Indians by some of the agents of the Government. This does not change the question. We are called upon year by year to make large contributions of money from the public Treasure of the dead and lates and treat these process. to feed and clothe and teach these persons, who are born savages, and whom no amount of education, culture, or Christianizing influences have as yet succeeded in inducing them to earn an honest living by the ordinary pursuits of agriculture, manufacture, or commerce.

Besides all this, Mr. Chairman, the greater portion of our Army in time of peace is required to be stationed on the confines of the several Indian reservations at great distances from the center of Government at vast expense, and extraordinary peril of health and life, aside from the casualties of war, in order to protect and defend us from the ravages of these people.

This Government has been more than liberal in aiding corporations in the construction of railroads; in making large annual appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and capacity of our harbors; in building school-houses, colleges, and universities, so that the means of education may be as free as the air we breathe; in inviting, not only, but welcoming to our shores the people of all countries and of every class and condition in life who desire to avail themselves of the blessings of freedom and become citizens of this great Republic. All this is done in the interests of commerce, education, civilization, humanity. The crowded cities and over-populated farms of the East have given their young and vigorous men to the fertile prairies and broad acres of the West. A well-defined course of public policy has been maintained for years and years in encouraging western emigration. Towns and cities have sprung up as if by magic; great States have been peopled and admitted into the Union; and still greater Territories, fertile in soil, salubrious in climate, and rich in boundless mineral treasure, are impatiently awaiting their entrance into the Union.

We have solved the problem in this nineteenth century of a free, republican form of government, and the one dark spot that shadows the western horizon and every now and then makes the blood chill and the heart almost cease to throb is the sad and sickening tale of some Indian atrocity and barbarian cruelty wherein loving wives and sweet and innocent children by scores and hundreds are worse than murdered. The wailing cry from plunder, destruction, and slaughter has gone up from thousands of quiet and peaceful homes in the border towns, and all these lessons should teach us now the wisdom of a policy that protects the American citizen, his life, liberty, and home, wherever he may acquire the legal right to locate on the public domain.

We may be charitable and kind to a race of beings we find in our midst, but we must be true and just to the American citizen to whom our Constitution guarantees the fullest protection of life, liberty, and property.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The question being taken on Mr. Bailey's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

Cheyennes and Arapahoes:
For thirteenth of thirty installments provided to be expended under the tenth ticle of treaty of October 28, 1867, $20,000.
For purchase of clothing, as per same article, $14,000.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to amend the latter clause by striking out "$14,000" and inserting "$19,000;" so that it will read:

For purchase of clothing, as per same article, $19,000.

The treaty of 1867 declares that a given quantity of clothing shall The treaty of 1867 declares that a given quantity of clothing shall be purchased, and other supplies, the quantities of which are designated, and not the sums of money. The estimate of the Department is to the effect that it will require $19,000 to procure those goods that are specifically provided for under the treaty stipulations. I offer this amendment also having in mind that these tribes have had several bills passed against their fund by this and a preceding Congress, wherein quite a portion of their funds has been diverted from the use of the tribe and paid over to those Indians who have suffered by their depredations. This leaves their affairs in a somewhat critical condition, and their resources not as great as they should be. Therefore on this item, for the purchase of the materials which it is specifically declared they shall have under treaty stipulations, and which the Department says will take $19,000 to purchase, I desire to move the amendment I have offered because I believe it will require that amount and because the treaty stipulations demand it.

I offer this amendment for another reason. This same band for which this provision is made is the one that by reason of lack of appropriation for supplies and medicine only two years since raided my State from one side of it to the other. Hence I am anxious, as might naturally be supposed, to see the treaty stipulations with these tribes from whom the people of my State have so recently suffered carefully carried out.

I ask from the committee this increase from $14,000 to $19,000 because I believe it is needed, and it is an appropriation for a tribe of Indians that are turbulent, hard to control, and have already evidenced their restless and depredating disposition. I fear that the amount provided here by the committee, which is under the estimate, will not be enough to fully meet the requirements of the treaty and give satisfaction to the Indians as they have a right to expect. I believe it is an amendment to which the committee will not seriously object, except as it may be in the line of a series of amendments that they may feel called upon generally, in the interest of economy, to

I do not like to stand here and ask for larger appropriations than the committee give. As a rule they have been liberal, I believe, in the bills appropriating for the administration of the different Departments of the Government; but in the matter of the subsistence of all these tribes, the furnishing of clothing and of food, I think they have cut the estimates of the Department too low, and I desire to have cut the estimates of the Department too low, and I desire to make a test question of this amendment.

Mr. WELLS. The estimate for this item is $14,000, the exact amount provided in the bill. The committee, in getting up the bill, were governed, in regard to the Indians under treaty stipulations, by the estimates. We have not varied the language of the bill one particle from the estimates made by the Department.

It will be observed by those who will look over the bill that a large

It will be observed by those who will look over the bill that a large portion of the money here appropriated, amounting to over $2,500,000 out of the $5,000,000, is appropriated to carry out treaty stipulations. Now if we break over the estimate made by the Department and the bill recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for clothing or feeding the Indians, there is no telling where the amount may reach. I admit in some instances there may be a ground for increase, but not in the case of tribes with tribal relations and under treaty stipulations. The expense of clothing has increased in some instances, but not in the proportion in which the gentleman from Kansas proposes to increase this item, which is about 35 per cent.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me a moment?

Mr. WELLS. Yes, sir. Mr. HASKELL. I admit that the original estimate prepared last fall was for $14,000 or $16,000. But the figures I have here are taken from a supplemental estimate which has been furnished the Committee on Appropriations, asking for $19,000, just as I have asked in this amendment.

It appears from the official estimate that the number of Indians in It appears from the official estimate that the number of Indians in this band of Arapahoes and Cheyennes is forty-five hundred and ninety-six. This appropriation only allows a little over §3 a head to provide all the articles of clothing named in the treaty stipulations. Without reflecting on the committee, for in the main this bill has been prepared with a kindly eye to the Department, and I want to accord that much to the committee, yet in this matter, which is a mere matter of judgment as to the amount needed, I side with the Department, and ask that the full estimate be allowed for the reasons which have been stated—the turbulent disposition of the Indians. which have been stated-the turbulent disposition of the Indians which have been stated—the turbulent disposition of the Indians and the specific treaty obligations.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Committee on Appropriations in making recommendations to this House are guided by the estimates which come from the Treasury Department and which are the result of conferences at Cabinet meetings. They are the official recommendations of the Executive to this House of the amounts of money which shall be expended for specific purposes; and they are the only ones that in my judgment, as a general proposition, we ought to require. It is coming to be the case, sir, that every subordinate official whose estimate has been cut down or disallowed by a Cabinet officer is found in various committee-rooms seeking to get an increase of appropriations for the service he represents. The estimates which are known to be rious committee-rooms seeking to get an increase of appropriations for the service he represents. The estimates which are known to be official contain the identical amount which is placed in this bill. What information the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] may have from other sources I do not know. I will simply say that at the time we were considering what sums of money should be appropriated in this bill those sources of information were not before us.

Mr. HASKELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; I have not time.
It has been charged here in the general debate that we were not liberal enough to these Indians. There are over $2,000,000 in the bill which we are not obliged by treaty stipulations to give. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has well said we have been liberal in this matter. We have been as liberal as in past years. There in this matter. We have been as liberal as in past years. There may have been, as compared with last year, an increase in the price of the clothing required for these Indians. But, sir, when you go back to a period many years ago you find the same thing. These amounts have not varied in accord with prices—not at all.

In my judgment, therefore, it is safest for this House to take the estimates furnished by the Department to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee has had an oportunity to examine those estimates and make a recommendation to this House, instead of adopting amendments thrown in here unexpectedly and in a sort of ambuscade. I trust the House will see fit to take the official estimates and the action of the committee as amply liberal on this subject.

Mr. HOOKER. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia, when he says that these amendments are thrown in here as a sort of ambuscade, that we have a right to offer these amendments. He and

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know if the gentleman is?

Mr. HOOKER. They make their report for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House. Let me say to him, you are not a dictator to this House; you have no right to speak in the language of authority to this House; you are simply the servant of the House; you and the members of your committee are its servants, and it is your duty to present certain propositions to the House for its consideration.

A little while ago, when some member referred to the Committee on A little while ago, when some member referred to the Committee on Appropriations as consisting of thirteen dictators, one of the members of that committee said that there were fifteen of them. I have been taught by history that there is more trouble to be apprehended from many minds and from many heads than there is from one. Where there is but one, he is likely to have a conscience that may be influenced by public judgment. But many tyrants can commit crimes with

I hope, therefore, the Committee on Appropriations will not consider that it can shield itself under the idea that it is a sort of close corporation which has the right to make suggestion to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe that by the rules of the House the Committee on Indian Affairs is excluded from the consideration of the Indian appropriations. Now, I would ask the gentleman if the Committee on Indian Affairs, which I understand has been considering this matter for some days, proposes to ignore the rules and to act on the general principle of full liberty?

Mr. HOOKER. We do. [Laughter.] I am happy to say that the gentleman from Georgia is exactly correct. We do not propose by any failure to offer needed amendments to indorse a bill so monstrous this, not the less monstrous because the iniquity has been perpeas this, not the less monstrous because the iniquity has been perpetrated year after year. The gentleman from Georgia has given me the credit of just discovering the great iniquity of this bill. Now, if he had read the speech to which I referred him, and if he will do me the honor to apply to me I will refer him to the very pages of the RECORD where he will find it, he will see that the views I now express to the House I expressed on the first occasion when the Committee of Appropriation was accommon to the contract of the committee of the comm mittee on Appropriations was so generous as to allow me to have the floor in this Congress. I struggled for it during the last Congress, but did not get it. I have now an opportunity to express my views, and if he will read that speech he will see that they are views which I have constantly expressed when I have had the opportunity.

I say that so far as many of the amendments I have offered are concerned my committee agrees with me. And I say that it is a terrible reproach, and one for which the country will hold responsible the gentleman from Georgia and his colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations, that they assume to report a bill and hold it up as too sacred in its character for amendment, which bill is full of iniquities and outrages, and to hold that it is a bold thing for any man to offer an amendment to it.

Now, I say in reference to this whole bill that it should be amended now, I say in reference to this whole our that it should be amended in many particulars. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] and his friend from Missiouri, [Mr. Wells,] in charge of this bill, ought not to conform, as they say they do, strictly to the estimates of the Department. They ought to require the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to specify the particular use to which they will apply every dollar they ask for the Indian Affairs ought not to be any expenditure in any particular. There ought not to be any expenditure in any particular that the Committee on Appropriations, with its vast extent of power, its learning and considerable research, could not explain.
[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Georgia— Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a question of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMONTON. My point of order is that debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that the Committee on Appropriations has been extremely liberal in its appropriations for this

Mr. BLOUNT. It was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] who said it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, the gentleman from Kansas, then; I will accept the amendment. The gentleman from Kansas claims that we on the Committee on Appropriations have been extremely liberal. Now I do not think we have been. I believe that very many abuses, very many of the difficulties between the whites and the Indians have been due to this very sort of liberality which has been extended by the American Congress to the North American Indians.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. Haskell.] And as bearing upon that question, and as bearing upon the liberality of Congress in dealing with these Indians, I will call the attention of this committee to the treaty provision which requires the appropriation of the sum now under discussion.

It will be borne in mind that there are forty-five hundred of these Indians; to be exact there are forty-four hundred and ninety-six Indians for whom this $14,000 is to be appropriated. And it is to carry out this treaty stipulation:

For each male person over fourteen years of age a suit of good substantial woolen clothing, consisting of coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of home-made

For each female over twelve years of age one flannel skirt, or the goods necessary to make it, a pair of woolen hose, twelve yards of calico, and twelve yards of cotton domestics.

For the boys and girls under the ages named, such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make each a suit as aforesaid, together with a pair of woolen

Under these treaty provisions this Government appropriates $3 a head for those Indians to provide them with this clothing which it is stipulated each of them shall have from the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has stated, I believe, that there are something over four thousand of these Indians.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have said that there are forty-four hundred and ninety-six Indians; and the appropriation you propose to make to carry out this treaty provision is $14,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, does not the gentleman know that it is not the entire number of Indians who are entitled to this clothing but only those between certain ages; and does he not also know that this money need not be used in that way but may be diverted to other

Mr. HISCOCK. I know of no law or regulation—
Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. ATKINS. I understand the gentleman to say that the Department has estimated but $14,000 for this particular purpose. Is there any subsequent estimate recommending an increase for this particu-

Mr. HISCOCK. I will answer the gentleman's question. The Department stands toward the Committee on Appropriations in this attitude: It knows that the committee is bound to keep down these appropriations. The Department stands begging of the committee, and says, "How much will you give us?" On the other hand the committee says to the Department, "How little can you get along with?" If the Department says, "We want this or that sum," the committee says, "You cannot be furnished with that amount of money." The Department comes in here with an estimate for this year founded upon the appropriations of last year, knowing that under no circumstances will the Committee on Appropriations, or this House, if constances will the committee of Appropriations, of this floate, it controlled by the committee, be induced to increase these appropriations a single dollar. Now, as has been said by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] a supplemental estimate has been made.

One word further before the hammer falls. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that this money may be used for other purposes. How else is it to be used? Into what other channel may you divert the value of this clothing? These Indians are entitled to this clothing or its value. If the money is not expended upon clothing, it should be expended in some other direction. The gentleman's suggestion is not an answer to the proposition I make, that we are not paying these Indians sufficient money.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. ATKINS. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations in this instance propose to appropriate precisely what was estimated for by the Department and exactly what was appropriated last year. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hiscock] says that the Departments are in the habit of saying to the committee, "Give us the most you can; but if you will not give us what we ask, we will cut ourselves down to what you say you are willing to give." I think this is quite a compliment, so far as economy is concerned to the Committee on Appropriations and far as economy is concerned, to the Committee on Appropriations and to this democratic House that has sustained it.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are very few Departments in this Government that have confined themselves in their estimates to the law; very few indeed. I believe I may say for the Treasury Department that it has in most instances confined itself in its estimates to the law of the present year; but this remark is not true of any of the other Departments. It is partially true of the Navy Department; but of the other Departments it is not true. Especially is it not true of the Interior Department, which has charge of this Indian Bureau.

Now, the question is simply this, whether these Departments are dealing candidly with the House of Representatives and with the country. Are they competent to make up these estimates, or is it.

dealing candidly with the House of Representatives and with the country. Are they competent to make up these estimates, or is it possible that gentlemen on the Indian Committee, with the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] at their head so far as to-day's operations are concerned, know better what amount should be appropriated for this or any other object contained in the bill than the Department itself? That is the question.

I asked a moment ago whether there was any other estimate before this House increasing the amount proposed to be appropriated in this bill. I am told there is not.

Mr. HASKELL, (to Mr. ATKINS.) You have had an estimate from the Department.

the Department.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; and we have conformed to it.

Mr. HASKELL. Have you not had a supplemental estimate ask-

Mr. HASKELL. Have you not had a supplemental estimate asking for $19,000 more?

Mr. ATKINS. Not before the bill was reported. Does the gentleman mean to say that the supplemental estimate of which he speaks comes from the Interior Department?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; from the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. ATKINS. Ah! the Indian Commissioner—a subordinate officer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] renews it, and yields to me his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] who has charge of this bill to let the committee rise now. We are to have a session to-night for reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WELLS. Very well.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and Mr. Carlisle having taken

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and Mr. Carlisle having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Whitthorne reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1412) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, flags, and camp equipage for the use of the soldiers' reunion to be held at Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, in June, 1880;

An act (S. No. 1027) to provide for the establishing of terms of court in the district of Colorado; and

The message also announced that the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed Mr. VOORHEES and Mr. KERNAN members on the part of the Senate of the joint committee to take into considera-

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 5161) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of certain Indians in New Mexico," approved June

ELIZA R. ASHBY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to call attention to a mistake in a bill passed last night granting a pension to Eliza R. Ashley. The name should be "Ashby." The Chair suggests that the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to make the correction. The Chair hears no objection.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HUTCHINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5806) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

UTE INDIANS.

On motion of Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Phister, indefinitely; To Mr. Bayne, for to-night;

To Mr. CHITTENDEN, for the remainder of this week; and To Mr. Marsh, for to-night.

CHESTER AND MARCUS HOOK ICE-HARBORS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to ice-harbors at Chester and Marcus Hook, Delaware River, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SAWYER'S IMPROVED CANISTER-SHOT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to Sawyer's improved canister-shot; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SURVEY OF PASSAIC RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the survey of the Passaic River, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to supplying stationery for use of Indian agents; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEPREDATIONS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to a deficiency in the appropriations for depredations on the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, on motion of Mr. Conger, ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.) The Clerk will read the resolution under which the House meets this evening. The Clerk read as follows:

Tuesday, April 6, 1880, on motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That there be sessions of the House on Wednesday and Thursday next, April 14 and 15, for the consideration of business reported, or to be reported, from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Under instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs I shall have to take up the Naval Committee business in the order of its dignity: first, bills and joint resolutions in the Com-mittee of the Whole on the state of the Union; second, bills and joint resolutions on the House Calendar, and third, business on the Private

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union f

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No, sir. In the first place I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 674) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory, and that the same be laid upon the table. It was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE,] but has already become a law.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it was laid discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNOR NAVAL ASYLUM, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 64) to authorize the assignment of a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy to duty as governor of the naval asylum at Philadelphia, and that the same be laid upon the table. The reason for that motion is this: the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate have considered the same subject and reported adversely on it.
As it has in that body been postponed indefinitely the Committee on Naval Affairs deem it useless in this House to ask the bill shall be further considered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consider-ation of the bill, and it was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the remaining bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Clerk will report the first bill.

PERMANENT CONSTRUCTION FUND FOR NAVY.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTHORNE addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is not my habit, at least in this House, to speak upon any question unless I expect and hope to be able to render valuable service to the House. It is my purpose to explain briefly the several provisions of the bill under consideration and to give the reasons for those provisions. After having done that, I shall be content to leave the subject, for I believe that the purposes and reasons of the bill being understood, argument will be unnecessary.

This bill is not the result of the efforts and study of one Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives. The present committee is the third one which has had charge of the subject, and the bill has assumed various forms at different periods. It was once called the admiralty bill, but it has now been so far changed as to contain no reference to a board of admirals; it is the unanimous re-port of this committee, and has moreover the earnest support of every member of the committee; it has met with the unqualified approbation of the present prudent and cautious head of the Navy Department, and in its preparation he has been often and fully consulted; it has been subjected to the scrutiny and criticisms of the chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department, and has been modified to meet their views. The best officers of the Navy, very generally I believe, look upon it with favor. upon it with favor.

The report submitted by the committee with this bill, No. 169, is very full and complete. It has been copied by many of the leading journals of the country, and I believe the measure has received favorable comment during the last two months from the best writers on the subject.

The first section of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall cause an account of stock to be taken of all materials and sup plies on hand in the various yards and naval storehouses of the country, and shall cause these articles to be appraised at their present cash value and to be entered in new accounts, so that hereafter when a requisition is made for these articles to be used in the conwhen a requisition is made for these articles to be used in the construction, armament, or equipment of ships they shall be charged at their present price. The reason for this is that now there are piled up vast quantities of material in the storehouses of the Navy, bought in the midst of the war at high prices. There is no power in the Navy Department or in any of its officers to cut down or reduce these prices; therefore, when a requisition is made, they must be charged to the ship at the price at which they were originally purchased. This has the effect of making the ship appear to cost very much more than it actually does cost. Substantially this is the object of the first section of the bill. tion of the bill.

The second section of the bill requires that all vessels now in the The second section of the oill requires that all vessels now in the Navy not at sea shall be examined by a board of officers competent to judge of their efficiency and value, who shall determine the question whether they ought to be further repaired. If such board shall determine that any vessel is unworthy of repair or unfit for further service, the next step required by the bill is that the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a competent board of officers to appraise the value of the vessel to the Government—the value at which the Government is willing to dispose of it. Then if the Secretary of the Navy shall deem it proper, he shall cause all such vessels to be advertised in the public prints, to be sold at or above, but never below the appraised value.

If this bill shall become a law, then for the first time in the history of the American Navy it will be impossible for rings to surround a Government sale and obtain possession of Government property at their own price. We propose to appraise an old ship at what it is worth to the Government to be broken up, and then we shall say to the world that if any one will not give that price for it, it shall not be sold. I think every gentleman who knows anything about the past will say that this is a wise provision. These vessels are not to be de-stroyed unless the board shall determine and recommend it, and unless the Secretary of the Navy himself shall approve it for reasons to be spread upon the records of the Department.

the Secretary of the Navy himself shall approve it for reasons to be spread upon the records of the Department.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to interrupt the gentleman, but will not do so without his permission. But just there I want to ask the question is it proposed that the bill shall be a continuing law?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It is.

Mr. ATKINS. The object is not only to sell the vessels in the Navy already unfit for service, but to sell for all time to come vessels in the Navy as they may become unfit for service.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. All these vessels as they become unfit for service are to be condemned, appraised, and sold. Is that the purpose of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. That is the spirit and purpose of the bill. It is to be a continuing law so that whenever a ship is deemed unfit for further service in the Navy, unfit for repair, she can be sold under the process here laid down. The purpose of the bill is to establish if possible a policy for the future government of the Navy so far as it relates to its ships, its engines, and armor.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] a few moments ago asked me how many ships there were in the Navy which it is supposed should be sold. I have from such information as has been within my reach prepared a list of such vessels. I believe there are thirty-eight reach prepared a list of such vessels. I believe there are thirty-eight of them, including vessels on the stocks, unfinished vessels, worn out in the service, and vessels which have rotted at their wharves. I might have included in this list some vessel or vessels which may upon careful examination be found to be capable of further service. I think they are few, however, if any. My own judgment is that other ships not included in this list when brought under examination will be found unworthy to be retained. Here is a list, marked "A," of thirtyeight vessels of all classes which I am of opinion should be sold or broken up. I have taken pains to give the age, the tonnage, the displacement, the supposed number of guns of each of these vessels, together with its present location and conditions, so far as I was able.

The Niagara, the first on the list, was built in 1855, as will be seen, and she is the largest ship of the old Navy now afloat—a ship of 2,958 tons measurement and 5,440 tons displacement, and is now stationed at Charlestown, Massachusetts. This vessel has been tied up for ten years at her wharf at Charlestown navy-yard with ship-keepers upon her night and day during all that time to protect her from the harbor thieves. She was the ship that assisted in laying the first Atlantic cable, and has been of great service to the country, but her inside planking is partially off; her outside planking has been partially removed; her engines and boilers are gone, and she is a worthless hulk. If the Secretary of the Navy were to advertise her for sale under the present law he would realize but little from her, and the cost of adpresent law he would realize but little from her, and the cost of advertising and selling would come out of the naval appropriation, and nothing would come back into the Treasury for the benefit of the Navy. This explains why ships are allowed to lie in this condition unsold. The cost of selling has to come from funds which otherwise would be used in the construction or repair of vessels of the Navy, while the Navy derives no benefit from such sales. I know that some Secretaries have said that they did not propose to expose themselves to the charge of encouraging rings and jobs when no benefit was to be derived to the Navy, and that they would sell no ships until Congress provided a way in which they could be sold safely to the Government and without scandal to the Department.

Mr. MORSE. And this vessel could not be sold to-morrow for enough to pay what it costs to take care of her while she is lying at her wharf

Mr. HARRIS. I am not sure of that; she is an old ship, copper-bolted, and probably has considerable value. I am not informed as to how much money has been expended in her care since she has ceased to be of service in the Navy. It may be that the money expended in her care during the last ten or twelve years will even exceed the sum which may be realized from her sale, but the fact ought to induce Congress to provide immediately that no more money shall be wasted upon her.

Near by the Niagara floats the old Ohio, a broadside sailing-ship, built in 1820. She has been long discarded as unworthy and unfit to be used as a receiving-ship, and lies there wearing out her chains and rotting away.

Side by side with the Niagara is the Iowa, a new ship finished in 1867, but begun before the close of the war. She was built of white oak timber; she was an elegant ship, and possessed or intended to possess great speed; her engines were put into her in New York, and she made her trial trip and went round to Boston, and was there tied up to the wharf where she has ever since remained. She is rotten, and being very sharp her ends have dropped for want of ballast; her engines have been partially removed, and she is utterly worthless for any naval purpose.

I might go on through this list of thirty-eight vessels showing, as I think I could, the propriety and the necessity of this section of the bill by giving the present condition of each of said vessels, but the table will be printed with my remarks, and I shall not occupy the time by reading it in all its details. I think it will satisfy any person who will examine it that my position is right.

Mr. CONGER. Are any of the old historic ships among that list; the Constitution, for instance?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir; the old Constitution is now in service, having been rebuilt in 1876. She went to France carrying goods for exhibition at the French Exposition. The Constellation is also in service, having been kept in repair, and is now on a voyage carrying hibition at the French Exposition. The Constellation is also in service, having been kept in repair, and is now on a voyage carrying supplies for the starving people of Ireland.

Glancing over the list I find the Florida at New London. Some gentlemen may differ with me as to the propriety of her sale, but she made only one trip, and that, her trial trip; she is the fastest ship in the American Navy, having made seventeen and a half knots per hour, but she was built for a special purpose; almost everything else in her construction was sacrificed to speed, and she is therefore so full of machinery that there is little else in her, and she is fit neither for naval or commercial purposes. naval or commercial purpos

Mr. BERRY. How many ships are tied up at Mare Island, California? Mr. HARRIS. The table shows that there are laid up at Mare Island the Benicia, the Narragansett, the Saco, the Nyack, and the Island the Benicia, the Narragansett, the Saco, the Nyack, and the Cyane, and it is probable some of the nine worthless tugs are there also. There is a law now providing that the President of the United States may sell any ship in the Navy, but the Secretary of the Navy can only sell by pursuing certain methods in regard to advertisement, and he must sell by auction. This bill provides that all ships must be sold in the way I have described, and in no other way, except upon the expressed order of the President of the United States. The reason be sold in the way I have described, and in no other way, except upon the expressed order of the President of the United States. The reason of this exception is this: it may be necessary to sell a ship in a foreign country, it may be necessary to sell for some special reason a ship not within reach of the officers of the Government. So, too, if a ship had been advertised and no bids were made equal to the appraised value it might become necessary to order the sale at a less price or in some other mode, and this power is therefore given to the President of the United States.

The section also provides that no old material is to be exchanged or sold in the future if it can be made useful in the Navy by reworking or otherwise. This provision is inserted for the purpose of put-ting an end forever to any question as to the right of the Secretary of the Navy to sell or exchange any property belonging to the Navy, and to give him the right to sell that which is unprofitable to keep, but not to exchange. This material must be sold, if at all, after conbut not to exchange. This material must be sold, if at all, after con-demnation and appraisal, and must be sold at public auction. It can-not be sold if the officers who are appointed deem it worth keeping for future naval purposes.

The third section of the bill provides for a permanent construction fund, and this is the central idea of the bill. Heretofore, as the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has stated, every sale of an old ship or of old material has carried the article immediately out of the old ship or of old material has carried the article immediately out of the Navy and the proceeds into the Treasury. At the close of the war, as Secretary Welles, in his report of December, 1865, states, a large number of ships, which had cost the Government $18,000,000 or more, were sold for a little over $5,000,000, and all this money was turned into the Treasury. So, always, now when a ship is sold the proceeds go into the Treasury. What we propose is to establish from the proceeds of these sales a nucleus for a permanent construction fund of the Navy to be need only for the construction of nor versely. If all these of these sales a nucleus for a permanent construction fund of the Navy to be used only for the construction of new vessels. If all these thirty-eight vessels and all the old material on hand were sold the amount obtained might be a half million of dollars or more. It would depend upon the appropriation of Congress how large this fund should be at any time. It would be entirely within the control of Congress to determine how many new ships should be built, how rapidly any work upon them should be pushed forward. This fund should be protected from encroachment, and no officer should be allowed to expend a dollar of it except upon a new vessel. During many years it has been the practice, it is part of the history of the Navy, to rebuild old ships, to build a ship around an old name and a splinter of a keel, and all that under the name of repairs. This has been complained of in ships, to build a ship around an old name and a splinter of a keel, and all that under the name of repairs. This has been complained of in all administrations and I believe it to be wrong. This bill will effectually put a stop to that practice—a practice, however, which the law has fostered and encouraged and even compelled.

The bill also provides that no old ship shall be repaired if the cost of repairing shall be more than 40 per cent. of the cost of constructing a new vessel of equal size and power, and if such repairs are done they are to be taken out of this special permanent construction fund of the Navy, and as if a new ship was in fact being built.

These thirty-eight vessels to which I have referred, unless they are sold must go to ruin, for no Secretary of the Navy will be justified in tearing them to pieces for the sake of the old material. The cost in tearing them to pieces for the sake of the old material. The cost of tearing to pieces so large a number of vessels would involve a large expenditure of the appropriations for the Navy and would result in accumulating a vast amount of nuwrought old material not required. In other words, the Secretary would be expending the appropriations for old material which ought to be expended in keeping the vessels we have in repair. The only way to get rid of these vessels, then, is to offer them for sale in the manner provided for in the bill.

Under the fifth section of the bill the Secretary of the Navy is compelled to make annual reports of every sale and all expenditure of money on account of them, to explain how the money derived from the sale of these old vessels has been applied, so that Congress at the beginning of every session may be informed exactly of what changes have taken place in the Navy in this respect.

The last section is merely a provision for getting into the Navy a little knowledge from the outside world. Our Navy, I am sorry to say, is to nearly a close corporation. Without disrespect to our naval constructors and naval engineers, who I believe generally to be men of accomplishment in their professions, it is yet true what they do not know seldom finds its way into the Navy. We have inserted in this bill a clause providing that any person in the Republic, any bright genius who thinks be can do something for the benefit of the Navy of his country, may be invited to bring his plans, specifications, and that if such plans, models, or all that if such plans, models, and that if such plans, models, or able that if such plans, models, and that if such pla cations, and models and exhibit them to the Department and to the inspection of the officers charged with the duty of building ships and engines, and that if such plans, models, or specifications are adopted

As appears by Table B, the armament of our Navy consists of 29 11-inch smooth-bore guns, 222 9-inch smooth-bore guns, 8 8-inch smooth-bore guns, 23 8-inch rifle-guns, 6 100-pound rifles, 33 60-pound rifles, and also 29 15-inch smooth-bore guns carried by our monitor fleet and the torpedo-boat, making in all, in our entire fighting Navy, only 350 guns afloat.

The Dictator, the first on the list, is laid up in ordinary at League Island, Pennsylvania, awaiting repair, and until repaired can be of no practical service to the Navy. The Miantonomoh is now afloat at Chester, having been rebuilt of iron. Her turrets are not yet on, but in other respects she is nearly completed, and is the most powerful ship of the American Navy for harbor and coast defense. The other four are yet on the stocks, half completed, awaiting action and appropriation by Congress.

I have presented as well as I am able the Navy of the United States as it at present exists. I shall now call attention to the armament

At the close of the year 1878 England had 184 steam-vessels of war afloat, and in her service at the close of the year 1879 she had an iron-clad fleet afloat and building of 68 vessels, of which, as we all know, many are the most powerful iron-clads in the world. Fortyeight of these iron-clads were said to be in active and efficient service, and they were armed with 4 81-ton guns, 14 38-ton guns, 10 35-ton guns, 31 25-ton guns, 47 18-ton guns, 138 12-ton guns, 30 9-ton guns, 77 6½-ton guns; or a total of 351 upon this iron-clad fleet alone; and many, if not in fact most of these guns, are all rifles of the longest range and power. Six of these vessels of the first class are turret-ships, carrying armor from 12 to 24 inches thick, and having displacement from 9,150 to 11,165 tons and horse-power from 5,500 to 8,000 each. They are intended and capable of great naval warfare not only at home but abroad, and are said to be capable of making voyages of 3,000 miles. There are also among the iron-clads of England seagoing vessels of considerable speed intended as cruisers.

The one hundred and thirty-six unarmed steam-vessels of war of England are many of them superior to any we possess. I am not in possession of data which enables me to give the whole number of guns in the steam pays of England are to give the whole number.

session of data which enables me to give the whole number of guns in the steam navy of England nor to give their general character. We know, however, that England has spent vast sums in the manufacture of heavy rifled-cannon since the close of our civil war, and has now many in the service of very long range, of immense power, guns capable of penetrating twenty-two inches of solid iron. The American 11-inch smooth-bore gun was considered in England a most formidable weapon as lower as they the bettle better the West. formidable weapon no longer ago than the battle between the Kearsarge and the Alabama, June 19, 1864, and the English writers at that time declared it to be a better gun than could be found on any English ship. The London Evening Star, soon after the battle, in an article describing it, said of the armament of the Kearsarge:

But she also had two 11-inch smooth-bore Dahlgrens; and it is to these tre-nendous weapons the sinking of the Alabama is due.

The Liverpool Mercury of June 25, 1864, six days after the battle,

It is notorious that there is not an 11-inch gun on board a vessel in the British navy, while on board the Kearsarge there are two of these tremendous weapons, each capable of throwing 200-pound shell or shot.

In an account of that battle, written by Frederick Milnes Edge, published in London in 1864, is the following, showing the opinion in Europe of the American gun at that time:

Europe of the American gun at that time:

There is but one key to this victory. The two vessels were, as nearly as possible, equal in size, speed, armament, and crew, and the contest was decided by the superiority of the 11-inch Dahlgren guns of the Kearsarge over the Blakily rifle and the vaunted 68-pounder of the Alabama, in conjunction with the greater coolness and sharper aim of the former's crew.

* The French, at Cherbourg, were by no means dilatory in recognizing the value of these Dahlgren guns. Officers of all grades, naval and military alike, crowded the vessel during her stay at that port, and they were all eyes for the massive pivots and for nothing else. Guns, carriages, and even rammers and sponges, were carefully measured; and if the pieces can be made in France, many months will not elapse before their muzzles will be grinning through the port-holes of French ships of war.

We have no such gun in Europe as the 11-inch Dahlgren; but it is considered behind the age in America. The 68-pounder is regarded by us as a heavy piece, but in the United States it is the minimum for large vessels, where some ships * * carry the 11-inch gun in broadside. * * * It is considered far too light however, for the sea-going iron-clads, although throwing a solid shot of pounds; yet it has made a wonderful stir on both sides of the channel. What then will be thought of the 15-inch gun throwing a shot of 480 pounds, or of the 200-pound Parrott with its range of five miles?

Such was the state of American gunnery in 1864. We are, however, but little farther advanced than at that time, while England, instead of having no gun in its navy equal to our 11-inch smooth-bore gun of 8 tons, mounts upon her ships of war rifles of 81 tons, throwing shot of nearly a ton's weight, and which can penetrate 22 inches of solid iron armor. Ought America longer hesitate to put her ship-builders, her forges, and her founderies at work? For a nation which proposes to dominate a hemisphere, and to dictate to the great naval powers of Europe non-interference in the affairs of the American republics, the United States is singularly neglectful of the means by which she may make her manifesto effectual. may make her manifesto effectual.

The French navy contains 326 steam-vessels and 113 sailing-vessels. Her steam fleet carries 1,701 guns. She has 59 iron-clads, many of which, if not equal, are but little inferior in fighting capacity to the best English iron-clads of the same class. This iron-clad fleet of France carries 28 38-ton rifle-guns, 4 25-ton rifle-guns, 20 24-ton rifleguns, 32 18-ton guns, 110 12-ton guns, 115 7-ton guns, 2 10-ton guns, 36 6½-ton guns, 87 6-ton guns, 1 20-ton gun, 12 5-ton guns, or 447 guns upon her iron-clad fleet alone.

As shown by the table the iron-clads of the United States, 24 in number if all finished and in condition, carry but 51 guns.

The Spanish navy has 81 steam-vessels mounting 800 guns, and there are in that navy 10 iron-clads, armed with modern guns.

there are in that navy 10 iron-clads, armed with modern guns. Even Brazil has a steam navy of 57 vessels mounting 177 guns, and 18 of those vessels are iron-clads.

I present these facts in the hope that, our relative naval power being seen, Congress may take measures to place our country in a condition at least to defend itself from invasion.

The importance of this bill can hardly be overestimated at the present time. Go into any navy-yard in the United States to-day and wander where you will, on its gun-park, upon its docks, in its shops and warehouses, and you will see vast quantities of useless material which should be converted into money or into new and useful form; hundreds of guns which have no shot or shell to fit them, and never will have again; piles of shot and shell which will never be used in war. They all bear evidence that they have been carefully taken care of They all bear evidence that they have been carefully taken care of for many, many years, and have been painted and kept looking war-like to those who do not know their worthlessness; old anchors which ships of the line used to carry fifty years ago with their wooden stocks rotted off, old boilers and engines and chains which have no value except as old material, will meet your eyes at every step. Much of this old material cannot be reworked, some of it not even turned to pieces and made ready for reworking for the want of the necessary tools and power in the yards. I am certain that certain guns, shot, shell, and old anchors now lie in the navy-yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts, exactly where I saw them when a boy more than forty years ago. The storehouses contain great quantities of old and antiquated articles not now used, not called for during our late civil war which put in requisition every resource of the Government, and which never will again be used unless we go back to sailing-vessels and wooder gun-carriages.

In conclusion, I desire to say that in my opinion the time has arrived for us to begin the construction of a navy which shall compare in size, in speed, in armament, and in fighting qualities with the modern ships of the other first-class naval powers. We should stop repairing ships which have become obsolete. If we take no steps to spend our money on new vessels and new engines and improved guns which will conform to the new standards, we shall continue in the future as in the past to require of our Navy Department to keep up the semblance of a navy by patching, rebuilding, and repairing old antiquated vessels, which when war comes upon us will serve no purpose whatever for our defense.

I cannot better close what I have to say upon this subject than by an extract from the report which accompanies this bill:

At the opening of the late war the ships and the guns of the American Navy were equal to those of any nation. When the Monitor and the Merrimae met and startled the world with their conflict, in which thick armor became for the first time an over-match for heavy guns, the other nations commenced to solve great problems in naval warfare. While they have been spending vast sums of money and making experiments in all directions we have rested and waited, until now the power of guns has outrun the resisting power of armor. In comparison with the navies of Great Britain, France, Italy, and even Spain, the American Navy is immensely inferior in ships and armament. And yet these nations have in the construction of these navies but followed out and improved upon American examples and models.

the power of grans has outrum the resisting power of armor. In comparison with the navies of Great Britain, France, Italy, and even Spain, the American Ravy in the navies of Great Britain, France, Italy, and even Spain, the American Ravy in the navies of Great Britain, France, Italy, and even Spain, the American Rava ples and models.

In view of these facts the committee believe it to be our duty to begin at once to prepare for the work of building up a Navy adequate to the national defense, and to the preservation of the national honor. We cannot expect at once to build up a Navy powerful enough to meet in mid-ocean and successfully contend with the monster iron-claids of England, France, and Italy, nor do we desire that the attempt should be made and the preservation of the national dependencies to hold in murtilities of power. We have no temptation to make aggressive war for conquest upon any trans-oceanie nation. We have an empire equal to our ambition, not too large, let us hope, to be successfully governed as one nation upon repullean principles.

We want a Navy capable of protecting our commerce in all seas, of defending our own borders from invasion, and of destroying the commerce and sea-going craisers of any nation which may make war upon us.

To do the first, we should put our iron-claif deet in condition of the greatest effect of the state of the st

All material now on hand which can be made useful in the future by reworking or otherwise should be retained and put in good condition, and all the rest should be sold.

or otherwise should be retained and put in good condition, and all the rest should be sold.

Old guns, shot, shell, and arms, which long ago, even before our late civil war, were obselete and without practical value, now encumber our navy-yards and warehouses. These, also, should be sold.

In the opinion of the committee the proceeds of these old ships, old material, ordnance, arms, &c., should be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the Secretary of the Navy, and be available for naval purposes; but by the law as it now stands they must go to the general fund of the Treasury, so that the Navy would derive no benefit from them without reappropriation by Congress. While the law remains as it now is there will be, as there has been in the past, no inducement for officers in charge of the Navy to specify sell and dispose of such old and useless material, and they will evade the responsibility and escape the often delicate and hazardous duty, and the old and useless ships and condemned material will be suffered to waste and decay and be lost to the nation.

With these reforms accomplished and a permanent construction fund thus established, to be annually supplied by liberal appropriations by Congress, to be used only in the construction, equipment, and armament of new vessels, as contemplated in this report, the old vessels to be kept in repair and the navy-yards maintained by appropriations for that purpose, as now, the committee think the first and important step in the direction of an efficient Navy will have been accomplished.

Mr. WARNER. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

Mr. WARNER. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] takes his seat I would like to ask an explanation of one or two points. The provision in this bill for the sale of material and vessels seems to have been well considered and to leave no room, so far as I see, for suggestions. The fund that arises from such sales under this bill, as I understand it, is to be placed to the credit of the Navy, to constitute a naval fund to be used for the building of new vessels only. Now, a question in that connection: Who is to determine how that fund shall be expended, what kind of vessels shall be

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. The question of the gentleman from Ohio is a proper one and I shall endeavor to make a proper answer to it. The view of the Committee on Naval Affairs is that the Secretary of the Navy is to have charge of a fund arising from this source that may not exceed at any time more than a million or a million and a half of dollars, and that he should have the privilege of laying down a new ship; but as this fund is to be supplied from time to time by appropriations made by Congress, it is believed that Congress will direct the expenditure of it. For instance, to-day if the Secretary of the Navy should lay down a keel of a ship-of-war, properly so called, of five hundred tons, there are individuals here in this country who would claim that he was liable to impeachment, and I think this present Secretary of the Navy would say that he would be going further than the law would allow.

Mr. WARNER. That is not the point exactly. The point I want Mr. WARNER. That is not the point exactly. The point I want to get at is whether it was intended to give authority to the Secretary of the Navy to begin or lay down the keel of a new vessel without any authority other than that given in this bill and thus lay the foundation for an expenditure of one, ten, or twenty millions of dollars. Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir; it could not be done under this bill. This fund originates in the first instance from the proceeds of the sale of old vessels, old iron, and other material, and would be undoubtedly greater in amount during the first year that it went into operation than at any time subsequent.

There is a limitation put upon the expenditure for the construction of new vessels. The Secretary would have no power under this bill

Mr. WARNER. But if the Secretary of the Navy is given authority to lay down the keel of a ship, might he not thereby lay the founda-tion for an expenditure in this direction that would require an appropriation by Congress amounting to millions of dollars without any authority in the first instance excepting that given in this bill?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Ohio will-allow me, I said I thought some authority or discretion should be given to the Secretary of the Navy. I believe he should have it, and not be compelled to steal it. The Tennessee, one of the finest ships afloat, except the Trenton, was rebuilt, under the name of "repairs," from keel to main-truck. No law of Congress authorized that rebuilding. It was done, as I have stated, under the name of repairs, and was a violation of the spirit and intent of the law. For my own part, I would rather allow the Secretary of the Navy to distribute and dispose of the fund derived from the sale of this old material and old ships, and get appropriations from Congress for constructing new vessels, than to allow him under the name of repairs build ship after ship out and out, which has been done constantly in the history of our Navy

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I should like to call the attention of the committee for a moment to the language of section 5 of this bill. On examination of that section it will be found what is required of the Secretary of the Navy in his report to Congress.

The language of the section is:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy annually to report in detail to Congress, in his annual report, the proceeds of all sales of vessels and materials made under the provisions of this act, and the expenses attending such sales, and also all expenditures made, or authorized to be made, from the permanent construction fund of the Navy; and in his said report he shall state what vessels have been built, commenced, or authorized to be built, out of said permanent construction fund of the Navy, and generally in what manner the same have been built, or authorized to be built, and whether by contract or otherwise.

Again, in section 6, it is provided:

SEC. 6. Not more than —— millions of dollars shall be expended or authorized to be expended, out of the permanent construction fund of the Navy, during any one fiscal year, without authority of Congress.

It will be seen that the Committee on Naval Affairs purposely left the amount blank, the amount to be expended, leaving it to the Com-mittee of the Whole to insert. If I understand the point made by my friend from Ohio it is that the Secretary of the Navy under the authority of this bill might perhaps commence the construction of a vessel or of vessels which would involve before completion the expenditure of five or six or more millions of dollars. But the gentleman will perceive on an examination of the bill that it would not be man will perceive on an examination of the bill that it would not be possible to accomplish that.

The committee intended, so far as they could in these provisions, to protect the Government of the United States from any such contingency as is in the mind of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Warner.] It is believed that that is done in this way: Of course Congress cannot go into detail, nor, indeed, ought they to go into detail. I state to my friend now that if he has kept up with the improvements taking place in naval architecture he will find that the English government, which government stands at the head, in respect of naval ernment, which government stands at the head, in respect of naval construction, of all the powers of the world, has during the present year given up the policy of building heavy vessels of large cost, and that they are building a class of vessels called steel-clad vessels, costing less than $1,000,000; whereas heretofore they have been spending from five to fifteen millions of dollars. And the class of vessels, in the opinion of naval experts, that are to control hereafter is of the character I have indicated.

Mr. WARNER. If my friend from Tennessee will allow me, I will say that I confess I am not versed in naval architecture or the construction of vessels, and therefore I ask a question for information. In the construction of English vessels, can the gentleman from Tennessee tell us who determine there the character of the vessels that shall be built? Is it not a board of naval officers? Or is it a committee of Parliament? Or is it the minister having charge of the navy department ?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is what is termed a board of admiralty. Now, here a board of the heads of bureaus is framed virtually on the Now, here a board of the heads of bureaus is framed virtually on the idea of the British board of admiralty; and in this bill the gentleman will see that the Secretary of the Navy is clothed with the power, and he possesses that power anyway, to organize boards. He can make them special or general, or avail himself of the admiralty board by which he is surrounded, to wit, the heads of bureaus; and in addition to that the Committee on Naval Affairs in this bill have in this last section authorized the Secretary of the Navy to go out and avail himself of the genius and talent of the entire country, or indeed of the world.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to inquire a little further whether in the opinion of the committee the matter of determining the character of the vessels should be left with the Secretary of the Navy or whether some other provision should not be made in this bill. That is the only question that presents itself to my mind.

Mr. ATKINS. I suppose it is the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to ask that the bill shall be considered by sections?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask that the reading of the bill by sections be dispensed with.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I wish to suggest there is one blank to be filled, and I propose to fill it with $1,000,000, the lowest sum.

Mr. ATKINS. I consider this a very important bill. I do not know that I am opposed to it nor do I know I am for it. It proposes to sell all the condemned ships that we have on hand and all the material that may be said or believed to be by any board we may appoint of not much value to the Government, all which is proper enough. But, sir, there is one feature of the bill which presents, I think, rather a dangerous principle, and that is the constituting of a permanent fund upon which the Secretary of the Navy can draw without any kind of limitation, it is true, for the patriotic and praiseworthy purpose of constructing a navy.

constructing a navy.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I have said that probably the sum derived from the sale of old material will never yield more than a few hundred thousand dollars. Congress every year must make the appropriation to that fund; and when it makes the appropriation, as we contemplate, it will be made in the regular appropriation bill, and the appropriation for the support of the Navy will be so much less. less

As I have stated, I propose to fill the blank with $1,000,000; so that there can never be spent in any one year a sum greater than $1,000,000

Mr. ATKINS. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question: Suppose the Secretary of the Navy sells these thirty condemned ships and all the condemned material that belongs to the Navy, does he pretend to say all that will not bring more than $1,000,000?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I cannot say. But I will remind the gentleman from Tennessee of this—that an old ship, worn out, will not bring 5 per cent. of its original cost to the Government, or to anybody else.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will state to my colleague from Tennessee that with this limitation not more than this amount can be expended.

Mr. ATKINS. What becomes of the unexpended balance?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. It goes into the permanent fund, which is not under the control of Congress, but is under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. Now, suppose you had a Secretary of the Navy who was not disposed to do exactly right, who was not disposed to do as I believe Secretary Thompson is disposed to do, and that is to do exactly right, for no one will question his honesty and his integrity.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. In answer to the gentleman I will take the instance of ships rebuilt without the authority of Congress. From the foundation of the Navy to this day there never has been a Secretary of the Navy who has not been able to expend more than $1,000,000 at his own sweet will.

This bill, if it shall be amended as proposed, will restrict the Secretary of the Navy in the construction of new ships to the expenditure of only $1,000,000 in any one year, and it provides that the rebuilding of an old ship at an expense of more than 40 per cent. of its original cost shall be deemed equivalent to building a new ship.

Mr. ATKINS. If we are to heed the representations made to-night by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] and by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] that these old ships are absolutely worth nothing, and that it will cost more to continue to take care of them than they would be worth to sell, then perhaps it may be better that we should pass the bill. But I had the impression that these ships which have cost us many millions of dollars would certainly bring several millions of dollars if sold. In twelve years there has been expended upon the Navy nearly $500,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

certainly bring several millions of dollars if sold. In twelve years there has been expended upon the Navy nearly $500,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I beg the gentleman's pardon. From 1865 to 1877 there was expended upon the Navy $416,000,000. But it must be borne in mind that that included the pay of the Navy, the support of the Naval Academy, the pay of the Marine Corps the purchase of supplies for the Navy, and all the expenditures of every department of the Navy.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not say that nearly $500,000,000 had been expended in the construction of ships. I said that nearly $500,000,000 had been expended in twelve years upon our Navy. I stand corrected had been expended in twelve years upon our Navy. I stand corrected as to the amount; it is $416,000,000 up to 1877. To that amount is to be added the appropriations for the last three fiscal years, including this one, amounting to the sum of $13,000,000, and making a total of about $430,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there has not been spent by the Bureau of Construction and Repair exceeding $150,000,000 since the war closed; and that is the only bureau that builds ships. All the rest of the money has gone for the general support of the Navy.

Mr. ATKINS. I arose only for the purpose of eliciting information.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to have the gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. ATKINS. Allow me to finish my remark.
Mr. CONGER. This is in the line of the gentleman's remark.
Mr. ATKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.
Mr. CONGER. I wish to have the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] state, if he is able, what is the average life of a wooden ship of the class that it is proposed shall be sold.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If the ship is to be used as a sailing-vessel, and is built of live oak, her life will be very long. But if she is to be used as a steam-vessel the naval authorities tell me that twelve years will be about the average life of such a ship.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. If built of live oak?
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If built of live oak and used understeam?

steam?
Mr. ATKINS. And if built of white oak it will be four years.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. A white oak ship will not last until she is built. In explanation of that statement I wish to say that in the Boston and Portsmouth navy-yards there are iron-clad ships of white oak which have been built since the war, and if the gentleman will go to either of them he will find that he can pick the timbers to pieces with his fingers.

Mr. McMillin. Who was the Secretary of the Navy that directed such ships to be built?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. They were built by Secretary Welles.

Welles.

Mr. ATKINS. I arose for the purpose of eliciting from the gentleman some idea as to about how much money is involved in this bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will say to my colleague [Mr. ATKINS] that the enormous disparity between the cost of these vessels and the proceeds of their sale is due to the present condition of naval architecture. Of the entire number of vessels that, in the opinion of the committee, are deemed unworthy and utterly useless, some have been already offered for sale and could not be sold. They are of the character which are reported as utterly worthless.

Then again, a great deal of the material on hand in the navy-yards which was purchased during the war has become unavailable in consequence of improvements in naval architecture, and therefore is of compartively trifling value.

The limitation proposed by the amendment of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Harris,] will confine the operations under this bill within the reasonable discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. We must trust some of these agencies.

Having fixed that limitation and required the Secretary to report from time to time to Congress, Congress will have the ultimate supervision of this whole matter.

There is a necessity that something shall be done in this matter. If the House shall vote down this proposition, we will still be left with a law under which the Secretary of the Navy can sell all this property without any guards or restrictions around him. He can do that now, or he can go on and keep a large number of employés upon these worthless hulks, at the expense of the Government and without any benefit or advantage to the Government. It is therefore really in the interest of the Government, in the interest of economy, that something shall be done. I now ask a vote upon the amendment and upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The amendment was read, as follows:

Fill the blank in the first line of section 6 with the word "one," so that it will read as follows:

"Not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended or authorized to be expended, out of the permanent construction fund of the Navy, during any one fiscal year, without authority of Congress," &c.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to. Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that this bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. I think our rules require that a bill of this character should be read section by section for amendment. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill was read in full, and, there being no objection, that was considered as reading by sections. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's amendment.

sections. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to amend by striking out in the last two lines of the second section the words "to the credit of the permanent construction fund of the Navy." so that the funds realized from the sale of vessels or materials shall be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take any part in the discussion of this bill, because I do not claim to have the information upon this subject which other gentlemen have who have given it attention. But there are some general principles which ought to control and guide us in this business as in every other; and one of those principles is that no money ought to be expended by this Government in any considerable amount except as it shall be appropriated by the any considerable amount except as it shall be appropriated by the representatives of the people from year to year. This bill creates a permanent fund to be used by the executive department of this Government without appropriation. It provides that the surplus from year to year shall not lapse into the Treasury as other surplus sums are required to do by law. It creates a permanent fund to be used, either in years when there shall be presidential elections or on any other occasion, for any purpose for which the Administration may see fit to use it.

In my belief the true policy is to require every dollar paid out to be appropriated by the representatives of the people; and in this I would include the interest on the public debt. Let me state the reawould include the interest on the public debt. Let me state the reasons for this position. When these appropriations are made from year to year by the representatives of the people, the subject is brought constantly before the people themselves; their representatives are compelled to study these subjects; thus they and the people know what the income of the Government is and what is paid out. But under the existing system a very large portion of the revenue of this Government is like water running through a sieve. It is collected, goes into the Treasury, is paid out in pursuance of permanent law; and you have only such reports as your executive officers see fit to make, which are not distributed very extensively to the people. If these which are not distributed very extensively to the people. If these appropriations were required to be made year by year, it would be in the interest of economy.

Now, if I may be permitted to digress a little, you provide in this bill that only a million dollars shall be paid out each year for the purpose of building up a navy. This seems to me an absurd propo-

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to appeal to the gentleman to take in, if possible, the scope of this bill. The points which he is making were all considered by the committee; and we thought we had guarded this bill so as not to be open to the objections he makes. The fifth section provides that the Secretary of the Navy, at the opening of each regular session of Congress, shall report in detail the proceeds of the sales of all ships and material, and what he has done with the money, so that the Appropriations Committee can have before them, when reporting the annual appropriations for this conbefore them, when reporting the annual appropriations for this con-before them, when reporting the annual appropriations for this construction fund, the precise amount of money coming in and can regulate accordingly the appropriations for this fund.

Mr. CONVERSE. My friend must remember that the bill as now amended provides that only $1,000,000 shall be paid each year out of this permanent fund—

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. CONVERSE. Unless by special authority of Congress. Well, if that is so, what is the necessity of putting in at all this limit?

We have all heard with regret, to say the least, and almost with confusion, the statement that the Navy of this Republic ranks as the tenth, and in my judgment the thirteenth, among the navies of the world, when it ought to be the first, or certainly not lower than the second.

second.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Pass this bill, and it will.

Mr. CONVERSE. Do gentlemen expect to build up a navy by paying out $1,000,000 a year? Do we expect to establish a navy by the creation of any fund like this? There is but one way to do it. We want a navy; the people want it. Let them know each year how much is to be appropriated for this purpose; let them understand the use to which the money is to be devoted; and instead of paying out $1,000,000 a year, pay out $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 or $20,000,000, if necessary, to build up a navy of which we shall all be proud—a navy commensurate with the dignity of the nation we claim to represent. The object cannot be attained in any such way as this bill, contemp. The object cannot be attained in any such way as this bill contemplates.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If Congress will appropriate under this bill $5,000,000 a year to this fund, we shall in five years have as good a navy as this country needs. But if you go on as you have done in the last ten or fifteen years, you will simply spend all your money on old tubs, without authorizing the construction of any new vessels. For be it remembered that since the close of the war, in 1865. Congress has authorized the construction of only sight allows.

wossels. For be it remembered that since the close of the war, in 1865, Congress has authorized the construction of onl eight sloops of war, with a total tonnage of only about eight thousand tons. One of those vessels has gone to the bottom of the ocean; the remaining seven are the best in the Navy.

Mr. CONVERSE. If that be so, this is not the way to build up a navy. The way to do it is to let the facts be known, and go to work to do it in a straightforward manner. This is too much like making an auger-hole with a gimlet. [Laughter.] It is too small a matter to undertake to create a little permanent fund and pay out a million dollars a year, and then talk about building a navy in that way. I must apologize to my friend from Tennessee and the other gentlemen here. I only desired to call the attention of gentlemen to this subject—gentlemen who know much more about it than I do or profess to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend will see, I think, he has been boring with a gimlet, if he will go back a moment. What is the meaning of the term "creating a permanent construction fund?" It is this: that from time to time the Secretary of the Navy, as he finds worthless, useless material, or material which may be condemned, that that material when condemned and sold shall pass to the credit that that material when condemned and sold shall pass to the credit of the fund to be called a permanent construction fund of the Navy. If that was all to be done in one year, or if we were satisfied after now making such sale of worthless material in the Navy nothing would be done next year or the year after, there would be something in the objection of my friend from Ohio; but inasmuch as the committee believe that mortality and decay belong to everything, and mittee believe that mortality and decay belong to everything, and this is likely to occur from year to year, they have employed simply this term of a permanent construction fund of the Navy.

Now, then, instead of that being diverted, as has been in years past, in barter and exchange, and whipping the devil around the stump, the committee propose, when anything is realized from such source, it shall go to this permanent construction fund. We might have said to the Navy, but we may have been unfortunate in the use of language, and have said permanent construction fund of the Navy. Permanent construction fund of the Navy. Permanent construction fund, if it amounts to anything, I will say to my friend from Ohio, must be in annual appropriations made by Congress; and I venture, if the Committee on Appropriations had come into this House and proposed an appropriation of five or ten millions of dollars for the reconstruction of the Navy, we would have had of dollars for the reconstruction of the Navy, we would have had Ohio to fight on that proposition.

Mr. CONVERSE. Allow me one word right here. Sir, not only would the gentleman have had Ohio supporting it, but if he doubled the amount he would have every Representative of Ohio standing at his back for the purpose of building up a necessary and an efficient navy. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I wish a note to be taken of that; for before this Congress is done I will remind my friend of it and ask him to bring Ohio up to the work. I trust this matter is understood by the House, and that my naval friend will withdraw his amendment and let the bill be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. It strikes me we ought to turn this fund into the Treasury. What is the objection to that?

Mr. REED. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend from Maine will indulge me a moment to answer my colleague. This is our experience, at least in naval administration, that there is not an anxiety to sell any of the material of the Navy. They have heretofore indulged in what is called a barter and exchange business to keep it from going into the Treasury. It is the opinion of the committee that a larger sum of money in this way will be derived by the Government than paying into the Treasury depending—I will be frank—depending on my colleague from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] who is absent to-night. absent to-night.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the object is to prevent the Committee on Appropriations getting jurisdiction of it?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes; I should like to keep it out of their hands.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think it should all go in together.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, while we all agree with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Converse,] that the members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate should yearly examine all amounts to be expended, yet nevertheless sound business principles require sometimes we should leave expenditures to the discretion of executive officers. We do that every year in the Post-Office Department with the approval of the House, and we do it from the very nature of the business. And it seems to me our Navy is now in a condition where something of sound business principles would require the same thing.

I do not agree with the gentleman that it would be wise or just to do it all at once and spring to the position of the first naval power do it all at once and spring to the position of the first naval power in the world, for such is the rapid nature of improvements in the Navy that by the time we had got our Navy completed we should find we would have to build another one.

This seems to me to be an experimental matter, and what we ought to do, in my judgment, is to furnish ourselves with all the vessels absolutely necessary for our purpose, and at the same time make necessary arrangements to enable us on a special emergency to do the best thing needed for the country.

This bill, as I understand it, provides that all of the old material of the Navy, all of the useless accumulations, shall be turned into money, and that sum, together with whatever Congress chooses to appropriate, shall constitute a fund out of which the Secretary of appropriate, shall constitute a fund out of which the Secretary of the Navy may expend a million of dollars each year for the double purpose, first, of making the Navy what it is absolutely necessary it should be for present purposes; and, second, to keep abreast of the improvements of the times in naval construction.

It does seem to me such a bill as this ought to meet the support of this House; and as for any greater sums to be applied, whenever Congress is willing that can be done. As for leaving the Navy in the condition that it has been in for the last ten years, I do not believe that anybody here is disposed to do it. People find fault because too many repairs have been made, repairs in some cases amounting to 90 per cent. of the original cost of the vessel, but that source of trouble has been largely in the House of Representatives and in the representatives of the people themselves; for, singularly enough, it has been possible, if I may use a rather exaggerated expression, to build a ship around an old hawse-hole instead of being able to get an appropriation to build a new ship. That has been the condition of affairs, and this bill, which seems to me desirable and wise, as putting a stop to this, proposes a plan of settling these differences and putting the Navy upon a proper footing. Under all the circumstances it ought to meet the indorsement of this House.

Mr. WARNER. Speaking for myself, and not for the delegation from Ohio Large and the condition of the circumstances in the condition of the circumstances it ought to meet the indorsement of this House.

to meet the indorsement of this House.

Mr. WARNER. Speaking for myself, and not for the delegation from Ohio, I am compelled to differ somewhat from my colleague on this subject. I am not so desirous myself to vote for an appropriation of five, ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars for the sake of building up a glorious navy. I want to have just as large and just as efficient a navy as we need, but whether it be a third-class or a thirteenth-class navy, as compared with other countries, I do not care, only so that it be effective and efficient for our purpose. I do not see any objection, and I rose before the gentleman from Tennessee made the explanation he did to my colleague to say that I saw no objection myself to the payments into the Treasury to the credit of a naval fund of all receipts derived from the sale of condemned property.

I do not suppose the Naval Committee expect out of this to build up a new navy complete, as a certain committee once proposed to build a new jail out of the material of the old one, and keeping the prisoners in the old jail until the new one was built. But they may use as much material of the old navy as they can, adding to it all of the new material Congress may give it, or as much as Congress may see fit to appropriate for that purpose. I therefore am in favor of the passage of this bill; and the only point I had any question about was as to the authority for determining the character of new vessels. The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Committee is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out in section 3 the word "permanent," in line 2; and also the word "permanent," in long the indicate of this same section. My object in doing that is to prevent the constitution in totidem verbis of another permanent fund.

We have already got permanent funds now to the number of nearly fifty, and, sir, it is the policy of this Congress, and a bill has been already introduced in the other end of the Capitol, and one introduced here two years ago, and it has been approved, if I may say so, duced here two years ago, and it has been approved, if I may say so, in a very high executive Department of this Government, to dispense with a good many of these permanent appropriations, because, being permanent appropriations, they do not pass under the review and beneath the eye of Congress. No committee of Congress looks into

We have only, as has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio, a report made by an executive officer who reports what he pleases. There is no examination made into these permanent appropriations at all, and the policy of this Government has been for years to narrow the limit of permanent appropriations instead of expanding it.

Now, here is a proposition to make a permanent appropriation out of all the condemned material belonging to the Navy, and it is multi-tudinous, and all the condemned ships, and there are over thirty, and from year to year there will be additional condemned ships coming in constantly; and we constitute this a permanent fund for the con-struction of the Navy.

I believe I agree on this point with the gentleman from Ohio, and can say I would rather than create another permanent appropriation to last for all time to come-I would rather accede to the intimation made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and also by my colleague from Tennessee, to appropriate several millions of dollars to start your Navy at once. I believe I would rather do that for one. Therefore I do hope the word "permanent" will be stricken out of this bill; and I do not know that that amounts to anything either, [laughter,] for the principle remains the same. Only the pill will be a little more willed if we have to take it.

more gilded if we have to take it.

The question being taken on Mr. Atkins's amendment, it was adopted.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to take the sense of the House on one other amendment without any debate. I desire to amend line 10 of section 3 so that it will read as follows:

Unexpended balances of said construction fund shall hereafter be covered into the Treasury as other moneys appropriated by law.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is just the proposition that was voted

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I do not propose to debate that amendment. I only wish to say that in all human probability if the Congress of the United States is as liberal as the gentleman proposes to be you will have no trouble with this clause. If it is not as liberal to be you will have no trouble with this clause. If it is not as liberal as he proposes there will never be a dollar found unexpended at the end of any year.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] wants to turn back into the Treasury the unexpended balance of this construction fund at the end of two years' time. It seems to me this affects very materially the scope and purpose of the bill. The Naval Committee have been trying for five years to mark out a line for the future policy of the Naval Department.

Mr. MORSE. And have unanimously agreed upon this measure.

Mr. CONVERSE. I stated I did not desire to discuss the amendment. I only propose to take the sense of the Committee of the Whole upon it.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] if the law does not now make the Navy an exception to the law requiring unexpended balances to be returned into the Treasury? I know that is the case with regard to the pay of the Navy. Does it not apply to construction and repairs and engineer-

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Unexpended balances of appropriations for those purposes go back into the Treasury.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Converses, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now move that the bill as amended be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF NAVAL HOSPITAL AT ANNAPOLIS.

The next bill on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 2872) to transfer the naval hospital at Annapolis to the care and custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used as a marine hospital.

Mr. KIMMEL. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion might be a proper one to make in the House after the committee rises. It cannot be made now.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that the bill be passed over by unanimous

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend from Maryland [Mr. KIMMEL] has stated probably a little too strongly what occurred between us. I know there is a conflict as to this matter; and I said to my friend I was willing the bill should be, on the proper motion, transferred to the Committee on Commerce. The Navy Department is willing to sell what the Treasury Department is hardly willing to buy. Unless the two Departments agree, nothing could be accomplished by the passage of this bill. I move that it be passed over, and the gentleman from Maryland can make his motion in the House.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

EXPEDITION TO THE ARCTIC SEAS.

The next bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to establish a temporary colony at some point north of the eighty-first degree of north latitude, on or near the shore of Lady Franklin Bay, for purposes of scientific observation and exploration and to develop or discover new whaling-grounds; to detail such officers or other persons of the public service to take part in the same as may be necessary; and to use any public vessel or vessels that may be suitable for the purpose of transporting the members of said colony and their necessary supplies, and for such other duty in connection with said colony as may be required from time to time.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported the bill back with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to establish a temporary station at some point north of the eighty-first degree of north latitude, on or near the shore of Lady Franklin Bay, for purposes of scientific observation and exploration, and to develop or discover new whaling-grounds; to detail such officers or other persons of the public service to take part in the same as may be necessary, and who are willing to enlist for such purpose, not exceeding fifty in number, and to use any public vessel or vessels that may be suitable for the purpose of transporting the members of said station and their necessary supplies, and for such other duty in connection with said station as may be required from time to time: Provided, That the President of the United States is authorized to accept from H. W. Howgate, and fit out for the purposes of this expedition, the steamship Gulnare, which vessel shall be returned to its owner when the objects of the expedition shall have been accomplished, or when, in the opinion of the President, its services are no longer required: Provided further, That the United States shall not be liable to any claim for compensation in case of loss, damage, or deterioration of said vessel from any cause, or in any manner whatever, nor be liable to any demand for the use or risk of said vessel."

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman L. do not know that anybody.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anybody wants an explanation of this bill.

Several MEMBERS. We do.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will briefly state that this is a proposition made by an eminent citizen of the United States, Captain Howgate, to furnish his own vessels and to take from the United States only Mr. ATKINS. Citizens?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Officers and seamen that may volunteer without receiving pay from the United States Government.

Now just one word. I can call to mind at this moment but seven of the principal governments of the world that have agreed, in what is called a polar congress, to establish stations surrounding, as it were, or making the circle of the North Pole. In making that contemplated movement the United States have been assigned two places, one of which is at Lady Franklin Bay.

Captain Howgate proposes to furnish his own vessel. The officers who are to command it and the men who are to work it are to be volunteers. It therefore will not involve the Government of the United States in the expenditure of a single dollar so far as the pay of the men is concerned. The only possible cost to the Government (and that was the reason why this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union) is that in fixing up or repairing the vessel for this expedition it might be necessary to do certain work upon her.

Now, a single word more as to the general object of this expedi-tion, for I do not care to occupy the attention of the committee for a long time. We have heretofore expended millions of dollars in this country in subsidizing corporations and individuals. Here is a proposition that looks to research in that region, according to the best informed and most philosophic minds of the world, where lies the secret of human life and human progress. It is there that, in the opinion of philosophers, the tides and currents of the sea emanate; there is the birth-place, so to speak, of the atmosphere of the world. A thorough comprehension of those things, and of electricity and of magnetism, would do much for the elevation and improvement of

The proposition is now made by one of the adventurous spirits, one of the moral heroes of the world, at a comparatively trifling cost to this Government, to penetrate into that ice-bound region and unlock those secrets and mysteries for the benefit of the human race. It seems to me that it is within the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of the province of this limited and constitutional Comparative in the province of the prov tutional Government, if you please, to do something to reap the advantages of such an expedition as this for the benefit not only of our own people but of the whole human race.

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.
Mr. CONVERSE. Is it possible that the Government of the United States is reduced so low in the scale of nations that it is obliged to borrow the vessel of some rich man to send on an expedition to discover the North Pole?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is not so poor that it is obliged to borrow. It is, I trust, rich enough in its sympathy for the human race to accept the offer of one of the high-minded and noble-hearted men in the world. I trust that the United States will not be so poor as to reject the offer of such a man for the benefit of the whole race.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to ask another question if my friend will allow me. The gentleman seems to think that it is in accord with the high notions we all have of our country, to work in conwith the high notions we all have of our country, to work in conjunction on this question with some wealthy gentleman who happens to own a vessel. Now, I desire to put to him this question; whether it would not be more in accord with the dignity of this Government, if it desired to send an expedition of this kind, to send it under the control of its own officers; that the Government itself should give direction to the expedition, instead of furnishing the officers and the equipment and letting somebody else direct it?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The direction will be under the United States officers. It is because this gentleman desires the protection of our flag that he has humbled himself, if you please, before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Converse] and asked for this assistance.

Mr. MILLS. What will you do with the pole when you find it?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first upon agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. REED. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Carlisle having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Stevenson reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration sundry bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and had directed him to report to the House with amendments the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3983) to provide a permanent construction fund for the Navy, and for other purposes; and A bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION FUND.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 3983) to provide a permanent construction fund for the Navy, and for other purposes; reported with amendments.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MILLS. This is a very important matter; and I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he let this bill go over until to-morrow morning as unfinished business, when it can be acted upon with a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the demand of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] for the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill; and being taken, npon a division there were—ayes 64, noes 16.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHITTHORNE and Mr. STEELE were appointed. Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEELE] will not insist upon the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman does not understand "the gentleman from North Carolina," or he would not make that request.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does he understand himself?

Mr. STEELE. Ever since I have been a member of Congress, I have had an ambition to be a teller; but I have never had the opportunity before.

tunity before. [Laughter.]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were-ayes 75, noes 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report 75 in the affirmative and 12 in the negative. If no further count is called for, the ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker; no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist upon that Mr. STEELE. I do; it takes more than that to make a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is too late.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not take advantage of the fact that the gentleman did not make his point immediately upon the result of the count being announced by the Chair.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend from North Carolina [Mr.

STEELE] agree that the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the passage of both these bills? If so, then I will move to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, if it can be understood that these two bills shall go over by unanimous consent as unfinished business to come up in the morning, it would be better perhaps to adjourn now than to prolong the session this evening and have a call of the House.

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from North Carolina agrees to that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the arrangement suggested can only be made by unanimous consent, and the ment suggested can only be made by unanimous consent, and then the question might be made that no quorum was present. If, however, it could be arranged to have the main question ordered upon the passage of each of these bills, they would undoubtedly come up in the morning under the rules as unfinished business.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. May not these bills, by unanimous consent given now, come up as unfinished business in the morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the House, in the absence of a quorum, cannot make any order by unanimous consent in regard to the bills.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It appears upon the records of the House that no quorum is present to transact business; and only two motions are in order—one for a call of the House and the other to adjourn. Mr. VANCE. Is not the previous question operating on this bill, and will it not necessarily come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the situation of the bill. The previous question was demanded upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. That demand was sustained by the House: the amendments were agreed to, and the bill tained by the House; the amendments were agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. The question was then put upon the passage of the bill, on which the previous question had not been demanded; and upon that vote it was disclosed that there was no quorum present.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it not competent for the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw his point in regard to a quorum, so that the previous question can be ordered on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the demand for a quorum be withdrawn, the House can proceed to make that order; but so long as it appears that the question is made upon the absence of a quorum, the House can of course transact no business

Mr. STEELE. My main purpose in making the point of the absence of a quorum was to avoid being forced to a vote on the passage of the bill to-night, particularly when the House is so slim. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point and let the previous question be ordered, with the distinct understanding that there is to be no vote until the House is in full session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can arrest proceedings whenever he sees proper by raising the question.

Mr. CONGER. That proposition will be satisfactory I presume to Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is satisfactory to the friends of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Of course there could be no vote to-night without we can adjourn and have no further trouble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] demands the previous question on the passage of this

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPEDITION TO THE ARCTIC SEAS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be ordered upon the other bill reported from the Committee of the Whole, so that both bills may come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the main question will be ordered to be put on the other bill likewise.

NAVAL HOSPITAL AT ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. KIMMEL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 2872, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2872) to transfer the naval hospital at Annapolis to the care and custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used as a marine hospital, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and ferty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of D. C. Collier and 665 others, citizens of Gilpin County, Colorado, remonstrating against any and all changes of the mining laws; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (8. No. 1376) for the relief of Ella Long, to report it favorably without amendment and with a written report. This bill has once been presented to the Senate and favorably acted upon, and I should ask for its present consideration but for the fact that I think it unjust to cases that have been reported before.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed under the

Mr. MAXEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin in favor of an increase and change of the mail service in Door County, in that State, instruct me to report that the offices named in the memorial are all now established and have mails as requested from Sturgeon Bay; that the changes desired can be made by the Department, being ministerial and not legislative. I therefore ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1567) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service, to report that Senate bill No. 1209, which is on the Calendar, reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, covers the exact points in the bill now reported back. I therefore ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5524) establishing post-routes, have directed me to report it back with certain amendments. the report now in order to have the bill printed, and I call the attention of all Senators to it, and suggest that they examine the postroutes reported for their respective States and see that they are properly printed. The bill contains no legislation except the establishment of post-roads; but it is largely amended, and I desire that the bill be printed with the amendments, and recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and recommitted.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. By instruction of the Committee and Provided and And Provi

Mr. KIRKWOOD. By instruction of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I report back the bill (8. No. 1570) providing for the transportation of the mail between East Saint Louis, in the State of Illinois, and Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, with an amendment. Accompanying the bill is a letter from the Post-Office Department, explaining the necessity for the passage of the bill, which I ask be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, sir; but I desire to call it up soon, as it is a matter of considerable importance. Let the accompanying letter

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1610) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a light-house and fog-signal at or near the entrance of Little Traverse Harbor, on Lake Michigan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Committee on Commerce have had under consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) providing for a commission to consider and report what legislation is needed for the better regulation of commerce among the States, and have directed me to report it back with amendments and recommend its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I am directed to ask the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. It is a joint resolution that contemplates action and a report to the next session of Congress, and the House will have to act on it at the present session.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported at length and objections asked for.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

mr. BAYARD and others. I object.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One moment. There is objection behind me, but I wish to say one word upon the subject. The joint resolution proposes to create a new committee or commission. Now we have got a Committee on Commerce and we have got one on Transportation Routes, either of which is perfectly competent to take charge of all such questions. I give notice now that I shall oppose the joint resolution whenever it comes up on the ground that the standing committees ought to inquire into such matters when it is necessary to make inquiry. We have already forty-five standing and select committees of the Senate to attend to all matters relating to the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I was going to ask the Senate to take up a bill that is on the Calendar and which was up a few days since and postponed to take up another bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BALDWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1636) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site and to enlarge the present Government Treasury to purchase a site and to enlarge the present Government building in the city of Detroit, Michigan, or for the purchase of a site and the erection of a Government building in said city; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1637) granting a pension to Ellen M. Godfrey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That Lacon R. Tillman have leave to withdraw his memorial and accompanying papers from the files of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. BOOTH. With the consent of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] who made the adverse report in regard to it, I move to recommit the bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night inspectors of customs to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar of General Orders, under the standing order of the day.

Mr. WITHERS. There is a large accumulation of pension bills, with favorable reports, upon the Calendar. I move that the remainder of the morning hour be devoted to the consideration of those

Mr. MAXEY. I feel constrained to object to that. I desire to have disposed of a bill which has been considered twice during the morning hour, and which is second on the Calendar but has been postponed for a whole week by this unanimous consent arrangement, and I am getting tired of it. I have no objection to the pension bills, but let them take their regular order like the bills from all other committees which it is invertent also to have action woo.

let them take their regular order like the bills from all other committees, which it is important also to have action upon.

Mr. WITHERS. I make the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia that all orders on the Calendar prior to pension bills be postponed for the purpose of considering such bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Those bills to be considered in the order in which they stand?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, the order in which they stand, the bills upon which favorable reports have been made by the Committee on Pen-

Mr. EDMUNDS. There will be no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall all prior orders on the Calendar be postponed? The motion was agreed to; there being on a division-ayes 38,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills in their order upon the Calendar?

The motion was agreed to.

JESSE F. PHARES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar of pension bills as directed by the Senate in its order.

Mr. WITHERS. The bill on the Calendar at the point reached when it was last under consideration was the bill (S. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares, in which the committee submitted an adverse report. I ask that that may be passed over without prejudice so that it may retain the same position it has at present, in consequence of the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hepsgeogen] who is specially interested in the asset HEREFORD] who is specially interested in the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request; and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

REESE LAMMEY.

Mr. WITHERS. Senate bill No. 1384 is the first one to be considered under the order as made.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1384) granting a pension to Reese Lammey. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Reese Lammey, father of John R. Lammey, deceased, late captain of Company D, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report, Mr. President.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAR-LEY March 1, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Reese Lammey, praying for a pension, beg leave to report:

That the evidence in this case shows that the son of petitioner, John R. Lammey, was killed while serving in the line of duty as captain in Company D, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers; that the son assisted materially in supporting his father and mother both before and after he entered the service; that the mother has since died; that the claimant is now about seventy years old; that he is poor and capable of performing but little work.

Your committee therefore recommend that the petitioner be allowed $8 per month from the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AARON HATCHER.

Mr. WITHERS. The next pension bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1360) granting a pension to Aaron Hatcher.
Mr. EDMUNDS. There is first the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord. Mr. WITHERS.

I only ask to take up those cases where favorable reports have been made.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S.No. 1360) granting a pension to Aaron Hatcher. It author-izes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Aaron Hatcher, late private Company F of the Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Platt

March 5, 1880:

March 5, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Hon. G. B. Thomas and numerous other citizens of Howell County, Missouri, praying that a pension may be granted Aaron Hatcher; also Senate bill 1360, granting a pension to said Aaron Hatcher, beg leave to report:

Said Aaron Hatcher was a private in Company F, Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteers. In an application to the Pension Bureau, filed January 10, 1872, he alleged that he contracted disease of the eyes at Rollo, Missouri, in the year 1863. He was discharged in April, 1864, for disease of the eyes, which has proved incurable, and he is now almost totally blind. His application was rejected solely upon the certificate of the assistant regimental surgeon indorsed on his discharge that he "had suffered from impaired vision for nearly nine years." It was subsequently again considered, and finally rejected March 26, 1878. To show that the disease was contracted in service and in the line of his duty, there is his captain's certificate of discharge that soldier's disease "has been contracted since date of enlistment, to the best of my knowledge." An affidavit of the captain states that he "recruited the soldier, at which time he was to all appearances a sound man." Two physicians of good standing state in the most unequivocal manner that soldier's eyes were sound prior to enlistment. Two neighbors testify to soldier's soundness prior to enlistment.

The petition referred to the committee is signed by a very large number of soldiers, neighbors, and acquaintances, who state their belief to be that he was a sound man when he entered the service.

In view of all the evidence, the committee are of opinion that claimant's disease was contracted in service and in the line of duty, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS E. BRAWNER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 748) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas E. Brawner, late lieutenant Company F, Twentythird Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. GROOME March 5, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 748) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner, report:

That Thomas E. Brawner was mustered into service as first lieutenant of Company F, Twenty-third Missouri Volunteers, on November 22, 1861, and continued to serve as such until April 6, 1862, when he was captured at the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, and confined for about seven months, first at Montgomery, Alabama, and afterward at Madison, Georgia. Upon his return to his regiment in November, 1862, he complained of being much broken in health from exposure and alleged harsh treatment while he was a prisoner of war. Two captains of companies in said regiment and several privates who were taken prisoners in the same battle, and confined in the same prisons with him for the same period, testify that he was a sound man when he entered the service, and that while in prison he contracted the disease of rheumatism to such an extent as to disable him from active service after he was exchanged. Still another captain of a company in that regiment and the colonel of the regiment testify that Lieutenant Brawner was taken prisoner at the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, and that up to that time he was in sound health, and that when he returned to his regiment in November, 1862, he complained that his health was much broken as a result of his imprisonment. On December 22, 1862, his resignation having been tendered, was accepted, and he was honorably discharged from the service. The colonel testifies that he 'was a good officer, soldier, and a gentleman, and as such his standing was equal to the best," and that, to the best of his recollection, his resignation was tendered because of the disability already indicated. The "special orders" of the Department of the Missouri state that he was honorably discharged, "having for good cause tendered" his resignation.

His family physician testifies that he was sound when he entered the Army; and and that, to the best of his recollection, his resignation was tendered because of the disability already indicated. The "special orders" of the Department of the Missouri state that he was honorably discharged, "having for good cause tendered" his resignation.

His family physician testifies that he was sound when he entered the Army; and that ever since his return he has been suffering from rheumatism, contracted by exposure while in the Army, and of so aggravated a character that it brought on spinal irritation, resulting in epileptic convulsions, which disqualify him for manual labor. There is the testimony of another physician that he was in sound health when he enlisted; and the testimony of still another that he knows he was suffering from rhematism and epilepsy for three years before he made his application for a pension; and that his disease was not aggravated or prolonged by intemperate or other bad habits. There is no evidence that he had any epileptic fits before 1869.

The examining surgeon who, by direction of the Pension Bureau, examined him on September 3, 1873, found him suffering from a chroniz form of nervous rheumatism, and from hemorrhoidal humors, and expresses the opinion that his epilepsy is probably owing to his general derangement of health. He also declares that his disability, which he rates at one-half, is permanent, and expresses the belief that it did originate in the service in the line of duty.

When Lieutenant Brawner made his application for a pension the postmaster of his town wrote to the then Commissioner of Pensions, "in confidence," that said Brawner was "a democrated editor of a dirty newspaper" published there, and "that his application is a grand swinde on the Governent."

This led to a special agent being sent to the town, who examined the postmaster and several other persons, among whom were two who had been officers and one who had been a private in the same regiment with Brawner. The persons above designated testified that Brawner was in good health when discharged

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER K. MORGAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1113) granting a pension to Peter K. Morgan, private in the war of 1812. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Peter K. Morgan, a private in Captain Andrew Stevenson's company of Virginia infantry in the war of 1812.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. GROOME March 5, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1113) granting a pension to Peter K. Morgan, private in the war of 1812, report that said Morgan is an extremely old and feeble man, who is represented to them to bear an excellent character. He claims to have served for several months during the war of 1812 in Captain Andrew Stevenson's Company of Virginia Infantry as a substitute for a certain Charles Blunt. The name of Peter K. Morgan is not borne on the roster of that company, but the name of Charles Blunt is. From the best information your committee have been able to obtain they believe that it was not unusual in that war for a person acting as a substitute for another to take that other's place in his company and answer to his name as roll-call. The fact that Peter K. Morgan served in said company for more than fourteen days while it was stationed at Camp Holly seems to be established by the testimony of a soldier who was serving in the same company, by a citizen who frequently visited it, and by other corroborative evidence.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS W. M'AFFREY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of Thomas W. McAffrey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. PLATT. There are amendments to the bill.
Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not want to adopt the amendments until we hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr.

WITHERS March 5, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions having examined the bill S. No. 602 and the papers accompanying, find that the said bill proposes to restore to the pension-roll Thomas W. McAffrey, late second lieutenant Company D. Fourth Tennessee Infantry, war of 1846, and to pay him the pension which he received up to the 4th day of March, 1861.

It appears that the applicant was allowed a pension for disability from rheuma-tism originating in the service and in the line of duty during the war with Mexico; that his name was dropped from the rolls March 4, 1861, because a resident of an insurrectionary State; that after the close of the war he applied for restoration and was refused, because the disease from which he is now suffering is not traceable to the disease which caused the disability for which he was pensioned. The disease from which the applicant now seems to suffer is valvular and other diseases of the heart, and he was originally pensioned for rheumatism. Several medical witnesses testify that the diseased condition of the heart is, in their opinion, directly traceable to the rheumatism, and that rheumatism is recognized as one of the most frequent causes of heart disease. As this is no doubt true, and as the applicant has established the fact that he has suffered continuously and unremittingly from disease, and with constantly increasing disability, the committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment.

recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, after the word "pensioners," the Committee on Pensions report to strike out "and pay, or cause to be paid, him $11.25 per month from the 4th day of March, 1861, when said McAffrey, with others, pensioners of the United States, was stricken from the pension-rolls, during the late civil war, on account of residence in southern territory;" in line 13, after the words "and pay him," to strike out "monthly said sum" and insert "a pension;" in the same line, before "limitations," to insert "the;" and in line 14, after the word "restrictions," to strike out "governing other pensions in their payment," and to insert "of the pension laws;" so as to make the bill read: the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore and place the name of Thomas W. McAffrey, second lieutenant Company D, Fourth Tennessee Infantry, war of 1846, on the list of pensioners, and pay him a pension under the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know first whether the effect of the bill is to pay all the pension for the period during which the name of this person has been off the rolls?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; the regulations as to the payment of arrears of pensions are not applicable to any pension granted by a special act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I understand, but arrears are payable according to the order of this bill to this man if the act will bear that construction, and I think it will. I move to amend the amendment, if that is the proper thing to do now, by saying "pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act at the rate provided by the pension laws.

Mr. WITHERS. That was the intention of the committee. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While that is being framed, I should like to have somebody show me the statute which strikes off from the roll a pensioner of the United States, as this report states it, on account of his being "a resident of an insurrectionary State?" I have never seen any such statute that I remember.

Mr. WITHERS. I think that is the phraseology used in the report from the Department. That is my impression.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, at least I had thought until I read this report, that people were stricken from the pension-rolls only on account of not having adhered to the cause of the United States on a recent important occasion. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that the whole question of the loyalty of this claimant was investigated by a special agent of the Pension Bureau, and his loyalty was established to the satisfaction of the bureau. He was an invalid during the whole war.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, if so, would of course answer the matter as to this bill; but the committee in its report does not seem to put it upon that ground. It puts it upon the ground that he got off from the pension-rolls, apparently unjustly, in pursuance of a statute that struck him off because he resided in Tennesse, which was his home. I want to see if there is such a statute as that. Let this bill be laid aside for a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. WITHERS. I presume, even if there is anything of that kind which the Senator may find to be necessary in order to correct the report and make it correspond with the statute, the bill would not be objected to for that reason, and I ask that the bill be passed over informally with that understanding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be laid aside for a moment and I will look at the statute if I can find it.

Mr. WITHERS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next pension bill on the Calendar will be considered.

THEODORE RAUTHE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 963) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, the name of Theodore Rauthe, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, whose name was stricken from the pension-rolls on June 4, 1878.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Call. March 10, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 963) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe, beg leave to submit the following report:

That the said Theodore Rauthe enlisted as a private in Company K, Thirteenth New York Cavalry, January 5, 1864, and was mustered out September 21, 1865.

That in January, 1865, while on horseback engaged in picket duty, his feet were frost-bitten. When he returned to camp and attempted to dismount he was unable too stand upon his feet, and was therefore taken to the camp hospital for treatment. Although afterward returning to duty, yet he always complained of his feet.

Shortly after his discharge from the Army, on the approach of cold weather, his feet broke open and he was taken to Harewood Hospital, Washington, D. C., where both his legs were amputated. The foregoing statement is clearly proven by the following, with other testimony:

following, with other testimony:
Six comrades of Rauthe's swear positively that he was severely frost-bitten while on picket duty in January, 1865, and was laid up therefrom in camp hospital. That he was discharged the service in September, 1865, and that shortly afterward, when the weather grew colder, his feet broke open and he was admitted to Harewood

he was discharged the service in September, 1865, and that shortly afterward, when the weather grew colder, his feet broke open and he was admitted to Harewood Hospital.

The sergeant of the company in which Rauthe served testifies that he (Rauthe) was a very good soldier, but had often to be excused from duty on account of his feet, which, he understood, were frost-bitten while on picket duty.

Proof from the Surgeon General's Office shows that he was admitted to Harewood Hospital in the winter of 1865–'66, and that his feet had to be removed, after they had nearly separated by sloughing.

A physician, now a resident of Troy, New York, but an Army surgeon in 1865–'66, says he recollects seeing Rauthe in Harewood Hospital, and that his impression always was that his feet were frozen while in the line of duty.

On the above showing the Pension Office granted him a pension for the loss of both legs, which was afterward discontinued, because, as the Pension Office claims, the disabilities were not received in the line of duty.

The only proof in support of that assertion appears to be the testimony of a man who swears that in December, 1865, he found Rauthe in one of his barns in Prince George's County, Maryland, nearly frozen to death, and that he removed him to the county poor-house on the following day. He also states that Rauthe could not have been very long in his barn when he found him, as the weather was very cold, and that he cared for him that night and found his feet in a very bad condition. He further states that he does not know in what condition Rauthe's feet were previous to his appearance in the barn.

Inasmuch as it is clearly proven that Rauthe's feet were frost-bitten while on duty, it follows that the disabilities under which he now claims a pension originated in the line of duty, although subsequent exposure may have complicated the original injuries.

Your committee, therefore, consider the testimony on which Rauthe's name was dropped from the pension-roll insufficient, and recommend the passa

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARY ALLISON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1143) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Allison. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary Allison, widow of Robert Allison, a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. INGALLS March 12, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill S. No. 1143, submit the following report:

It is shown that the applicant was married to Robert Allison, sr., in 1842. He

following report:

It is shown that the applicant was married to Robert Allison, sr., in 1842. He died in 1861.

John Fulmer swears that he was a soldier of the war of 1812, and a member of Captain Hulsell's company, from Washington County, Tennessee; that in 1813 or 1814, upon the expiration of his term of service, and when returning to his home in Washington County, he met at a fort on the Hiawassee River a company of soldiers from Sullivan County, Tennessee, under the command of Captain Scott; that he was acquainted with Scott and many of the soldiers under him, and in that company he plainly and distinctly remembers to have seen and talked with Robert Allison, sr., who was a member of that company, armed and equipped "and on duty;" the said Allison being at the time in actual service. He knew Allison well, "they having been boys together," and knew him intimately until his death. They afterward talked about the meeting frequently. The place of meeting was one hundred and eighty miles from Allison's home. He cannot say how long Allison served in the Army, but knows it was near six months from the time he met him until he (Allison) returned home.

John Allison, sr., swears he was brother to Robert Allison, and of his own personal knowledge and recollection Robert Allison was drafted into the military service of the United States in the war of 1812 at Blountville, in Sullivan County, Tennessee, and served in Captain Scott's Company; that Robert Allison left said county with Scott's company, armed and equipped; cannot state the length of service.

Both these witnesses prove that all the members of Scott's company are now dead.

Rachael Gregg, daughter of Abram Gregg, who was a soldier of the war of 1812, and related to Allison, knew him well; often heard her father and Allison speak of the service of the latter in the war of 1812, and of the fact that he was a soldier in that war; knew Allison well for many years; was "raised" on the homestead of the Allison family.

James Hodges swears: "Am seventy-eight years old; knew Robert Allison from the time he reached manhood; was intimate with him for fifty years; have always understood in the neighborhood—I often heard the fact spoken of—that he was a soldier in the war of 1812; have heard Allison speak of the fact; heard Abram Gregg speak of it."

Mary Allison, the applicant: "Was told frequently by my husband that he was drafted in the war of 1812, and served as a soldier under Captain Joseph Soott, and marched into the Hiawassee Valley, which was upon the border of the Indian tribes at war with the United States; often heard him speak of the incidents of the service," &c.

tribes at war with the United States; often heard him speak of the incidents of the service," &c.

Mrs. Hall, a daughter of Allison, swears that she is a daughter by Allison's first marriage, sixty years old; often heard her father speak of his military service in the war of 1812; often heard my aunt, the sister of Allison, speak of his service and the distress of the family when he was drafted; heard my grandfather speak of it and the trouble and distress it brought upon the family; of his having served at Knoxville and other points, &c.

From this it clearly appears:

1. That Robert Allison was drafted for military service.

2. That he marched from his home in Sullivan County, Tennessee, to the Hiawassee River, a distance of one hundred and eighty-eight miles.

3. That he was in the military service, "armed and equipped," and doing military duty.

3. That he was in the miniary service, "armed and equipped, and doing miniary duty.

4. That he was absent on this duty near six months.

5. From tradition and reputation he served at Knoxville and other points.

6. All this was on the border of the Indian Territory, the United States being at war with the Indians.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know on what ground the Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim; or was it acted on by the Pension Bureau?

Mr. WITHERS. It was rejected for want of proof by the necessary commissioned officers or two comrades in the service

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the law now as to the war of 1812 require

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the law now as to the war of 1812 require proof by commissioned officers?

Mr. WITHERS. Either that or by two comrades, or an identification of the party by the rolls of the office. A bounty warrant is merely prima facie proof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the statute does not require that kind of proof, but I think it has very often happened that the Department has done injustice to soldiers of that old time by insisting upon too strict a proof, and which the statute does not require them to insist upon, but of course gives them the right to do it.

Mr. WITHERS. I think it is very probable that there is no statutory provision, but that that is the regulation of the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, if the granting of a bounty land warrant is Committee on Pensions, if the granting of a bounty land warrant is prima facie evidence, what further evidence ought the commissioner to require, and what further does he require? If he has got a prima facie case, why does he not grant a pension?

Mr. WITHERS. For the reason that bounty land warrants are issued to many parties who are not entitled to a pension. The possession of a bounty land warrant would not suffice to establish the claim for a pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS W. M'AFFREY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can now go back to the bill that was laid aside for the moment, as I am ready to dispose of it, so far as I am concerned.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of Thomas W. McAffrey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President I now wish to say that I have, through the kindness of our Reporter, who remembers everything, found the acts referred to about limiting the payment of pensions to persons engaged in the rebellion. The first is an act of the 4th of Feb-ruary, 1862, which provides:

rnary, 1862, which provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike from the pension-rolls the names of all such persons as have or may hereafter take up arms against the Government of the United States, or who have in any manner encouraged the rebels or manifested a sympathy with their cause.

Then came a joint resolution of the 2d of March, 1867, which is too long to take the time of the Senate by reading, which as it appears to me does not apply to the case of pensions at all, but rather refers to accounts of quite a different nature against the Government, and that provision prohibits payment to anybody, no matter where refers to accounts of quite a different nature against the Government, and that provision prohibits payment to anybody, no matter where he happened to be, who was not known to be in favor of the Government and who had not given aid in opposition to it; but I believe the Pension Office has construed that resolution of 1867 as applying to pensions, which I think is a mistake.

Mr. WITHERS. It is the construction of the office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is a mistake, although the act of 1862 would be broad enough. Then there is a section of the Revised Statutes which provides:

utes which provides:

SEC. 4716. No money on account of pensions shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in, or aided or abetted, the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

The result is, Mr. President, that there is not any statute, and there never has been any that I know of, which requires any Department of the Government to strike people off or deny their claims on account of the fact that they resided in an insurrectionary State; but very likely the committee intended to refer-and I do not know but that that is a fair construction of the report—to the action of the Department instead of to the statute on which it was founded.

Mr. WITHERS. That is what was designed. My recollection of the case, which I examined myself with very great care, is that that phraseology is identical with the phraseology used in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions to the committee as to the cause of the rejection of the claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was not my desire to criticise the action of the committee. Now, if I correctly understand the case, the chairman of the committee states that the committee is satisfied that this claimant did not oppose the authority of the United States, or aid or abet opposition to the authority of the United States; in short, that he was loyal.

Mr. WITHERS. I presume there can be no doubt whatever of the fact, inasmuch as that allegation was made and investigated by a special agent of the Department, and he reported that the loyalty of the party was perfectly established.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being so, the only question then is to get him back on the rolls.

him back on the rolls.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATSY DAVENPORT.

The bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Patsy Davenport, mother of William Henry Davenport, who died in the service of the United States, and upon whom she was dependent wholly for support, the pension to be at the rate of $8 per month, to begin at the date of the death of William Henry Davenport.

William Henry Davenport.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. Mc-Pherson March 15, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1597) providing for the granting of a pension to Patsy Davenport, report as follows:

That the testimony shows that William Henry Davenport was regularly recruited and sworn into the service of the United States Army by a Captain James Taylor, in the year 1862, in Carter County, Tennessee; that he was subsequently captured by the confederate soldiers, imprisoned at Vicksburgh, Mississippi, where he died of chronic diarrhea, 28th June, 1863. It further appears that his mother was dependent upon him for support and now has no support. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill granting Patsy Davenport a pension, as provided in said House bill No. 1597.

Mr. NICALLE, I move to amond the House bill by striking out.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the House bill by striking out, in lines 8 and 9, the words "to begin at the date of the death of said William Henry Davenport," and to insert "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. It was an inadvertence that the bill was allowed to be reported in the form it is.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JACOB H. EPPLER.

The bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Jacob H. Eppler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob H. Eppler, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Mc-

PHERSON March 15, 1880:

PHERSON March 15, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Jacob H. Eppler, respectfully report as follows:

That Jacob H. Eppler (late of Company B. Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers) entered the United States Army on the 17th day of August, 1861, as private Company B, Eleventh Indiana Infantry, Colonel Lewis Wallace commanding, and that he re-enlisted in said company and regiment, as a veteran, in February, 1864; and that in September, 1864, at the second battle of Winchester, he was wounded in the leg, and contracted serious and fatal cold in the eyes while lying exposed on the battle-field, subsequently becoming blind, and when discharged from the hospital was totally and permanently blind.

The report of the Surgeon-General and the examiners, and reports of the Surgeon-General and the examinations and reports of the examining surgeons, show that Eppler became totally blind before he was discharged from the hospital; that the blindness was caused by ophthalmia, and that the said Eppler was in sound health before his gunshot wound.

Colonel Daniel Macauley, of the Eleventh Indiana Regiment, and Captain John Macauley, both testify as to the wounding of Eppler on the battle-field. Colonel Macauley swears that said Eppler, while with his company, was a good and efficient soldier, and did not, so far as he knew, have any physical disease either of eye or body, and was a sound and healthy man up to the time of receiving said wound.

Captain John Macauley testifies to the sending of Eppler from the battle-field to the benefits of the service.

wound.

Captain John Macauley testifies to the sending of Eppler from the battle-field to the hospital, and of Eppler's subsequent and final discharge from the service.

Dr. David Funkhauser, the family physician, testifies to the sound physical condition of Eppler when he entered the service, as do also the examining surgeons.

Examining Surgeon James L. Reat makes four reports from 1870 to 1879, and in substance deposes that Eppler is totally blind; that the history and diagnosis of the case show that some time prior to September, 1864, Eppler doubtless had slight ophthalmia of both eyes, but that the wound in the leg and his exposure on the battle-field, where he lay exposed during the night, getting wet from rain, chilled by the night air, and weakened by loss of blood, brought on the aggraved disease of the eyes, and resulted in total blindness; and he rated his disability as "total, first grade."

Eppler is totally unable to gain a livelihood, and is supported by relatives and friends.

Your committee therefore recommend the massage of the accommanying bill (S.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, (S. No. 1070.)

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. GEORGE W. WICKWIRE.

The bill (S. No. 873) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of George W. Wickwire, who enlisted as a messenger-boy on the United States receiving-ship Allegheny, at Baltimore Harbor, November, 1862, and was discharged September 16, 1863, for disability occasioned by injury received while in the line of his duty, on the United States gun-boat General Putnam, and paying him a pension at the rate of — dollars per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAR-LEY March 15, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 873) for the relief of George W. Wickwire, report:

That the claimant emisted November 3, 1862, as a first-class messenger-boy on the United States steamer General Putnam, and was discharged April 16, 1863; that he applied for a pension at the Pension Bureau July 27, 1868, and that his application was rejected on the ground that the disease on account of which he was discharged did not originate in the line of duty. Claimant enlisted November 3, 1862, and was in hospital on board of steamer, and subsequently at Norfolk naval hospital, from about December 1, 1862, till the time of his discharge. He was discharged, as appears from the hospital records, for scrofulous inflammation of the hand and wrist, which was the result of crysipelas, and the records state that this crysipelas did not originate in the line of duty. How it originated they do not set forth.

Fixmining Surgeon Charles H. Lathrop reports, in 1869, that applicant "has a dislocation of the lower end of the ulna, backward. The wrist is stiff, and he is mable to use the hand freely. Disability, one-half." The applicant and Ensign William Jennings, the latter the officer vecond in command of the steamer General Putnam in 1862-63, testify that the injury to the wrist was occasioned by a fall while practicing at a gun in line of duty, and that he was disabled, and entered hospital on account of said injury. The evidence is somewhat conflicting as to whether the disease, crysipelas, which subsequently intervened, resulted from the alleged fall or from some other cause not mentioned in the hospital records.

Your committee would recommend that applicant be allowed pension for one-half disability from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 11, after the word "pension," to strike out "at the rate of —— dollars per month from and after this date," and insert "under the provisions of the pension laws."

"under the provisions of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of that?

Mr. WITHERS. Simply that he will be examined at the Pension Office and rated according to his disability, fixed by the proper officer, and he will be allowed a pension from the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why the Pension Commissions rejected the employed in the proper officer.

missioner rejected the application.

Mr. WITHERS. Because there was no evidence that the erysipelas originated from the cause alleged.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does he belong to a class of persons entitled under the law to a pension?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir; he is of a class entitled to pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. DAVIS.

The bill (S. No. 898) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Davis, stepmother of Benjamin F. Rodgers, late a private in Company H, Bissell's Engineers, West Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment in line 5, after the word "laws," to strike out "the name

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report; but before that is read I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the question whether under the existing pension laws a stepmother, as this lady is described, would be entitled to any pension at all in ever so clear a case; and if she would not, whether her being put on the roll would point out to the executive department the rate or grade or any other thing to fix her being entitled to any specific

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that the view of the committee upon that subject was that when the bill is passed directing the name to be placed upon the roll, the objection which would apply to the want of maternity proper would cease to exist; and after that, the name being placed on the roll, she would then become subject to the pro-visions and limitations of the laws as applicable to a person on the rolls. That is as to the rate of pension, the extent of disability, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that is so, but I am afraid it is not.
Mr. WITHERS. That is the construction placed by the committee.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Now we will hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CALL March 15, 1880:

March 15, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 898) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis, respectfully report as follows:

That Mary A. Davis was the adopted mother of Benjamin F. Rodgers, having adopted him in his infancy on the death of his parents, and that said Benjamin F. Rodgers was the sole support of his adopted mother for five years previous to his death, turning over to her his wages, &c., and she in turn bestowing on him a mother's care and love. That the above is clearly proven by the affidavits of several respectable witnesses, near neighbors of the petitioner. The tax-collector of Edgar County, Illinois, (the residence of the petitioner.) testifies that Mrs. Davis never had any property to assess.

The records of the Adjutant-General's Department show that Benjamin F. Rodgers enlisted as a private in Company H., Bissel's Engineer Regiment of the West Missouri Volunteers, on October 12, 1861, and was discharged from the service on October 12, 1862, for disability.

The certificate of disability for discharge states that he was suffering from "general constitutional weakness, which entirely unfits him for hard labor, and chronic ophthalmia, resulting from a serofulous diathesis of the system," and also that he had ophthalmia when he entered the service.

One of the commissioned officers (a lieutenant) of the regiment in which Private Rodgers served testifies that Rodgers was in good health when he enlisted, and was discharged for disability contracted in the service. The disability was chronic diarrhea and inflammation of the bowels, so stated by the surgeon at the time, as he remembers it.

diarrhea and inflammation of the bowels, so stated by the surgeon at the time, as he remembers it.

Several witnesses testify as to the soldier's good health before enlistment.

The physician who attended him after his return from the Army testifies that the soldier (Benjamin F. Rodgers) "did not have any disease of the eyes, or scrofulous symptoms during last sickness. When he came home he was suffering with inflammation of the bowels and lungs, and died of inflammation of the bowels February 15, 1863," (four months after his return from the Army.) That he came under his professional care immediately on his return from the service.

A neighbor of Rodgers testifes that he (Rodgers) was suffering from a severe cough and complained of his breast and lungs when he came home. He was able to be about but little. At times was better for a day or so, and then would grow suddenly worse. Soldier was not able to walk home from the depot (a distance of a mile) when he returned from the Army. The statement of this witness is corroborated by affidavits of several neighbors.

Mrs. Davia's claim for a pension was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground that "there was no provisions under the general law for pensions on account of the death of an adopted son," and informed the claimant that the only manner in which she could obtain a pension would be by special act of Congress.

Your committee would therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, (S. No. 898.)

Mr. WITHERS. There is a slight amendment necessary. This lady is described as a step-mother. It should be "adopted mother." I move to strike out "step" and insert "adopted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know the number of cases of Mr. WITHERS. Two only have occurred in my service on the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. WITHERS. The next pension bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1501) to restore pensions in certain cases. That is a bill of a general character and may be passed by for the present, and I shall ask that it be taken up and acted on in a few days. The next case is the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudica-tion of pension claims. I ask that it be passed over for the same rea-son. It is a very important bill, and will probably elicit considera-ble debate. The next case on the Calendar is Senate bill No. 545.

ELIZABETH H. PIERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Pierce. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth H. Pierce, mother of Leander H. Pierce, late private in Company E, Sixth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire that the report in that case be read. The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KEL-LOGG March 30, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Pierce, have carefully examined the same, and report:

Elizabeth H. Pierce is the mother of Leander H. Pierce, who was a private in Company E, Sixth Regiment Maine Infantry Volunteers, who was a private in the service of the United States at Portland, Maine, July 15, 1861, and died September, 1862, at the hospital on Bedloe's Island. It appears from the record that he was present for duty from the time of his enlistment till July 15, 1862, when he was admitted to the hospital, and was afterward found dead in a bath-tub. Hence the record is that he came to his death by suicide. A careful examination of all the facts proved, and evidence in the case, leads irresistibly to the conclusion that he was a good soldier, and a sound, healthy man when he entered the service, and there is nothing in his condact to warrant the conclusion that he died from suicide: It is abundantly proved that he contributed to the support of the applicant, and that she was dependent upon him, and is now very poor. In view of all these circumstances your committee report back the bill with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIA F. WHITE.

The bill (S. No. 1564) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Cornelia F. White, widow of Frank I. White, late an officer in the United States Volunteer Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CALL March 31, 1880:

March 31, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was submitted the petition of Mrs. Cornelia F. White, widow of Frank I. White, respectfully report as follows:
That the records of the Adjutant General's Office show that Frank I. White entered the military service of the United States on the 27th day of April, 1861, as captain of Company A, Tenth New York Volunteers. His military history, as far as the records go, is that he was first captain as aforesaid; then major Second Battalion Missouri State Cavalry; then major and assistant adjutant-general of volunteers. He served under General Butler in 1861 at Fortress Monroe, and commanded an expedition up Black River. He was subsequently on General Herron's staff at Vicksburgh; also on General Frémont's staff in Missouri. He was in the expedition which captured Lexington, Missouri. At Springfield, Missouri, he was wounded in the side, his ribs broken; and he was taken prisoner, but escaped. Later he served as assistant adjutant-general under General Schofield. He was taken sick with malarial fever at Vicksburgh and sent to hospital, and then sent home for three months on sick leave; recovered and went at once back to service. He was afterward a colonel on General B. F. Butler's staff, and was provost-marshal of the Eastern Shore of Virginia. He was mustered out of the service in 1865. He died in San Francisco in August, 1875, of paralysis.

General Frémont, in a letter to the soldier's mother, writes in glowing terms of the valor of her son and of his severe injuries and narrow escape from death'at Springfield, Missouri. There is no official record of the Springfield hospital and the treatment of Colonel White. This is explained by the Surgeon-General, who states that in the early stages of the war the hospital service and records were very incomplete.

The physician who attended White in his last illness states that the paralysis states that in the early stages of the war the hospital service and records were very incomplete.

The physician who attended White in his last illness states that the paralysis from which he died was probably caused by the typho-malaria contracted at Vicksburgh.

Your committee would concur in this opinion, as they have no doubt that Colonel White's disabilities resulted from the wounds received at Springfield and the fever contracted at Vicksburgh.

The physician who attended General White when he was on sick-leave from malarial fever contracted at Vicksburgh testifies to his severe illness, and to his opinion formed at that time that his disease would terminate in paralysis.

The same surgeon and physician testifies to his examination and medical treatment of General White at intervals subsequent to his illness, extending through several years, and states that his opinion, formed at the time of his first illness, was confirmed by the continuous development of the symptoms of paralysis. The character of this witness and his professional skill and knowledge are established by the proof.

by the proof.

The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MELISSA WAGNER.

The bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Melissa Wagner, widow of Jacob F. Wagner, late private in Company B, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who died from the effects of wounds received in action and in the line of duty.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, after the word "duty," in line 9, to strike out "said pension to take effect from the date of the death of her said husband."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read now as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KIRK-WOOD April 2, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 225) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner, have carefully examined the same, and report: The bill is for the relief of the widow of Jacob F. Wagner, deceased, who was a private in Company B. Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. The deceased soldier, at Cold Harbor, Virginia, was severely wounded in the head by a musketball, which entered his face at left wing of the nose and made its exit in front of the lobe of the right ear. The anterior portion of the roof of his mouth, the bony and soft parts, were destroyed. The wound so interfered with articulation that it was difficult, without an artificial palate, and made it difficult for him to eat or drink. He was discharged for disability resulting from his wounds, was pensioned, and died April 12, 1875. His widow applied for a pension, which was refused on the ground that it was not proved satisfactorily that her husband's death resulted immediately from the wound for which he was pensioned.

An examination of the testimony shows that, although the wound of the deceased soldier may not have been the immediate cause of his death, yet his condition in consequence of his wound was, in the language of his family physician, who attended him in his last illness, such that in his opinion "the said wound and the general condition of his health, caused by said wound, hindered his recovery to a great extent and materially increased the violence of the attack."

The widow is the mother of four children, and has no means whatever, except from her own earnings.

The committee, on these grounds, recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out all after the word "duty," in the ninth line.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Iowa who reported the

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Iowa who reported the bill whether, if it had been found by the Commissioner that this wound produced the death, there would be any question of the right of this widow to a pension?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No question at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM F. FARRAR.

The next pension bill on the Calendar is Senate Mr. WITHERS. bill No. 672, granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar. The House of Representatives has passed a bill identical in terms with the bill which has now been taken up. I ask that this bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill which is now before the Committee on Pensions be taken up and acted on.

Senate bill No. 672 was indefinitely postponed, and the Committee on Pensions discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Abram F. Farrar, late first lieutenant Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WITH-ERS April 2, 1880:

ERS April 2, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 672) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar, first lieutenant Company F, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, have carefully examined the same, and report:

That Lieutenant Farrar's application for pension was rejected because the records furnish no evidence of the alleged disability, and the claimant was unable to furnish evidence connecting his alleged disability with his military service.

The disability at present existing, as shown by the report of the board of examining surgeons, is complete paraplegia, or paralysis of the lower extremities, rendering him entirely helpless.

It appears from the testimony on file that the claimant was an unusually robust and active man and efficient officer until 1862, when he had a violent and protracted attack of typhoid fever, testified to by his captain, who was also an eminent physician, and his testimony is sustained by that of the adjutant of the regiment, a lieutenant of his company, and several other officers.

Abundant proof is filed showing treatment for pain in the region of the spine, from the date of his discharge to the present time, and that the evidence of spinal disease increased in severity until complete paralysis supervened.

ant Farrar was in private quarters during his illness with typhoid fever, which is established by credible witnesses.

The committee, believing that the paralysis was the result of the disease contracted in service, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. BORELAN.

The bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of James M. Boreland, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, so that he shall be entitled to receive the rate allowed by existing laws to those wholly disabled while in the service of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr.WITH-ERS April 2, 1880:

ERS April 2, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 254) granting an increase of pension to James M. Boreland, having examined the papers and evidence in the case, find as follows:

That the pensioner now receives a pension at the rate of $4 per month for disability caused by gunshot wound of left leg, received at the second battle of Bull Run. That an application for increase of pension, because of total disability resulting from insanity caused by epileptic fits alleged to have been produced by injury received by falling over a log soon after the battle of Gettysburgh, July, 1863, was rejected because there was no record of any such injury as was alleged, and there was no increase of disability from the gunshot wound which would Justify a change of rating.

But the evidence of several witnesses establishes the fact that he did receive a fall as alleged, and that very soon thereafter he had spasms, which continued with increasing frequency and violence; that he was discharged from the Army on the 28th of July, 1864; and two medical witnesses certify that in August of the same year they were called to treat him for spasmodic attacks, which proved to be epileptic in character, and resulted in incurable madness, assuming the form of epileptic mania, for which he has been confined in an asylum for the insane since June, 1872. The superintendent of the asylum pronounces his case incurable, and that he is often so violent as to require constant attendance and watching.

As this condition of the pensioner might reasonably have resulted from the alleged injury, and the disability is permanent and total, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask unanimous consent to consider the only three other pension cases, which will complete the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears no objection.

J. J. PURMAN.

The bill (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu to insert:

That J. Jackson Purman, late first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, granted and allowed, from and after the passage of this act, a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said J. Jackson Purman on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why is he increased from $24 to $30 ?
Mr. WITHERS. The report explains the case.
Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CALL

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. Jackson Purman, having considered the same, make the following report:

That the committee find the facts to be as stated in House report No. 57, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report, and is as follows:

["House Report No. 57, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

["House Report No. 57, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

"Mr. Coffroth, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 238:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 238) granting an increase of pension, at the rate of $24 per month, to J. Jackson Purman, late first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

"It is in evidence that the claimant was mustered into the service September 4, 1862, as first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry for three years, and was in active field service with his company and regiment until July 2, 1863, when wounded at the battle of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania. Owing to the character of his wounds received in that engagement, he was thereafter unable to rejoin his regiment for duty, and was honorably discharged May 23, 1864, by special orders from the War Department, for physical disability on account of wounds received in action. He is now in receipt of a pension at $18, and asks that it be increased to $24, to date from the date of his original certificate.

sion at $18, and asks that it be increased to $24, to date from the date or ms original certificate.

"He bases his claim for increase on section 4698 Revised Statutes, which provides that 'all persons who have lost a leg above the knee, and are so disabled thereby that they cannot use an artificial limb, shall be rated in the second class, and receive $24 per month."

"In this case it is shown that in the amputation of claimant's leg it was performed improperly; that the 'stump' is with deficient covering to bone, and the tenderness prevents the continuous use of an artificial limb, and compels claimant to go on crutches the greater part of his time.

"The nature of his present condition is established by the report of T. B. Hood, medical referee, Pension Office, and transmitted by the Commissioner of Pensions, and which is now on file with the committee, as follows, to wit:

"EXAMINING SURGEON'S CERTIFICATE.

" ' EXAMINING SURGEON'S CERTIFICATE.

" WASHINGTON, D. C., May 2, 1879.

"'I hereby certify that I have carefully examined J. Jackson Purman, late a lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.
"'Disability permanent.

"'I found, first, amputation of the left leg at a point about midway between the knee and ankle. The condition of the "stump" is bad, because evidently there was sloughing of the flaps, leaving the stump conical and covered only by the integument which is stretched over the bones, is adherent thereto, and is consequently lowered in vitality. Very great care, and very great care only, could prevent sloughing of the poor covering here afforded, as any pressure, though very slight, if continued even for a few hours, would produce sloughing. The subject claims that he suffers great pain in the leg, and doubtless it is true. The thigh of this leg presents the condition of marked muscular strophy.

"'2. I found in the right leg, and about four inches above the ankle upon the lateral and anterior surfaces, two adherent cleatrices, which the subject claims mark the site of a gunshot wound. These cicatrices are adherent. It should seem from the course of the missile that the fibula was fractured, though the bone does not present any enlargement or outer evidence that it was so. The missile traversed the mass of muscles upon the side of the limb, namely, the two peronei, the long flexor of the toes, and the tibialis anticus. The movements of the leg are consequently limited and certain of them necessarily painful, rendering locomotion difficult and uncertain, particularly upon a rough surface, or in ascending or descending heights or a stairway. In addition to these local injuries it is clear that the general health of the subject suffers somewhat. That which he claims is, in my judgment, entirely consistent with that which is objective and rational in the case.

"T. B. HOOD,

"The foregoing medical testimony establishes—
"Eiger Most and the stables and the stables are referred to bis cruetches."

"The foregoing medical testimony establishes—" "Medical Referee."

"First. That with a very little use of an artificial limb he is forced to his crutches; the shriveled condition of the thigh urgos the impression that it would have been preferable if a proper amputation had occurred above the knee, insuring claimant's general health.

"Second. The medical referee states that the mass of muscles upon the side of the other limb was severed by a second gunshot wound, naturally rendering locomotion vexations. He says, 'It should seem from the course of the missile that the fibula was fractured, 'that 'The movements of the leg are consequently limited, and certain of them necessarily painful.' The disabled condition of the remaining leg forces your committee to the conclusion that claimant's disabilities are greater than if amputation had occurred above the knee; adding to these severe injuries a shattered constitution entitles him to relief in accordance with the spirit of existing laws; and as they are not of that character as will give the desired relief, the committee are of the opinion that Congress should grant the same. They therefore return the bill to the House, and recommend its passage."

The committee recommend that House bill be amended by striking out the words "twenty-four," in the seventh line of section 1, and inserting thirty; and in line 6, of the same section, the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-four" and inserting the words "from the passage of this act."

The committee, therefore, adopt the House report as the report of this committee; and finding the claim of the said J. Jackson Purman for an increase of pension to be just, the committee report back said House bill and recommend that it do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BENEDICT J. O. DRISCOLL.

The bill (S. No. 1576) for the relief of Benedict J. O. Driscoll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Benedict J. O. Driscoll, as of the rank of captain instead of second lieutenant of Company C, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Platt April 2, 1880:

The Committee on Pensons, to whom was referred the petition of Benedict J. O. Driscoll, praying that a pension may be granted him as captain, have carefully examined the same, and report:

That the petitioner, while serving as second lieutenant of Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, was, on the 16th day of June, 1864, wounded in action, and in consequence of this wound his leg was amputated. For this disability he is now receiving a pension as second lieutenant. His claim that he is entitled to a captain's pension is based upon the following facts, set forth in his petitive.

ability he is now receiving a pension as second lieutenant. His claim that he is entitled to a captain's pension is based upon the following facts, set forth in his petition:

He first enlisted as private in Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, September 17, 1861. Here enlisted in December, 1863, for three years. While on veteran furlough, he was authorized by the governor of New York to raise and organize a company for said regiment. He alleges, and the committee believe truly, that to enable him to act as recruiting officer he was conditionally mustered as second lieutenant with the promise that if he raised such company such conditional muster should be confirmed, and, further, that he should be commissioned as captain whenever the opportunity occurred.

A company was raised by the petitioner, and with it he rejoined his regiment in the field at Cold Harbor, Virginia, on the 2d day of June, 1864. He commanded said company in action on the 3d of June, 1864, and in all the subsequent actions occurring between Cold Harbor and Petersburgh, until the 14th of the same month, when he lost his leg in the action before Petersburgh.

On the 9th of June, 1864, the colonel of his regiment wrote the governor of the State of New York recommending that the petitioner be commissioned as captain, in pursuance of which he was commissioned a captain in said regiment by Governor Seymour, his commission dating the 13th day of July, 1864.

This commission having been dated after his loss of a leg, his application to be mustered in as captain was refused, unless he should return to his command for duty. This he was unable to do, and therefore was never mustered as captain.

The committee are of opinion that in equity the petitioner is entitled to be pensioned as a captain, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for his relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask, as this is akin to a question that is frequently before the Committee on Military Affairs, whether this officer performed the duties of captain from the date fixed?

Mr. WITHERS. The testimony before the committee was that he had always acted as captain, though never mustered in as such; but he had been promised the commission of captain, and subsequently received the commission, but it being received after the loss of his leg, and the regulations requiring that he should be mustered in for duty, and not being in that condition, he is not so borne on the rolls.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that point; but at the time he received the injury was he in a position justifying him under the law to be a captain?

Mr. WITHERS.

Mr. WITHERS. That is my impression. The Senator from Connecticut who reported the bill examined it more critically than I.

Mr. PLATT. The hospital records in this case show that when he was wounded he was admitted into hospital as a captain, was considered a captain, and commanded his company as captain.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the question, whether the men he was in charge of and actually commanding were enough under the law to entitle them to a captain?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.
Mr. COCKRELL. So that had he had his commission then he

Mr. COCKRELL. So that had he had his commission then he would have been mustered in as a captain.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly; it was a full company.

Mr. COCKRELL. And there was no other captain?

Mr. PLATT. No captain of the company; and the colonel of his regiment had written nine days previous to his wounds for his commission to be issued by Governor Seymour; but it was not dated, in fact, until after his wounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. EMMA SCHELL.

The bill (S. No. 1305) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma Schell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Emma Schell, widow of Christian Schell late of Company M, Forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and afterward transferred to the Third Indiana Cavalry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. WITHERS. I can state the substance of the report. It has the best of the report of the report.

Mr. WITHERS. I can state the substance of the report. It has not been printed yet. The substance of it is that this man was disabled for service in the line of duty and received a pension at the rate of $14 a month; that he went to Indianapolis to receive his pension, and on his return it was necessary for him to leave the train at some little place. On attempting to get on the train the truss which he wore broke, and he was unable to free himself from the train, which, having just started, passed over his body.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the last pension case on the Calendar.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Mr. GARLAND. I call for the unfinished business, the Geneva award bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) It comes up of course. Senate bill No. 1194 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill is detained at home. He sent me word that he would be here by two o'clock. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] I understood was about to claim the floor, but he is not here. If there is any measure of the Appropriations Committee ready, I am willing that this bill shall be passed over informally for the present.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask if there is any one ready to

Mr. GARLAND. I do not know of any one but the Senator from Ohio, who will be here by two o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I ask the Senate to allow this bill to lie aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this bill being laid aside informally

Mr. BLAINE. Subject to be called up as the regular order at any moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Laid aside temporarily.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I object to its being called up "at any moment." Of course at any proper time it can be called up.

Mr. BLAINE. The right must exist to call it up. Of course that right will be exercised with proper courtesy; but the right must exist, or else the bill will be displaced. Of course it will be exercised with proper courtesy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the understanding.

PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1424, relating to appropriations.

No objection being made, it was announced that the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1424) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations.

The bill was read.

The bill was read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is rather an important bill, and I regret that there are not more Senators present to know what it is and act upon it, though it is right and proper, and I have no doubt it will pass nearly unanimously, as the Committee on Appropriations I believe were unanimous in recommending it. This is a bill repealing a large number of permanent annual and indefinite appropriations that have grown up with the Government, commencing almost with its existence. with its existence.

My friend from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] asks me whether there is a written report. There is a written report which sets out the facts very fully; but it is a report of considerable length, and I can answer any question any Senator may ask, or the report may be read if desired.

These "permanent annual" and "indefinite" appropriations are These "permanent annual" and "indefinite" appropriations are about one hundred and fifty in number. The Appropriations Committee propose to repeal nearly one hundred and forty of the one hundred and fifty, leaving unrepealed all that belong to the public debt, for interest or in any other manner, also as to most of the trust funds, and some things relating to the internal revenue and to the customs, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, (and the committee agreed with him,) could not well be repealed, and which should remain as they are upon the statute-books, as there cannot well be an estimate of the amounts needed.

estimate of the amounts needed.

Among the different items which this bill repeals are some connected with the customs. I hold in my hand a statement which shows that in that department alone in the last nine years there were $104,000,000, in round numbers, drawn from the Treasury without the supervision of Congress in any way. In nine years in the customs department $104,515,689.56 went out of the Treasury without an annual appropriation by Congress. In the miscellaneous items there were $56,813,036.63 drawn in the same way during that time. I may as well present a table showing the amounts expended during the last nine years on these accounts: last nine years on these accounts:

Thus in round numbers in the last nine years there have been about $240,000,000 (exclusive of the public debt entirely) used from the public Treasury under what are known as permanent and indefinite appropriations. If you included the public debt items, this sum would run into many hundreds of millions, as we all know.

The Committee on Appropriations, after full consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and his Department, have agreed that nearly all these items should be repealed, as I have stated heretofore, except fourteen relating to the public debt and trust funds. All the rest of the one hundred and fifty are to be repealed by this bill

I think it is not necessary to make any further explanation; but I will answer any question any Senator may wish to ask.

My friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] asks me to give the titles of the fourteen items. The bill recites them, and, as I have stated, they relate exclusively to the public debt and to certain custom matters and to a couple of items in the internal revenue which we all agreed upon.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think the Senator from West Virginia should press a bill of so great importance with so thin an attendance in the Senate. It is certainly one of the most important bills that will be before the Senate, and I suggest to him whether he had not better let it lie over until the Senate is fuller than it is at the present

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will recollect that I stated in the beginning of my remarks that I regretted that there were not more Senators in their seats; but this bill has been on the Calendar for a long time and it ought to be passed. I will say to my friend from Vermont, whom I have no doubt has the same object in view that I have, that the Secretary of the Treasury and almost all the Treasury officers whom I consulted with agree with almost everything in this bill and believe that it ought to be passed. It ought not to be delayed for this reason: if we intend that it shall take effect next year (it is not proposed to have it go into effect this year) it ought to be passed at once and go to the House, for they have to act upon it yet, and unless we pass it at this session it is well known that the officers of the Treasury cannot make the regular estimates for the next year; and if it is postponed now it will be a delay for a year. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will recollect that I

I do not think there is any opposition to the bill; if there is the Senator can state it.

Senator can state it.

Mr. MORRILL. I only desired to suggest to the Senator that this was a bill which ought to be considered by a full Senate. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia in believing that a large portion of the statutes that require permanent appropriations should be modified or repealed; but I have not given such particular attention to the subject as to be able to say whether there are not some that he has included in this bill which ought to remain in the statute-book as they now are. I hope the Senator therefore will not press the bill this now are. I hope the Senator therefore will not press the bill this morning, but give notice that he will call it up to-morrow or next week.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Such a request under ordinary circumstances would, of course, be granted. This is an important bill, and I have given notice, I think, three or four times in the Senate that we would call it up on the first opportunity. It has been on the Calendar, as my friend from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] reminds me, probably for two months; certainly for a long time. It has been considered as fully in committee as any bill possibly could be; and, as I stated, I believe it has the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, for I have talked with him several times myself about it. I will say further that we ought not to let this bill go over, because the Geneva award bill, as is known, is to go on and be considered, and there are several other important bills. We ought not to delay this.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will allow it to go over until tomorrow, I will make no further objection after to-day; but I should like until to-morrow to have time to examine it myself. I have not given it any particular attention, as I ought to have done, probably. I think it is asking a little too much to take up so important a bill as this is with so thin a Senate. I had supposed the Geneva award bill was to go on to-day; and if that measure is not to go on, there are other measures that are of importance.

was to go on to-day; and if that measure is not to go on, there are other measures that are of importance.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I can only say for this side of the Chamber that a great many of us, though it may be our own fault, know nothing about this bill, and I for one feel that I want it to go over. I know nothing about it, and I know no one here who does. I have not heard any notice that it was to be taken up. It may be our own fault that we do not know about it, but if the Senator from West Virginia will allow it to go over until to-morrow those Senators who desire can post themselves on the matter and give an intelligent vote. I think it would be an improper thing to pass so important a bill with desire can post themselves on the matter and give an intelligent vote. I think it would be an improper thing to pass so important a bill with so thin a Senate as this. Though it may be the unanimous report of the committee, I think it would be a very unwise thing to take action with so thin a Senate on a bill so important as this. I am inclined to think some of these appropriations ought to remain. At any rate, I should like to have the opportunity of looking at it. I have had the opportunity but I have not availed myself of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is rather a strange thing that a Senator should not have heard the notice, for I have given it several

Mr. BURNSIDE. It may be strange, but I have not heard it.
Mr. EATON. I will say to my friend from West Virginia that if he gives notice to-day there will be very few Senators who hear him.
I hope he will let the bill go over; but really the matter has been so thoroughly considered by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Committee on Appropriations that the bill ought to pass.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I am not contending that the bill is not a wise one. I am only contending that it would not be wise to legislate on it under present circumstances. I think we ought to have a fuller Senate than we have now, and that we ought to have one more day to look into it.

to look into it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall yield to the request of the

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall yield to the request of the several Senators who ask that the bill go over until to-morrow. The probabilities are that the Geneva award bill will be before the Senate to-morrow; but I hope that as soon as that bill shall be disposed of this bill will follow. I hope that will be the general consent of the Senate, and with that understanding I shall let the bill go over.

Now, this bill being considered as passed over until the Geneva award bill is finished or until to-morrow, as the case may be, I want to say to the Senate that there are three measures on the Calendar from the Appropriations Committee, one of which I attempted to call up yesterday, House joint resolution No. 116. It was then said that the Senate ought to be notified of it, and it ought not to be taken up until the Senate had notice of it. I gave notice yesterday; but for reasons that operated on me yesterday, that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] was out of his seat, I will not call up that resolution at present, but I want the Senate now to take notice that I propose to call it up soon, and not to say when it is called up again that they ought to have had notice of it.

Mr. President, there is also Senate bill No. 1458, from the Appro-Mr. President, there is also Senate bill No. 1458, from the Appropriations Committee, empowering the officers of the Treasury to settle what are known as "unavailables" in the Treasury, including $28,000,000 deposited with the States. I shall ask the Senate, just as soon as the Geneva award bill is disposed of or when it is not before the Senate, to take up these three bills, and I hope the Senate will take notice now that I shall ask to have them disposed of. I would ask them now to take up the bill empowering the Treasury to settle the unavailable balances, but that some Senator would say: "I have not had notice of it, and therefore let that go over." I hope to hear nothing more of wanting notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Geneva award bill resumes it

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask leave to call up Senate bill

No. 232.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside the Geneva award bill for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be reported for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (8. No. 232) to provide for the purchase of a suitable site, and the erection thereon of a public building, in the city of Jacksonville, Florida; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, at private sale or by condemnation, in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, a suitable lot of ground in the city of Jacksonville, Florida, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable brick or stone building, with a fire-proof vault extending to each story, for the use and accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and other Government offices in that city, at a cost not exceeding $100,000, including cost of site, which site shall be such as to afford an open space between the building hereby authorized and any other building of not less than forty feet, and the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein mentioned: Provided, That no money shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of such building shall be vested in the United States. the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Has this been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator from Florida how many people are there in Jacksonville, Florida?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Some fifteen thousand people; and I will state to the Senator from New York that it is the chief city of the State of Florida, on the Saint John's River, and it does a very large business. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has been

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Florida assigns a very conclusive reason for this building, which is that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has been there. In the presence of that fact, I do not feel at liberty to object; without that I should think it very questionable; but if the Senator from Wisconsin has been there very questionable; but if the Schator from wisconsin has been there personally, it is useless for me to say anything.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I made that observation because the Senator from Wisconsin happened to state it to me just then.

Mr. CARPENTER. I concur in the remarks of the Senator from Florida, that they need, a building in Jacksonville very much. I move, in line 5, to strike out the words "in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida."

The senator to the state of the statute of the state of the statute of the state of Florida."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Florida."

BARK GRAPESHOT.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 2802. It will give rise to no discussion. The Senator from New York [Mr. Kernan] is interested in the matter.

The bill (H. R. No. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark

Grapeshot was read as follows:

Beit enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to George Law, of the city and State of New York, the sum of $15,861.50, the same properly belonging to the said Law, and being a deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the registry of the United States district our for the eastern district of Louisiana as the avails of the sale under a libel brought to said court of the bark Grapeshot, owned by said Law, and of certain freight earned by said Law, and he by order of the circuit court of the fifth circuit of the United States, before which said cause was pending, having been legally subrogated to all the rights of the libelants in the premises.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "fifty" and insert "five;" so as to read: "the sum of $15,861.05."

Mr. CONKLING. We do not want to change this bill for forty-five cents and send it back to the House. I have offered to the Senator from Iowa to pay it myself rather than have that happen.

Mr. KERNAN. The money has lain in the Treasury for years and there is no interest allowed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report in the case read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say with reference to this amendment that the computation was a mistake of forty-five cents in the House bill; but both the Senators from New York agree to pay the amount of the difference

Mr. BLAINE. Is it a difference against the Government or against the claims

Mr. ALLISON. Forty-five cents against the Government. The bill provides for a certain number of dollars "and fifty cents." The real sum should be that amount of dollars "and five cents."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the reading of the report.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.
Mr. CONKLING. Is not this bill before the Senate?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet. The Senator from Missouri asks to have the report read.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. ALLISON. The report is somewhat long. I do not think there is any doubt about the facts in the case. Unless there is some spe-is any doubt about the facts in the case. Unless there is some special reason why the Senator from Missouri desires to have the report read, I do not think it is worth while to take up time.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are in the habit of having reports read in these cases, that we may understand them. I read this report myself several days ago; I thought I had it on my desk. I have sent for it; I will have it in a few minutes. I think it is a case of a character which the Senator and it should be constructed and it should be constructed. which the Senate and the country should understand, and it should be read.

be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama insists on the regular order, which is the Geneva award bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I think I shall venture to appeal to the Senator from Alabama, not more in behalf of the proposed bill than of any other bill, not to insist now on the regular order, and when he hears may reason I think he will regard it.

The Senator from Ohio, who has charge of the bill which is the regular order is temporarily absent from the Chamber for a special reason and would like to be here if it can so conveniently occur, and I think will be here in the course of ten or fifteen minutes. I suggest to the Senator to allow some other business to go on meanwhile.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio spoke to me last night when he left the Chamber, knowing that I had moved the pending amendment, and I understood him to say that he was entirely willing that debate should proceed, but he wanted that there should be no vote, or that it should not proceed so far that he would not be at liberty to address the Saneta. I think he would be entirely contented to to address the Senate. I think he would be entirely contented to have the Senator from Alabama proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama in-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama insist on his demand for the regular order?

Mr. MORGAN. No; I waive it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question in regard to House bill No. 2802 resumes its place. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. Allison March 17, 1880:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

After a full examination of all the papers and documents on file relating to this claim, the committee find that the facts are substantially set forth in the report made to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Ways and Means on the 12th of December, 1879, to accompany said bill, which report is herein fully set forth, and has been substantially adopted by this committee as containing the material facts in the case.

"[House Report No. 10, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 103) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"Before and on the 15th day of July, 1858, George Law, of the city and State of New York, was the sole owner of the bark Grapeshot. On that day Wallerstein, Massett & Co., of Rio Janeiro, Brazil, to enforce payment of a bottomry bond previously given them by the master of said bark, to secure the payment of a loan of 89,769.44, and a premium thereon of 194 per cent, for the pending voyage, filed a libel against said bark in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana.

"Such proceedings were had in the cause that under said libel the said bark in the district of Louisiana.

"Such proceedings were had in the cause that under said libel the said bark was sold, and the net proceeds of the sale, amounting to $13,805.85, and also $2,055.20, the net proceeds of the freight earned by said bark on said voyage, amounting in the aggregate to $15,861.05, in gold, were, by order of said court, deposited in the registry thereof, subject to the order of the libelants.

"The cause was appealed from the district to the circuit court for the fifth circuit of the United States, and, before final adjudication by said circuit court, the late civil war was commenced and the cause taken before a provisional judge of the Confederate States, and by him decided in favor of the libelants. It was subsequently returned to the circuit court of the United States and by appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, by which it was remanded to the circuit court under an order for a commission to examine and report the amount justly due; and on the 29th day of March, 1875, a final decree was passed in favor of the libelants for $4,392.25, together with 19½ per cent. maritime premium and 5 per cent. interest on said sum from July 3, 1858, until paid.

"On the 27th day of May, 1876, the libelants received from George Law, the former owner of said bark, $9,175.89, being the full amount of the judgment, including interest and costs, to which the libelants were entitled. Whereupon, and by virtue of such payment, on proper motion to and order of said circuit court, the said George Law was declared subrogated to all the rights of the libelants and to be entitled, in his own right, to all and singular the proceeds of said sale of said bark and to said freight, and to the said money deposited, as before stated, in the regis-and to said freight, and to the said money deposited, as before stated, in the legistry of said court.

"The said sum of $15,861.05 so deposited was placed in the Bank of Louisiana, in the city of New Orleans, to the credit of the treasury of the Confederate States. On the 17th day of June, 1862, Major-General Benjamin F. Butler, then commanding the Department of the Gulf, ordered and compelled the same to be transferred, for safe-keeping, to the Treasury of the United States, where it has ever since remained as a technical deposit by the Government through its aforesaid military authority, but justly belonging to the said George Law, and payable to him in gold.

"The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for the bill referred to them."
The committee, however, think it wise to add to said report a copy of the record of the proceedings with reference to the bark Grapeshot had and held in the circuit court of the United States, fifth circuit and district of Louisiana, and therefore append hereto a copy of said record:

"Hon. George F. Edmunds,
"Chairman of Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate."

"Chairman of Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate."

This letter explains how the money arising from the sale of the Grapeshot and from its net earnings of freight came into the Treasury, and impliedly raises the question whether or not other applicants may not appear for a portion of the said fund; but your committee, after a full investigation, are of opinion that no such claim can arise in the case, as it seems to be assumed in the several decrees and orders entered in the circuit court that the money arising from the sale, and also from freights, was deposited in the Treasury; and the decree of Judge Woods seems to be based upon this state of facts.

This case was in the United States district and circuit courts of Louisiana and in the Supreme Court of the United States from 1858 to 1876; and during the period from 1862 to 1876 it seems to have been assumed that the proceeds of the sale were in the Treasury of the United States, being placed there under the order of General Butler.

in the Treasury of the United States, being placed there under the order of General Butler.

The leading facts in the case are found in 9 Wall., p. 129.

Your committee find that George Law was the owner of the bark Grapeshot; that he paid the full amount of the decree in favor of Wallerstein, Massett & Co., and that by order of the court was subrogated to all their rights; and that the sum of $15,861.05 was realized from the net proceeds of the sale and the net proceeds of the voyage from Rio de Janeiro to New Orleans; and the committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "five," in line 6.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Committee on Finance Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Committee on Finance how this bill and its subject-matter have anything under the shining heavens to do with the revenues of the country? The bill relates to the proceeds of the sale of a vessel in 1858. The proceeds were deposited in the United States sub-treasury, captured by the rebel authorities, and recaptured by the Union forces, and now it is a question of finance as to who shall get those things.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like some one to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Missouri as to how the Finance Committee came to have jurisdiction of this case. All I know is that it was referred to the committee, being a House bill, and the committee very carefully and considerately examined it. The Senator overlooks the fact that George Law paid into the circuit court in Louisiana over $9,000 of this fund within the last few years in order to make his title

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon, not of this fund.
Mr. ALLISON. He paid it in order to entitle him to the avails of the proceeds

Mr. COCKRELL. George Law paid the judgment of condemna-tion, which went into the Treasury. This fund never had anything to do with the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount paid by him went to the parties who libeled the vessel. I think it is a perfectly plain case, and the reading of the report ought to be satisfactory to every one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator one question. I ask him whether the Committee on Finance considered that the rights of individuals were affected by the fact that the confederate government, the rebel government, had taken possession of this property and it had passed out of the control of the owners, and then it was subseand passed out of the control of the owners, and then it was sussequently captured by the Union forces. I ask whether that affected the title to the ownership of the original party or not.

This is an important question and will be to the Treasury, as there are some few millions of dollars involved in that point directly in cases now pending before other committees. I know there is now over $500,000 of this very identical class of moneys, captured by General Butler in New Orleans, which had been placed in the banks there by the Confederate States treasurer and by the confederate receivers of the confiscation court. The money was placed there and sent to the Treasury. There are now pending before committees of the Senate bills for the appropriation of that money, and the right of these parties to recover from the Government that which it legitimately captured from the enemy will involve directly the question whether there had been any change or not.

I have read the report, but that does not cover the question. The Committee on Finance has not considered the question. This vessel was sold in 1858 by a decree of the court. The money was deposited in the hands of the receiver of the court. It was there when the war began in Louisiana. The confederate authorities took possession of began in Louisiana. The confederate authorities took possession of it. It passed from the control of the United States court. General Butler, representing the United States authorities, came to New Orleans and captured it from the confederate authorities. It is claimed that he transmitted it to the United States Treasury. It is probable that he did, and at the same time that he transmitted from $500,000 to $1,000,000 of other funds.

Now, will the Senate take this bill up and distribute this one isolated amount, or will it pass upon the whole question? Is the Senate ready to-day to say that every particle of property captured by the United States authorities from the rebel authorities reverts back to the original owner of it? That is what the committee says by this report—nothing less and nothing more.

I desire simply that this question shall be brought before the Senate, that the Senate may know what it is doing. I say that that is the question, and the committee has not acted upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand that the Senator from Missouri means to take issue upon the merits of this bill or this report. I infer that from what he said to me before and from what he says

Mr. COCKRELL. I take issue as to the merits of it; that is the wery point. I make no captious objection to its consideration, but I do make a point as to whether the Senate ought to pass the bill. That is the very point of my objection, not to its consideration. I have no objection to its being considered.

Mr. CONKLING. Then very likely I misunderstood the honorable Senator, for a while ago I considered his point of observation to be that this matter had some to the Committee on Finance.

that this matter had gone to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I stated that I should like to know how in the world the Committee on Finance came to consider a question of this kind. It has been before the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] considered it there. That was the question I asked.

Mr. CONKLING. If the honorable Senator does not make the whole of my speech, I will make part of it myself. This matter came to the Committee on Finance because being a House bill it was taken up by the President of the Senate and referred to that committee. Therefore it is not open at all to the objection, sometimes properly made here, where a Senator makes some eccentric motion and a vote of the Senate gives effect to that motion. The reference is made in the course of routine business. The bill has been before the Committee on Commerce at previous times, (perhaps that was an eccentric reference,) and it has also been before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I may say without impropriety that neither of those committees and I may say without impropriety that hertier of those committees ever found formidable the point now suggested by the Senator from Missouri, if I understand his point. The question requiring investigation was different; it was one of the identity of funds or the inclusion of these funds in a larger sum seized on a certain occasion. That was the issue to which the other committees deemed it important the address the context of the series of the tant to address themselves, and they did not find formidable at all such an objection as the Senator from Missouri now makes. That possibly may account for the fact that the report, and very likely the previous reports did not and do not deal with that question.

Having investigated this case twice as a member of a committee, and having known about it for several years, I think but one possible doubt can exist in regard to it, and that doubt I believe must be resolved in its favor. That is, as I have suggested, the question whether the funds paid in were those taken out or included in those taken out. I do not think there is any fair ground on which to affirm that they are not; and unless that can be affirmed, I say to the Senator from Missouri that I know of no answer whatever to this claim.

I do not go into the particulars about it, because the report does that, and so could I, but I think that every committee which has examined it, and certainly there are three, have come to a favorable conamined it, and certainly there are three, have come to a ravorable conclusion in regard to it, and no other committee ever came to an adverse opinion in either House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from New York to decide the question which I propounded. What effect did it have upon the ownership of private property when it was captured by the rebel authorities, taken possession of, in their exclusive control and possession and the recently of the Union forces and taken possession. session, and then recaptured by the Union forces and taken possession of by them and covered into the Treasury? What effect does that have in law upon the ownership of the original claim?

Mr. CONKLING. My versatile friend from Missouri is very good at putting conundrums and he puts to me now rather a compound conundrum. I do not know how it might be in such a case as he states; I should want to consider it and study it. One reason would be that it would be an entirely new case, having, as I submit to that Senator, a resemblance to this too remote to be an analogy in any sense whatever. Here was a bid made at a judicial sale; here was money paid into court, deposited in a bank, and transmitted finally to the Treasury of the United States. I should like to know how the Senator likens that to the capture of private property by the confed-

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from New York to be frank as he usually is. I ask him if the report does not state explicitly that the money went into the possession of the confederate authorities, and whether the report does not raise the question I suggested.

I will read from the report on page 4:

It does not directly appear from the correspondence with General Butler that the five certificates of deposit in the confederate treasury—

The rebel treasury-represents the same moneys which had previously been deposited in the bank, and which, as the cashier states, were afterward "drawn from the bank by the clerk of the circuit court of the Confederate States." That the moneys deposited in the treasury were intended to represent those returned to the clerk by the bank may be inferred from the circumstance that the amount stated to have been paid over by the cashier to the clerk equals the aggregate of certificates numbers 1, 2, and 3, with an excess of twenty cents only.

I read, then, a little further down on the same page:

The conclusion implied in the bill that the draft of £3,000 represented the moneys which had been deposited in the registry of the court may perhaps be doubted, since it appears that those moneys were withdrawn from the bank by the confederate clerk, and were afterward deposited with the Confederate States treasury, whence they were never recovered.

Mr. ALLISON. That is from the letter of the Secretary of the

Mr. ALLISON. It at is from the letter of the constant of the Treasury?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me just one moment the circuit judge, Judge Woods, in the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, having legitimately this case before him, decided in open court that this was the identical money, and ordered a judgment open court that this was the identical money, and ordered a judgment and decree in favor of the complainant here, George Law. That is absolutely conclusive upon us. There is a decree, which is cited in the report, showing that this was the identical money, and that it was in the possession of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say there is nothing in the judgment of Judge Woods to show any such thing. I ask the Senator to read the clause which shows it.

which shows it.

Mr. ALLISON. It has nothing whatever to do with the question of the confederate captures or the captures by the United States Government afterward. This case was in court from 1858 to 1876.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was the sale?

Mr. ALLISON. The sale was in 1858.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where did the money go?

Mr. ALLISON. The money was in the custody of the court.

Mr. COCKRELL. What became of that court when the confederate authorities took possession in New Orleans, I would ask the Senator?

Mr. ALLISON. The money was in the custody of the court. When the confederates took possession of Louisiana, I suppose there was some change in the court, but the moment General Butler came in possession of New Orleans he organized a court there. The case in 9 Wallace shows that this money was still in the custody of the court, and it remained in the custody of the court. Although it was nominally on deposit in the bank it remained in the custody of the nominally on deposit in the bank it remained in the custody of the court all the time, and General Butler merely transferred that money from the bank to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Missouri admonished me to be frank. If I am frank, I hope he will take no offense. The honorable Senator, pursuing a theory of his own, has stumbled over the facts which gave rise to the only question in the case, as I told him, namely, a question of the identity of the money; that is all; and picking up facts investigated merely for the solution of that question, the Senator uses them to support some theory that he has about captured or abandoned property, which I understand has nothing in the world to do with the merits of this case.

do with the merits of this case.

Here was a bid made at a judicial sale; the money was paid into the court; it was deposited in a bank, and as a matter of fact, as found by this report, it has found its way into the Treasury of the United States. Now, the question is whether the man who paid it is to receive it back, and that without interest, after all these years. The honorable Senator from Missouri puts to me the question, what I think the case would be if review to receive had been controled by The honorable Senator from Missouri puts to me the question, what I think the case would be if private property had been captured by the confederates? I do not know but that he ventured to call them rebels, with a temerity which I should not be guilty of, but the honorable Senator has some privileges in that regard which it would not do for me to assume. He wants to know, if the rebels should capture private property of a private individual, and then something else should happen to it, what I think the law would be. It would be hard enough for me to find out what the law would be in such a case when the case arose; but that is not this case. It is only beclouded and darkened by talking about it in that regard.

There was a fair question whether the money that George Law paid found its way into the Treasury of the United States. That question on three or four different occasions was investigated with care, now on three or four different occasions was investigated with care, now by one committee, then by another, and at last by the Committee on Finance, and as far as I know they have always found that such was the fact. That I submit to the honorable Senator exhausts the inquiry in that regard.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from New York, who has been a member of the Judiciary Committee, did the Committee on the Judia member of the Judiciary Committee, did the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate ever make any report on this case?

Mr. CONKLING. I have inquired of another member of the committee in that respect, and I speak on a recollection which I will take no offense if the Senator challenges when I say that I think they did make a formal report. I am quite confident that the case was investigated, and I am quite confident, as far as I may refer to the doings that the construction of the committee of the committee. of a committee, that the conclusion and judgment of the committee was that this claimant was entitled to the money. I should be greatly astonished if it should turn out that they did not in fact report back the bill; but if the committee failed to do so it was an omission and an accident.

The Committee on Commerce coming into possession of it, I do not know how—I presume by some similar hasty reference by the presiding officer of the body—also investigated the case, and came to the same conclusion on another occasion, there being, I cannot well repeat too often, because I fear the Senator has not attended to it so far, never in the estimation of any committee such a question as he starts but in the estimation of any committee such a question as he starts but only a simple question of fact whether the money paid by Mr. Law had been covered into the Treasury of the United States or inured to its benefit, it being conceded all around that if it had been, manifestly it was his money and not the money of the United States.

My honorable friend from Missouri likes nothing so well as to do a good-natured thing; and inasmuch as the Senator from Ohio has come in, who has charge of the Geneva award bill, and will be up here presently demanding that something should be done with that, I hope the Senator from Missouri will have the good nature to allow a vote to be entity demanding that something should be done with that, I hope the Senator from Missouri will have the good nature to allow a vote to be taken on this bill, which has been hung up and postponed from year to year until if it keeps on eternity will grow gray and hobble on the crutches of time before the claimant will get his money.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is peculiar in that position.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this case was once before the Committee on the Judiciary, but I cannot remember at this moment whether we pursued it to a final decision or not; that can be looked up. The thing that strikes me at the present moment treating it as up. The thing that strikes me at the present moment, treating it as res nova, is that I see by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States referred to in the report of the Committee on Finance who seem to have considered this bill irregularly under some order of who seem to have considered this oil irregularly under some order of the Senate passed as a matter of course, because it is properly a judi-cial question, that in the year 1869 the Supreme Court passed a de-cree in favor of the libelant. The libelant was the man who had loaned the money, one Clark, I think, but no matter what his name

Mr. ALLISON. Massett & Co.
Mr. EDMUNDS. The libelant at any rate was the person who had lent money on a bottomry bond while the vessel was in the port of Rio, Brazil; and the vessel having arrived at New Orleans she was libeled to compel the payment of this bottomry bond. The vessel was sold, as is stated by the Senator from New York, under an order of the court and $15,000, in round numbers, was realized and paid into the registry. The $15,000 therefore took the place of the property. The Supreme Court having decreed in favor of the libelant, out of that $15,000 the people who lent the money of course are clearly first entitled; they must be paid; and then whatever balance should be left would be paid to the person who had become the owner of the vessel. George Law, it appears in the statement of the case in the Supreme Court, appeared and filed a claim as representing the vessel, either as owner or in some other way—I have forgotten how—and supreme Court, appeared and filed a claim as representing the vessel, either as owner or in some other way—I have forgotten how—and resisted the suit on the bottomry bond, on the ground that the loan was a fraudulent one, collusive. The Supreme Court of the United States, after considering all that, decided as they say in 9 Wallace that there should be a decree for the libelant; that is for the parties who lent the money. Now, the thing that puzzles me at the present moment without hearing it more clearly stated, is why we are paying the whole amount of these proceeds, $15,000, to George Law, the claimant, when the decree against the money was in favor of the libelant, that would use up nine or ten or twelve thousand dollars of the fund.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain. The libelants were not lenders of money. They furnished repairs to this vessel in Rio, and George Law, the owner of the vessel in 1858, claimed vessel in Rio, and George Law, the owner of the vessel in 1858, claimed that there was a collusion between these people who furnished the repairs and the master of the vessel; and he resisted their claim, first, because it was excessive in that they charged excessive sums; and secondly, because of collusion with the master of the vessel. That litigation went on for a long time, and was finally appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that he, as the owner of the vessel, was not liable, and that the vessel itself was not liable because of this collusion, and that he ought to have the whole of the money; but the Supreme Court decided that these libelants were entitled for these repairs to a certain sum, and they directed that the question he referred to a master in New Orleans to ascertain the the question be referred to a master in New Orleans to ascertain the amount, and that whatever that amount should prove to be upon an investigation by a master or by the circuit court, it should be paid over to the libelants.

The case went back to the circuit court of Louisiana, and going back there Judge Woods found the sum of $9,000 due these libelants, citizens of Rio. They were not citizens of the United States. This 39,000 included the amount for repairs, with 191 per cent. of bottomry $9,000 included the amount for repairs, with 19½ per cent. or bottomry bond and 5 per cent. interest, rendering a judgment against the fund in favor of these libelants for $9,000. George Law stepped up to the court and paid over in 1875 this $9,000; and if the Senator will examine the report a little further he will see that Judge Woods decreed on the payment of that sum by him that he should be subrogated to the rights of the libelants, and should be entitled to receive the whole of this fund. That is all there is of the case. He not only was the original owner of the vessel, but he has paid on account of these people in Rio the sum of $9,000 out of his pocket in 1875, and the court has adjudged and decreed that he is entitled to this whole fund, and that the fund is in the Treasury of the United States. Now, I do not

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. KERNAN. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me, I will just read Judge Woods's decree, which I think answers his question, made on the 27th of May, 1876, after the case had gone back and after the case had bed the investigation. they had had the investigation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that. My eye has just fallen on it. I have t before me

Mr. KERNAN. He was subrogated to the rights of the libelants on paying what he did pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would explain that part of it. Then we come to another thing which seems a little curious in the hasty reading. On the 29th March, 1875, Judge Woods, this case having gone back from the Supreme Court, entered this order:

On consideration whereof, and for reasons assigned in writing, it is ordered and decreed by the court that all the exceptions be overruled, the report be confirmed, and that libelants do recover from the proceeds of the bark Grapeshot the sum of $4,392.25—

Instead of $9,000— Mr. ALLISON. That was the original sum. That was the amount that the master found due for these repairs in 1858.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It goes on-together with 19½ per cent. maritime premium on said sum and 5 per cent. per annum interest on said sum of $4,392.25 from 3d July, 1858, until paid, and costs of suit.

Now, I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that that has amounted in the whole to this sum of $9,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that was paid?

Mr. ALLISON. The repairs having been made in 1858 the contest

Mr. ALLISON. The repairs having been made in 1898 the contest was really between the owner of the vessel and the master.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I can readily see. That was the contest all the time. That brings us to the question presented by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from New York on the subject of whether this money, the proceeds of the sale of this vessel, has been received into the Treasury of the United States; and the proof of that is said by the Senator from Iowa to be a recital or statement in the order of India. Judge Woods in which he declares that these payments spoken of are to be made out "of the proceeds in the registry, now on deposit in the United States Treasury at Washington City." If there were any doubt about the fact, I must be excused for one from recognizing any doubt about the fact, I must be excused for one from recognizing the right of the court, in a point not before it, to decide as against the United States or anybody else, where the funds were, except (as might fairly be implied from this) that Judge Woods had himself ordered the money which was in the possession of his court to be deposited in the Treasury, but evidently it does not mean that; it refers to the old affair probably. Therefore I should not want to take the opinion of Judge Woods, who had not any issue before him to try under evidence in the case against the Grapeshot, as to what had become of the money as evidence as to where it went, but then we become of the money as evidence as to where it went, but then we go back to the statement in the report of the House committee that-

The said sum of $15,861.05 so deposited was placed in the Bank of Louisiana, in the city of New Orleans, to the credit of the treasury of the Confederate States.

That was after the rebels got possession, I suppose as a matter of fact. Then without stating exactly when that was, it proceeds to

On the 17th day of June, 1862, Major-General Benjamin F. Butler, then commanding the Department of the Gulf, ordered and compelled the same to be transferred, for safe-keeping, to the Treasury of the United States, where it has ever since remained as a technical deposit.

Then the Secretary of the Treasury comes in and sends to the Committee on the Judiciary when it had the matter under consideration in 1876, a statement of all that was known at the Treasury on the subject of the identity of this money, and that I must say does not leave it quite so clear as Judge Woods thinks it is that this is the money, the proceeds of this bark.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me a word just at that

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me a word just at that point. He will see that from 1862 to the present moment, notwithstanding this case was pending constantly in Louisiana, no other party has appeared either at the Treasury or in the courts in Louisiana having charge of this subject-matter to claim this money or any part of it. Therefore the committee thought it was under all the circumstances quite clear that this identical fund which had been than the clear that the senator to the Bank of Louisiana and transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Bank of Louisiana, and which by them was placed to the credit of the Confederate States and then taken by General Butler, was the fund in the court, being the proceeds of the sale of this bark. I think there can be no reasonable doubt about that from all the circumstances, and so the committee thought.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be so. If this is the identical money or the substitute for it, then it would seem clear enough on the statement of this case, irrespective of the question that the Senator from Missouri has made, that these claimants or the person that represents them ought to have the money. But that it did go into the possession of the Confederate States as a mass and that General Butler made some kind of reprisal either for this or something else, appears made some kind of reprisal either for this or something else, appears probably plain enough; and he sent here some money that he got from this bank. But the fact that nobody else appeared to claim it, would not show a great deal, because of course no other individual person except the people interested in that ship would think of making a claim. It was a levy by General Butler by force of his military power for some reason or without some reason, the money having been gone—

Mr. ALLISON Lembrit to the Senter form Vernant here.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Vermont that George Law, the owner of this vessel, would rather hesitate to pay out of his own pocket $9,000 unless there was a pretty clear case that if he paid out the $9,000 he would have a fair claim on this fund for it, because he was really paying out $9,000 with a chance of getting $6,000 more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should not want to act as a Senator on the

Mr. ALLISON. Nor should I. I am merely stating that as a circumstance to show that there was a fair reason to suppose that this was the identical fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think that circumstance would furnish any evidence at all. It does appear to be a fact that this bank had this money from the court while it was in the possession of the United this money from the court while it was in the possession of the United States as a deposit, and it does appear to be a fact that that deposit was turned over to the credit of the Confederate States treasury, so called. It does appear to be a fact that when General Butler got military possession he compelled this same bank to give him £3,000 sterling, amounting to fifteen thousand and odd dollars, for some purpose, that he remitted to Washington. If there was no other deposit in the bank that belonged to the judicial department of the United States, the inference certainly would arise, in the absence of any other evidence, that this was the same money, and that the levy was intended as a means of compelling the bank to make restitution. If the committee are satisfied that that is the truth, then it is evidently right that this gentleman should have it; but I cannot remember what view the Committee on the Judiciary took of it if it was ever able to reach the consideration of the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to a question?

tion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am through.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask him a question in connection with this point. This money was the proceeds of the sale of this vessel, and in 1858 it was in the hands of the register of the court. vessel, and in 1858 it was in the hands of the register of the court. The confederate authorities, or rebel authorities, as my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] would be pleased to speak of them when at the called session he was discussing certain questions, took possession of New Orleans, and they took from this register this fund, $13,000 as it was then, that was paid over into the Confederate States treasury, and nothing was taken out of it in this transaction or in any other. General Butler restores the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in New Orleans, and he says to this bank, out of which this register, being the same person who had first deposited the money, had afterward taken it and put it to the credit of the confederate register, being the same person who had first deposited the money, had afterward taken it and put it to the credit of the confederate treasury, "You must pay that amount to me; you had no right to let this man have it," and that amount, £3,000—not the money that was originally put there, but simply a reprisal made by General Butler—was sent by him to the Treasury here. It was not the only fund that was sent, but a part of nearly a million dollars taken by General Butler from parties there. There was a receiver who had large sums deposited in these banks, and General Butler took the money in the banks in the name of that Confederate States receiver. Where did that money belong? It belonged to the northern creditors of certain parties in New Orleans, and a confederate confiscation court condemned those credits to be paid into the confederate treasury instead of being paid to the northern creditors. That fund was transmitted here. Now, those northern creditors are here to-day asking that that more the paid to them. money be paid to them.

The point I want to ask the Senator from Vermont about is, do these facts have anything to do with the original ownership of this property? Does it remain just the same as if it had never been captured or taken possession of by the confederate authorities and had never been captured from the confederate authorities by the Federal authorities? Does the ownership still remain the same? Has this party the right to come now and demand that this money shall be paid to him? Have these northern creditors the right to come and demand that the money shall be paid to them? Has any man whose property was captured or taken possession of by the confederate or rebel authorities, and which was afterward recaptured and taken possession of by the Federal authorities and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, a right to come and demand it? And if this bill is passed, shall we understand that that is to be our rule of action in the future?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state as far as I am concerned, in reply to my friend from Missouri, that he undoubtedly with respect to the property captured states a perfectly sound principle. If in a time of war the public enemy capture the property of a private citizen and maintain a firm possession of it—I believe that is the phrase—for a very short period of time, sometimes only twenty-four hours, the right of the private citizen is entirely gone and he has no claim on his own government, whether the property is ever recaptured or is not. It becomes the property of the belligerent that has captured it, and just as much the property of that belligerent as any other property that it gets by purchase or in any other way; and if the United States in such a case captures it afterward it gains a title that is entirely separated, beyond all question, in point of law, from the original title of the owner, which is gone.

But I am not by any means clear that that would apply to a case circumstanced exactly as this is. Suppose there had been a war between two independent nations, and in the course of the administration of justice, in the exertion of the judicial power, there was in the possession of a court a certain fund that belonged to one or two personal claimants. New Orleans is captured by the enemy. The enemy is a civilized enemy. It proceeds to substitute a court of its own of exactly the same jurisdiction and functions as the court of the government that is displaced; and this court—it appears in this report that the confederates had a provisional maritime court of some kind that took the place of the United States district court for the kind that took the place of the United States district court for the time being—succeeds to all the rights and duties of the old court and it takes possession of these funds rightfully to administer by judicial processes in exactly the same way as between private claimants.

Then, to be sure, a question would arise whether the private claimants for the time being were on opposite sides of the war, which might interfere with their rights for the time being. That is true enough; they might not be able to prosecute their suit; but I have yet to learn that in the maritime courts the principle of parties not suing in a time of war where one is on one side of the line and the other on the other. that in the maritime courts the principle of parties not suing in a time of war, where one is on one side of the line and the other on the other, applies. They are international courts; they proceed upon principles of public law; they are administering justice for everybody on the common highway of nations, the high seas. So apparently, according to the effect of the confederate capture, it would have been the duty of the confederate court that took the place of the district court of the United States, to administer this cause as a maritime cause in rem and proceed to make proper decree. Before it did that, the money was taken out of the bank and put into the confederate treasury; but not as a confiscation, as I understand it, because that would have been deciding against the claimant at Rio, who was a neutral—that would not do—but merely as a means of keeping it, just as we often now not do—but merely as a means of keeping it, just as we often now require all the judicial moneys to be kept in the Treasury or with some designated depository. Then the United States resumes possession of the government at that place and its court revives without any new act of Congress of course; and there it was. Where was the money The money was still the proceeds in rem of a maritime cause; it had been taken by the Confederate States to be administered in the same way; it had not been administered; perhaps they had spent it, but expected to be responsible, as they would have been if they had continued in power. The court cower hash, the Amy of the United expected to be responsible, as they would have been if they had continued in power. The court comes back; the Army of the United States, or properly speaking in a legal sense, the Government of the United States compels this depositary, where the register of the court had deposited it, to turn over that money. I now assume that it is not the identical dollars, but is a sum intended to represent them and take their place. It says now "we do not recognize your taking this out of this bank and paying it to the confederate government at all; you must make it good;" and he does make it good. Suppose General Butler had paid it into the registry of the court, instead of sending it to the Treasury? It does seem to me, (recognizing entirely what my friend from Missouri has said about the public law as it respects captures,) that in a maritime cause of this kind, where the fund was under administration in the maritime court, where one of the parties to it was a neutral and not a belligerent, it cannot be said to have been subject to the law of capture at all. So I do not think this makes a precedent for the class of cases the Senator from Missouri speaks of. Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I understand from the chairman of the committee from which this bill was reported that it involves the sum of about $4,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Sixteen thousand dollars.

Mr. THURMAN. I am told between $3,000 and $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Fifteen thousand dollars.
Mr. THURMAN. Well, say $15,000. If a vote can be taken upon it, I hope it will be taken. If not I shall feel it my duty to call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I desire to put a question to the Senator from Vermont who has met some of the points and objections that I made in this case, and which the Senator from New York and the Senator from Iowa had not done.

Mr. BLAINE. I submit—

Mr. BLAINE. I submit—
Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going to consume more than a moment;
but I do not propose that this question—
Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator from Missouri will see that in a moment he can ask a question that it would take the Senator from Vermont an hour to answer. There is the trouble.
Mr. COCKRELL. No, it will not take him that long. It is a very simple question that I propose to ask. This money was in the hands of the bank. General Butler, without any authority save that of simally a commanding general demanded that the money should be taken of the bank. General Butler, without any authority save that of simply a commanding general, demanded that the money should be taken out of the bank, that is that an amount equivalent to this should be paid. They once had £3,000. He says, "You parted with it improperly; you must give me £3,000 in lieu of it." Now, is the right of that bank barred and estopped from asserting a claim to that fund? I understand that bank and others are here to-day demanding that this money shall be returned to them. The Secretary of the Treasury

The draft was apparently exacted from the bank by General Butler to replace those moneys which he assumed to have been improperly paid over to the clerk of the confederate court, the same person who had previously deposited them as the clerk of the United States court. Whether or not this exaction was warranted in law and in justice, and whether or not Congress may hereafter be called upon to repay the money so exacted, are questions important for the consideration of the

The committee have not touched upon those questions at all. Now, has not that bank the right to assert its claim and title?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That undoubtedly is one of the very questions involved in the decision upon this bill, because a vote for this bill is in effect a denial of any right on the part of the bank to reclaim this money, for the basis of the bill is that this is the money that in point of admiralty equity and of admiralty identity is the proceeds of the money, for the basis of the bill is that this is the money to it in point of admiralty equity and of admiralty identity is the proceeds of the ship that was duly sold in a time of peace; and to pass this bill, therefore, is to deny, by the judgment of the Senate and of the House of Representatives and the President, the right of the bank to reclaim the money. That is a question which may be argued on both sides very likely, but this will decide it; and as far as I am advised, I think I should be quite as willing to decide it; for a process of the average of the same of the sa Very likely, but this will decide it; and as far as fain accised, relimble 1 should be quite as willing to decide it in favor of the owner of the vessel as in favor of the bank under the circumstances, although it might appear in a certain case that a levy of this kind made to replace moneys deposited was an unjust exaction not warranted by the principles. moneys deposited was an unjust exaction not warranted by the principles of military law or military justice. But in a general way, as far as this case has been stated, I should rather incline to think that we were doing the right thing to hold that Butler took this money properly and to turn it over to the party who otherwise would still be entitled to it; but as the Senator says we must do it with our eyes open because it implies a decision.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to ask the Senator who reported the bill and has it in charge if in referring to the Grapeshot decision in 9 Wallace he relies on that decision as the law of the case, or if he simply refers to that for the facts?

simply refers to that for the facts?

Mr. KERNAN. Simply to show that we took back the money, and then the court administered it according to that decision.

Mr. GARLAND. Simply for the ascertainment of the facts?

Mr. ALLISON. The facts are detailed very fully in 9 Wallace.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator does not really consider that decision

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator does not really consider that decision as the law controlling this matter?

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is relied on to show what the party is entitled to.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. The decision does not settle the case we have at this moment in hand. It does settle the fact that the libelant, being a citizen of Rio, was entitled to the proceeds of this vessel to the extent of his lien.

Mr. GARLAND. That is a matter of fact. I suggest that if the decision in 9 Wallace is relied on as the law, we have more than we can get rid of at this time, and I enter my protest. If the committee merely refer to that as ascertaining the facts out of which this claim merely refer to that as ascertaining the facts out of which this claim arises, and by which it must be disposed of, very well.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senate will dispose of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance to strike out "fifty cents" and insert

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 48, nays 3; as follows: YEAS-48.

Allison, Bayard, Blaine, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McPherson, Davis of W. Va., Eaton, Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Ransom, Rollins, Saunders, Saulsbury, Maxey, Morgan, Morrill, Paddock, Slater, Thurman, Vest, Walker, Butler, Hamlin. GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Mr. THURMAN. I call for the regular order. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY.) The Geneva award resumes its place.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say to the Senate that if the Senate shall sit on Saturday I will ask it on Saturday to sit the Geneva award bill out. If it shall adjourn over to Monday, I shall ask it to sit the bill out on Monday

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] to the fourth proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope some Senator who is disposed to speak on this bill will take the floor now and address the Senate upon it.

Mr. BLAINE. If no one does, why not ask a vote?

Mr. THURMAN. Because I do not want to have a vote on that amendment until I am heard on the question.

Mr. BLAINE. The ordinary mode of treating a bill before the Senate is, if there is nobody to speak on it and there is a pending question, to vote on it.

Mr. THURMAN. But everybody knows that upon that amendment depends the vote on this bill so far as a large number of Senators are concerned, and that is really the main question, or one of the main questions, that we are to pass upon. I do not wish to speak to-day; I am not prepared to speak to-day. I am told other Senators desire to speak. Let them proceed. There is no necessity for voting on an amendment that is really decisive of the fate of the bill.

Mr. EATON. If my friend will permit me I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill now before the Senate, and I ask that it be read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut submits a substitute, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

The Chief Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Whereas, under existing statutes enacted for the purpose of distributing the sum of money paid by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States upon the award made by commissioners at Geneva, full payment has been made of the demands of all persons upon said fund who suffered direct losses from the depredations of the inculpated confederate steamers; and

Whereas, after the payment of such direct losses, there remains a balance of said sum of money which it is the duty of Congress to apply justly and equitably for the benefit of those who sustained indirect loss and damage by reason of such depredations; and

Whereas the public war debt was increased by reason of such depredations in a sum far in excess of said balance of said fund and remains a heavy burden upon the people of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the balance of the sum of money in the Treasury of the United States that was paid by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States under the award of the commissioners made at Geneva shall, with its accumulations, be applied to and made a part of the sinking fund provided by law for the reduction and payment of the bonded debt of the United States, and to no other purpose.

Mr. EATON. I ask that that be printed.

Mr. EATON. I ask that that be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print will be entered.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the bill

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not know that I have ever Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not know that I have ever witnessed quite such a proceeding as we have now before us. The great contest from the very first bill that was introduced on this subject has been whether the insurance companies should be paid. They had claims according to as well-settled law as ever existed in the world. Their right to present those claims, their right to stand in the shoes of those who lost the property captured, was expressly admitted by the attorney-general of Great Britain before the Geneva tribunal. No denial of their right to present those claims was ever made, either by the Government of the United States or by the government of Great Britain. On the contrary, the Government of the United States, when presenting the claims, the government of Great Britain speaking through its attorney-general, admitted that the insurance companies had the right to present those claims. It admitted in the most distinct and clear language, both by its attorney-general in the most distinct and clear language, both by its attorney-general and by the judgment of its arbitrators at Geneva, that the insurance companies were subrogated to the rights of the insured.

The question from the first has been, Shall these insurance companies be allowed to prove their claims before any tribunal that we may establish to hear claims upon this fund? In 1874 the Congress of the United States excluded them from a hearing virtually, and the question ever since has been whether or not they should be entitled to a hearing. A majority of the Senate once voted, upon the yeas and nays, that they should be heard. In the absence of six or more Senators who had voted that the insurance companies should be heard the question was taken up again in the Senate, and with a thin Senate that vote was reversed and the bill was passed against the will and the opinions of a majority of this body. How that was done those who were here at the time will well recollect.

Now, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] moves to strike out these insurance companies, to exclude them from any consideration, to exclude them from even the right to make their claim and leave it to the court which we are to establish to decide. He proposes to absolutely shut the door in their faces and give them no day in court whatever; and upon this amendment, which goes to the very substance of the bill, we are to be told that we must have a vote now, without any regard to the parliamentary usage and that courtesy which has always prevailed in the Senate, and which gives to the organ of a committee that reports a bill the right to be heard in the close of the debate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio does not understand me to have

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio does not understand me to have made any such suggestion about the amendment?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts did not make it. He moved the amendment, as he had a perfect right to do; but here are Senators, to the knowledge of us all, who are opposed to this bill, are opposed to allowing the insurance companies a day in court, will not permit them to be heard, and who are ready to address the Senate as we are told, and yet they keep silent here. They will not speak; they want a vote to be taken on this amendment instead of speaking now and allowing the debate to proceed and the vote to be taken on the bill which involves this amendment or to be taken on this amendment when it shall give at the close of the debate. this amendment when it shall arise at the close of the debate.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Ohio will permit me to say that the Senate yesterday, and to-day also, expected to hear from the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] a member of the Judiciary Committee, on the same side of this question with the Senator from Ohio. To whom is the Senator now directing his criticism?

Mr. THURMAN. I am directing my criticism, I think, to those who are opposed to the bill and who want to speak, but will not now.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator, as I understand him, if he will permit me to interrupt him, is a little angry because Senators will not speak against his views. He is criticising us because we do not get up and oppose his views. Why does he not criticise those who are ready to speak on his side and who keep silent? If those who are opposed to his views are ready to vote, in Heaven's name, should they be subjected to the sharp criticism of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee because they do not get up here and argue against him ?

I said to the honorable Senator that for one I am ready to vote. do not control a solitary vote in the Senate except my own. ator now says it is a most extraordinary circumstance that those who are opposed to this provision, which he says is the leading and salient one of the whole bill, do not speak against it. He criticises us because we do not get up and fire away at the position which he holds.

Mr. THURMAN. There is another example of the mode of the Senator from Maine. Without asking my leave he springs to his feet and interjects a speech of his right in the midst of my remarks. It may be right, but it is not the usage of the Senate, and never was before the Senator came into this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Burnside in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor, and must not be interrupted without his leave.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I say that those who support this amendment and who intend to speak in favor of it ought to speak now. Suppose the amendment be adopted in Committee of the Whole, how. Suppose the amendment be adopted in Committee of the Whole, those who are opposed to the bill will still speak in favor of the amendment, because it has to pass the ordeal of a vote in the Senate. They will still speak; we know perfectly well they will speak. Why do they not speak now? That is the question which I wish to ask in view of parliamentary usage and the courtesies of debate. Why do they not speak now? I am perfectly willing that anybody who is either for or against the amendment shall speak; but I do protest against pushing this amendment to a vote before the amendment has against pushing this amendment to a vote before the amendment has against pushing this amendment to a vote before the amendment has been discussed, as it ought to be thoroughly discussed. In the opinion of Senators whether it is necessary to discuss it or not is not exactly the abstract question to be decided. The question is whether Senators believe that it ought further to be discussed; that is the question, and until Senators are willing to say that the discussion ought not further to proceed I say that the discussion ought to go on, and Senators who intend to speak ought to speak, and not let this bill be put off again and again, especially when scarcely a day passes that reflections are not made upon the Judiciary Committee and upon the organ of that committee who has the bill in charge by order of the committee, about the delay of the bill. Some time I may take those reflections up for consideration, and with the record of the Senthose reflections up for consideration, and with the record of the Senate before me may show how much justice there is in them, but I do not wish to interfere with the business of the Senate or the consideration of this bill by doing that now.

I simply ask that there be observed what has been the usage of the Senate, what has been the courtesy of the Senate, what has been the practice of the Senate, the most pleasant legislative body in the world in which to hold a seat because of the high sense of honor and world in which to hold a seat because of the high sense of honor and courtesy that has always prevailed. I ask that that may still prevail, and that we may have debate before the vote is taken upon so important a part of the bill as the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts brings before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to remind the honorable Senator from Ohio that the last speech made in this debate was the very able speech of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Call.] in support of the amendment. It seems to me that conceding to the Senator from Ohio, whether rightfully or not, his claim that the amendment involves so much the essence of the bill, that it is fair that he should have his close of debate before a vote on the amendment is taken, he, on the other hand, will not on reflection insist that it is reasonable to require that every will not on reflection insist that it is reasonable to require that every speech which is to be made in support of the amendment should be made before anybody except himself who is to speak against it speaks. It seems to me the proper thing is for some gentleman on the other side of the question now to take the floor and address the Senate, some gentleman other than the Senator from Ohio, and if there be nobody except the Senator from Ohio who desires to address the Senate in opposition to the amendment, then I think the Senator from Ohio will have no difficulty in having the friends of the amendment agree that he may proceed to address the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, upon this as upon most other questions which come before this body I have been a silent member. I have obtruded no single word of debate upon this subject. I must confess that the remarks which have fallen from the Senator from Ohio have astonished me, or they would astonish me if I had not arrived at that age where I am not astonished at anything.

This subject has arrived almost to the maturity of manhood. It has been discussed in both branches of Congress for long years; several bills have been sent to us from the other House; and I assume that Senators in this body to day are pretty well acquainted with the main features that are presented. The question has two aspects, one strictly of a legal character, another of an equitable kind, and the strictly of a legal character, another of an equitable kind, and the views are presented upon the one side or the other of this question from the one or the other of those stand-points. It has "dragged its slow length along" in this body, and after these years of discussion and after this long protracted debate in this body, that the Senator from Ohio, my worthy friend, should make a labored speech inviting Senators to speak is past comprehension. "Clifford, why don't you speak?" We have arrived at that period when it becomes necessary to demand that men shall speak! I should think a fair inference to be drawn would be that Senators are ready to vote when they do not want to speak without being invited and urged to speak. want to speak without being invited and urged to speak

It is in accordance with the parliamentary law—and I know there is no Senator upon this floor who would violate that law—that the honorable Senator who reported this bill shall be permitted to close the debate. It was equally his duty to explain the bill in all its provisions, which I am told he has already done; though I had not the pleasure of listening to him, as I certainly should have done had I known he designed so to do.

If the Senator to-day says that he is not ready to speak and desires to postpone his speech until to-morrow, I do not believe that there is a man on this floor who will not join with me in saying, extend to the Senator the courtesy. But this soliciting debate here when we have been worn out by speech after speech and debate after debate, year in and year out, and not allowing us to vote is a remarkable spectacle to be presented in the Senate. I think it would have been wiser and better if the honorable Senator had said, "Let us vote;" wiser and better if the honorable Senator had said, "Let us vote;" or if he desired to say that he wanted the opportunity of presenting his views upon this bill, and that, from health or anything else, for his own personal private convenience he preferred to do it on another day, I certainly should join with what I believe would be the unanimous sense of this body to give him the opportunity to do so. I think we have had talking enough. I think it is the bane and the curse of this body that we have so much talk. We had a debate here this morning, a hearty criticism upon a bill which to me was somewhat remarkable, I confess; but it was debated, and finally passed. I could see no good resulting from that debate; for a plain statement of the case had been made.

I do not believe there is any utility in prolonging this debate or any of the case had been made.

I do not believe there is any utility in prolonging this debate or any public good that will be promoted by extending it. I wish to vote, and I stand here asking the Senate to let us have a vote at the earliest possible period of time. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that I rejoiced when I heard him say that if we had a session on Saturday he would ask that it should be to terminate this question, or if we did not have it on Saturday we should terminate it on Monday. I would have been very much more gratified if the Senator had said to us, "Let us meet to-morrow and finish this bill." If there are Senators who wish to speak I will sit here and listen to them with all pleasure, but I do want to see this debate terminated.

but I do want to see this debate terminated.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] on this occasion or any other has failed fully to state himself, he is abundantly able to supply any omission; and I make this remark rather by way of apology than explanation for my venturing to say a word in answer to the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin.] Unless I totally misunderstood the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Maine, unintentionally of course, has vivon a west unfair construction to what the Senator from Ohio said given a most unfair construction to what the Senator from Ohio said. It is very easy to intimate, it is jocose and facetious to intimate, that the Senator from Ohio rises here to coax somebody to attack his bill. Had he done so, I think it would have been fairly the occasion for criticism.

If I offend anybody, it will not be the honorable Senator from Maine by being candid. Therefore let us come to the facts, as we all know them to be. Here is a very important measure. One of the features of the bill as reported is to recognize a class of claimants whose unfortunate attribute and whose real objection, in my belief, lies in the fact that they are corporations. To defeat that feature of the bill, it seems to be supposed is to advance a long distance at least in establishing the claims of somebody else. Thus the amendment aimed at the insurance companies is of the very essence and gravamen of the measure; I might say it goes to the root of the whole matter; and yet by an exercise of parliamentary right, and not an accidental or impromptu exercise of that right I imagine, a Senator has made a motion which puts in the forefront the question to which I have alluded, which is the radical and ultimate question of the bill.

has made a motion which puts in the foreiront the question to which I have alluded, which is the radical and ultimate question of the bill. If, as the Senator from Maine suggests, the Senate generally was ready to vote upon this question, thereby meaning the whole question, the topic covered by the bill, it would be very odd for the Senator having it in charge to attempt to provoke or encourage or invite debate in opposition; but it is perfectly well understood by Senators all around me and around the Senator from Ohio that one, two, three, four a servicious la number of Senators intend to debate the bill and four, a considerable number of Senators intend to debate the bill and intend to make arguments leveled against its chief features as it came from the Committee on the Judiciary. But the pending amendment as I have said, which is the first question in order, these same Senators, it seems, propose to have voted upon before the debate shall occur, which will really illuminate it. There is some reason for that. It is a good reason, no doubt. There is some motive for it. It is a laudable motive, no doubt. But the honorable Senator from Ohio has fallen into the strange error of supposing that a discussion in the Senate ought rather to precede a vote than to follow it. He has fallen into the error of supposing that the arguments had better be made before the judgment is rendered, and that the Senate had better not imitate that justice of the peace who when counsel apologized for being prolix said, "Oh no, I entered judgment an hour ago in this case, and I am perfectly willing to hear you." That is as I understand the honorable Senator from Ohio; that is as I think in fact my astute friend from Maine understood, but with somewhat of facctiousness he chooses to present the case as if the Senator from Ohio was really crying out for more time to prepare himself to close four, a considerable number of Senators intend to debate the bill and Ohio was really crying out for more time to prepare himself to close the debate ultimately on the bill, or else as if the Senator from Ohio was so doubtful lest anybody would attack his bill that he was carrying about a parliamentary chip on his shoulder daring somebody to knock it off.

Mr. President, I am not going, especially at this time, to indulge myself, should I do so at any time, in observations touching the Geneva award. I have some views, mistaken or otherwise, and it is possible that at some time I may do the Senate so great an injury as possible that at some time I may do the Senate so great an injury as to ask it to listen while I say something briefly about it. I only say now that the subject is a grave, and as the contrariety of views shows, a somewhat difficult one; and before we vote on amendments radical and substantial in their character, I fully agree with the Senator from Ohio that any discussion heard here, unless it be a discussion intended to resound in the galleries and beyond, any discussion waged here for the enlightenment of the Senate, should take place before the yeas and nays are called and we are summoned to record

The honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] has offered an amendment, or given notice of one, not even in order now, so encumbered is the record with amendments, and if we were to have a vote at once on an amendment without further debate, I should be glad to have it upon that amendment, logical as I believe it to be, unanswerable as far as I know if tried by one of the theories advanced here. If indeed the residuum of this fund be not a trust fund, if it be not fettered or encumbered by the judgment and the juris-diction of the court which awarded it, if it be a national fund sub-ject absolutely to the jus disponendi of the political department of this Government, I say conclusively logical in my opinion is an amend-ment which affirms that it is the fund of the State, of the realm, that it belongs properly in the national coffers and that appropriately it may go to nourish and secure a sinking fund the object of which is to uphold the credit and the financial honor and obligation of the country. But that amendment is so far behind that it is not even in country. But that amendment is so far behind that it is not even in order at this time. Very likely the honorable Senator by whom it will be advanced will have something to say in regard to it; and should be have something to say, I should be greatly surprised if a veteran legislator and parliamentarian as he is should seek by any mode of managing the proceedings to get the Senate to record itself upon it on a particular day or at a particular time, proposing afterward that discussion should go on.

But, Mr. President, I have been led to say much more than I intended. As the humblest member of the Judiciary Committee, from which this measure came, I have ventured to point out to the Senate and to the honorable Senator on my right [Mr. Hamlin] that the distinguished chairman of that committee did not come here to-day either to ask time for himself to prepare a close of the discussion or distinguished chairman of that committee did not come here to-day either to ask time for himself to prepare a close of the discussion or to insist that somebody should attack his bill when nobody wished to attack it, but only, as I understood him, to insist that that debate which we all know is impending, which Senators are prepared and decided to have, shall proceed for the enlightenment of us all before, and not be withheld until after, we are called upon to vote.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, when the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee last occupied the floor, the day before yester-Judiciary Committee last occupied the hoor, the day before yesterday, he closed his remarks with a proposition which he deemed unanswerable, and put it in language that seemed to defy the possibility of a successful reply. Like "official utterances" in England, it was held to be unanswerable. I desire to have it read at the Clerk's desk. It is marked on the RECORD.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

As I am up I will say one word more. Suppose there had been but one American ship destroyed by confederate cruisers, and Great Britain, by the award of the Geneva tribunal or without it, had paid to the United States a million dollars in respect of the loss of that ship, is there a man in the Senate who would say that that money ought not to be paid to the owner of that ship? If it were one single case of the loss of a ship, and for the loss of that ship Great Britain paid us $1,000,000, paid it to the United States, because no citizen of the United States can present his claim otherwise than through his government, is there a Senator here who would say that that money ought not to go to the man who lost his ship? I do not think there is. If that is true of one ship it is true of the whole one hundred and thirty-five ships that were destroyed by these cruisers.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand by the "owner of the ship" there that the Senator from Ohio means the insurance company that paid the

Mr. THURMAN. I did not mean the insurance company. It would be the same thing though if the ship had been abandoned to them and they had paid the loss.

Mr. BLAINE. I respectfully submit if the Senator did not mean the insurance company, then the statement has no meaning at all with reference to this discussion.

Mr. THURMAN. I submit that it has meaning with reference to this discussion. I am willing it may be put that way.

Mr. BLAINE. If the honorable Senator merely rose here to say that if one single vessel was lost on which there was no insurance and the owner should be entitled to be indemnified, he is asserting a truism which he can get nobody to contradict, but he said it in connection with proving the rights of the insurance companies, and with nection with proving the rights of the insurance companies, and with the fact that they by subrogation had become the owner. I submit to the honorable Senator that his remark has no meaning at all if he did not refer to the insurance company.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BLAINE. With pleasure.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The question before the Senate is not simply the question whether the insurance companies shall have a day in court. That is not the sole question before the Senate. There is a question before the Senate whether the war-premium men shall be paid. I put that by way of illustration, to show that the war-premium men ought not to be paid and would not be paid if there had been a single ship lost and paid for.

Mr. BLAINE. And paid for by the insurance companies?

Mr. THURMAN. No matter; paid for by Great Britain. Suppose there had been but a single ship and Great Britain had paid for her, and suppose she were not insured at all, yet here would come the Senator from Maine and others who think with him, and say: "Do not give this money to the owner of that ship, but give a portion of it at least to the men who have paid the war premium."

I submit to the honorable Senator that neither the Mr. BLAINE. Senator from Maine nor any other Senator at any time within the six years that this discussion has gone on in the Senate ever took that ground at all.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator and while to interrupt Mr. BLAINE. Of course.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator's predecessor in this body not only took that ground, but when the bill of 1874 was before the Senate he moved to include the war premiums.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course, but the honorable Senator says that the war premiums were to be paid to the exclusion of the men who, uninsured, actually lost their vessels. No man ever took that ground. I want to ask the honorable Senator if he meant that in case there was a single vessel lost and the insurance had been paid by an insurance company and the million dollars had been recovered from Great Britain, whether he means to take the ground that that million dollars equitably and properly should go to the insurance company?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well, now I have got the Senator just where I want him. That is just where I want the honorable Senator to stand. That is the unanswerable case he submitted. I submit also that the case he supposes might very well happen. It might very well have occurred with the watchfulness of the naval forces and the careful sailing of the merchant marine that but a single vessel was lost, and that might very well have occurred all the time these extravagant war premiums were being paid for protection.

Now, let us take the actual case. Here were $6,000,000 of war premiums paid into the insurance companies, and to make the thing a little more easy of demonstration we will just suppose that it is one company and one ship. The $6,000,000 were paid in, and in the course of their business they were called upon to pay one million out for loss, leaving $5,000,000 of net profit on the transaction. The honorable Senator says that if in negotiations with England but a single million was recovered it should all go to the corporation that had already taken five million of net profit. If that is the position the honorable Senator wants to take he is welcome to it. It tramples every consideration of equity, every consideration of justice, every consideration of fair dealing under foot, and gives only to the corporation that was enormously enriched, and deprives every other person that might have been depleted and destroyed of the slightest prospect of relief whatever.

And it is the actual case, Mr. President. There is no need of resorting to illustrations when the actual case itself is as strong as any you can use to illustrate it. The case the honorable Senator states is precisely the case before the Senate. Not one ship, but many ships were but while many ships were lost there were tenfold and twentyfold more that were paying these insurance companies for the privilege of sailing free from risk, and the gains of those companies enormously outran their losses.

I will submit to the honorable Senator that in point of equity, while the act of 1874 utterly ignores the principle of paying anybody except actual losers, while it paid every person who came within its jurisdiction who proved a loss and showed that the loss had been jurisdiction who proved a loss and showed that the loss had been suffered, I will submit here that on every ground of equity the man who had already insured his ship and got his insurance had more right to come in and claim his share of the Geneva award fund than the insurance companies had to claim anything. What was it? Suppose a man in New York, who was about to sail a ship when war premiums were 30 per cent., had said to another, I will bet you one against three that my ship will get through safely. She went down, and he won his bet, and the bet covered the total amount of his loss; would you have debarred him from being a claimant? That is practically all the insurance companies did. It was nothing in the world but a bet between the insurance companies and the owners of the ship, in which like all gambling games that are well managed, whether ship, in which like all gambling games that are well managed, whether at Baden-Baden or Hamburg or across the tables of an insurance company where the doctrine of chances is calculated, it was a bet in which the insurance companies were sure to win and did win, and did win enormously.

Mr. President, there were forty-nine insurance companies engaged in that business. I think I am correct. It may be that I err in the figures a trifle; no matter. A large proportion of those were fire and marine. Twenty-two of them I believe have gone out of existence since the war closed. In the case of one, the Boylston Insurance Company, of the city of Boston, which had $98,890 of claims, not including interest, against this fund, if the insurance companies are included, they sold that claim at public auction after due advertisement, and that claim is now reckoned at 4 per cent. interest, and may possibly be reckoned at 6; and, if so, it would amount to nearly $200,000. That claim, I say, was sold at public auction in Boston for $1,000; and I have no doubt the holder of it is industriously in the lobby to-day in the interest of the insurance companies. It was sold at public auction after due advertisement, I repeat, for $1,000. I have a paper here on the other side in regard to a very respectable insurance company of the city of Philadelphia, and it is a matter of some interest. Here is a letter which I think has some bearing on the question. It is written by a gentleman who is now the agent of the Staffordshire Fire Insurance Company of England. He was formerly the agent of the insurance company of the city of Philadelphia to which I shall refer. He addresses a ship-owner, under the date of March 22, 1880, and his letter is as follows: and his letter is as follows:

STAFFORDSHIRE FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY—LIMITED—OF ENGLAND, CORCORAN BUILDING, CORNER OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE AND FIFTEENTH STREET, Washington, March 22, 1880.

Dear Sie: Referring to our conversation on Saturday last regarding the "Geneva award," a little incident has been recalled to my memory, which may perhaps interest you, as tending to show that the desire for reimbursement by the Insurance Companies for losses paid through the depredations of the confederate cruisers is, to say the least, not entirely universal.

In an interview a few years ago with Mr. Charles Platt, the president of the Insurance Company of North America, of Philadelphia, the oldest and largest stock insurance company in this country, that genteman stated to me that his company received in war premiums during the rebellion the sum of (in round numbers) $400,000. Of this amount $100,000 was paid for losses, leaving a clean profit of $300,000. "Now," he added, "do you suppose I have got the presumption to ask Congress to refund my company, out of the moneys of the Geneva award, the $100,000 so paid." "No," he continued, "and if it were even finally decided that the insurance companies should be entitled to participate in the distribution, I should be ashamed to apply for what might be considered our portion."

This, to be sure, is merely an incident; but I have no doubt that, were the truth known, there are other marine underwriters who would be actuated by the same honorable principle.

honorable principle. Yours, very truly,

CHARLES S. PENNELL, Esq.

CHAS. H. COLE.

That letter was put in my hand with the liberty of using it publicly. You may go through the whole of the companies, and either they have become extinct and these claims have been auctioned off at a very small figure, or as to the strong solvent companies which made large profits during the war, it will be found that there is a great reluctance on the part of the best of them to come here and appear. I have a petition somewhere among my papers-I cannot appear. I have a pection somewhere among my papers—I cambe put my hand on it now—in which a large company in New York is among the petitioners for the payment of the war premiums.

Why, Mr. President, who paid these losses? The insurance companies are talked of by the honorable Senator from Ohio and others as though when a disaster occurred to an American vessel these gentlemen generously put their hands in their pockets and made it good. This war-premium fund was furnished, every dollar of it, every dollar of it was paid, by the ship-owners and ship-masters. The insurance companies never put an original dollar in, and in the case of the three or four that paid for a loss on that ground the other bill completely covered them; and in the case of mutual insurance companies, I submit, on any fair process of logic at all, when you grant it to mutual insurance companies you grant it to war-premium men. And now that we are to be debarred by the Judiciary Committee's strict construction from coming in here and making a plea for the war-premium men on the ground that they were excluded at Geneva, I think it comes high up in the catalogue of amusing narratives when we come comes high up in the catalogue of amusing narratives when we come to read the bill of the Judiciary Committee and find therein provision made for another class of claims that were excluded at Geneva. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] elaborately argued, that not one penny should be given to the war-premium men because they had been excluded at Geneva; but both those honorable Senators are upholding and enforcing a bill before the Senate which proposes to pay the losses at the hands of the exculpated cruisers, which were themselves just as distinctly excluded at Geneva.

If the Judiciary Committee expect us to follow them upon any logical basis, if they call to the Senate not to grant anything to the war premium men because they were excluded by the tribunal at Geneva, the very next moment they call out, "but we pray you grant it to the exculpated cruisers, although they were in fact also excluded at Geneva." I shall certainly yield the floor to the honorable Senator from Delaware gladly if he will tell the Senate on what ground of consistency he argues against paying the war premiums because they were excluded at Geneva, and proposes to pay the losses at the hands of the exculpated cruisers which were also excluded at Geneva. I shall be glad to yield the floor to the honorable Senator from Delaware or to the honorable Senator from Ohio on that point.

The truth is that the very arguments which those who have spoken for the Judiciary Committee bill have used are utterly illogical and utterly contradictory. The bill cannot be defended at all on that ground. And while we have been twitted a little by the Senator from Ohio for not being willing to plunge into this debate, here is the honorable Senator from Massachusetts on my left [Mr. HoAr] who has spoken elaborately, and the Senator who sits behind me from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] spoke elaborately, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Call] spoke elaborately against these features of the bill, and those speeches have not been answered by the Judiciary Committee; and yet we are commanded here to go on and argue our-selves out on this question before the supporters of this bill will deign to enlighten the Senate with their objections to the positions taken by its opponents; and we are somewhat lectured by the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee on the ground of courtesy, and he says the committee has been twitted, or has been criticised, be-cause of the delay in this bill.

I do not remember a single discourteous word that has been said by anybody about this bill. I did intimate, and if necessary I will by anybody about this bill. I did intimate, and if necessary I will assert, that the bill has languished in the most extraordinary manner. We all remember the old historic story when Queen Elizabeth asked the speaker of the House of Commons, "What have my faithful Commons passed?" he replied, "Ten weeks, Your Majesty." It is just ten weeks to-day, I believe, since the Geneva award bill was reported to the Senate, and I ask the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee what has the Senate passed meanwhile? "Ten weeks Vorn Meisett." weeks, Your Majesty.

weeks, Your Majesty."

And I think as each Congress makes a certain reputation for itself, individualizing and characterizing itself by some peculiar feature, this Congress will be entitled to be termed the lazy Congress, the donothing Congress, the Congress that comes together and sits and looks at each other and adjourns and comes together the next day and goes through the same pleasing process. If that is a reflection on the Committee on the Judiciary it is the same upon every other committee of the Senate and the same on all the Senate. But I submit that in the history of the present generation there has not been known as do-nothing and as idle a Congress as the present one.

The honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,] whose presence I I am always so glad to welcome in the Senate, whose absence I always regret to observe when I have to refer to him—the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis here entered the Senate Chamber,] I am very glad to see he is present—in his careful and elaborate and able speech a few days since referred as authority to the opinion of Sir Alexander Cockburn. I had to answer from memory and I followed him by suggesting that I thought that was entirely a dissenting opinion, and that it was a very extraordinary thing to quote it as the authoritative exposition of the Geneva tribunal. Since then I have looked over the documents, and I find that Mr. Fish, the Secretary of State, writes thus on the 22d of October, 1872, about that opinion:

thus on the 22d of October, 1872, about that opinion:

I find on reference to the protocol No. 32, accompanying your report, and containing a record of the proceedings of the tribunal of arbitration on the 14th of September, that after the signature of the decision and award of the tribunal by the four assenting arbitrators, and after the same had been delivered to the agents of the two governments, Sir Alexander Cockburn, the arbitrator named on the part of Great Britain, having declined to assent to that decision, made a statement of his own, which the tribunal ordered to be recorded as an annex to the protocol.

It does not appear by the protocol that the document which was thus ordered to be annexed was read at the time. Indeed, your report on the subject shows that that paper was presented at the last moment of the final sitting of the tribunal, and that the contents thereof were not made known to the other members of the tribunal or to the agent or counsel of the United States.

I cannot doubt that if you had had the opportunity to become acquainted with the contents of this extraordinary document you would have felt it your right and duty to object to the reception and filing of a paper which would probably not have been officially received by the tribunal had an opportunity been afforded to invite their attention to some of its reflections on this Government, its agent, and counsel.

And that is the opinion which the honorable Senator from Illinois brings into the Senate of the United States to quote and approve as the authoritative construction to be placed upon the Geneva award! That is the way Mr. Fish characterized it; and then Mr. Caleb Cushing, in his history of the treaty of Washington—that is, I presume it was written by Caleb Cushing, if the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Carpenter] will permit it to be so considered—Mr.

Cushing says:

The British arbitrator, who, so frequently in the course of the conferences, acted as a party agent rather than a judge, had been occupying himself in the preparation of a long argument on the side of Great Britain, in which he throws off the mask, and projessedly speaks as the representative of the British government. He withheld this argument from the knowledge of the tribunal at the proper time for its presentation as the "reasons" of an arbitrator. At the last moment—without its being read to the tribunal, or printed for the information of agents and counsel, as a resolution of the tribunal, adopted on his own motion, required—he presents this argument as his "Reasons * * * for dissenting from the Decision of the Tribunal of Arbitration." The title of the document is a false pretense, as we shall conclusively show in due time; the act was a dishonorable imposition on the tribunal, and on both governments, Great Britain as much as the United States.

And that is why I expressed my surprise that any word or reasons.

And that is why I expressed my surprise that any word or passage from a document thus characterized by an American Secretary of State, thus characterized by one of the most eminent of the American counsel at Geneva, characterized also quite as sharply by the letter of the American agent, Mr. Bancroft Davis, should have been introduced by the honorable Senator from Illinois as worthy to be quoted in the Senate of the United States for its guidance in any of its deliberations.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Sir Alexander Cockburn undoubtedly disagreed with the findings of the tribunal. The British government never yielded to the position we had taken on that subject. I quoted portions of his opinion to show what was really decided there. Sir Alexander Cockburn is quoted as authority for the position assumed on the other side, that this is a national matter, in the case of Rust-omjee vs. The Queen, that the Senator from Vermont commented upon so tenderly three or four years ago, and which I think the Senator from Massachusetts commented on.

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator from Illinois uses the words of Sir Alexander Cockburn now to prove that this was merely a matter between the citizens of the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. What was decided at Geneva was that the citizens of the United States whose vessels were destroyed by these cruisers had received injuries which were to be compensated for; and the extent of them could be ascertained as well by the tribunal as by a board of assessors

Mr. BLAINE. Then why does the honorable Senator support a bill which proposes to give indemnity to those who sustained loss at the which proposes to give indemnity to those who sustained loss at the hands of other cruisers? Why does the honorable Senator go for a bill which goes outside of the doctrine decided?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hold nobody is entitled to do that.

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the honorable Senator support the bill of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I support the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. The bill of the Judiciary Committee distinctly gives part of the money to those whose losses were occasioned by the expart of the money to those whose losses were occasioned by the exculpated cruisers.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Only if there is a surplus.

Mr. BLAINE. A surplus! Why it is part of the award that only specific injuries were provided for, we are told. Where does the honorable Scuator get his right to take a surplus?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If I had my own way about this, I would return to Great Britain every cent of the money that was not used in extinctions the along required to the large of the content.

satisfying the claims provided for by the award

Mr. BLAINE. But not having his own way, the honorable Senator proposes to give it to the very parties who, according to his own speeches in the Senate, have no shadow of right to it under the Geneva award and its proper construction.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not think they have any right to it

Mr. BLAINE. But you propose to give it to them.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If we are to have a surplus.
Mr. BLAINE. Of course. This Judiciary Committee proclaims to all the world-

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I give it to them instead of the payers of war premiums. That is all. Mr. BLAINE. Precisely; Mr. BLAINE. Precisely; but the honorable Senator then and the Judiciary Committee with him abandon their whole ground. They come in here with elaborate arguments to prove to us that the three cruisers that were denominated the inculpated cruisers were the only ones for whose acts of destruction the government of Great Britain was held liable, and that those who cannot prove loss at the hands of these cruisers have no right to be considered. If that is not the theory of the bill which the honorable Senator from Illinois is supmr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to tell him?

Mr. BLAINE. Gladly.

Mr. THURMAN. It is about time I think somebody should say a word.

word.

Mr. BLAINE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not interrupt without leave. If the Senator does not want to yield I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield gladly. I shall be happy to hear the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no inconsistency in this bill at all. The first section of the bill provides for paying the men in respect of whose losses the money was awarded, and declares that they shall be the first class. They are to be paid before anybody else receives a cent. Then should there he a surplus the question erises what shall cent. Then should there be a surplus the question arises, what shall be done with that surplus? After these men, in respect of whose claims the money was awarded, shall have received payment, what shall be done with that surplus? Shall it be returned to Great Britain; or shall it go into the Treasury of the United States for general purposes; or shall we make some disposition of it toward alleviating the losses of those who were not compensated by the award of the Geneva tribunal? That is the question to be decided.

For reasons which I shall give at the proper time I am perfectly satisfied that we ought not to return it to Great Britain. I may say almost in a single sentence—if I take too much of the Senator's time I will give way

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all. Go on.
Mr. THURMAN. I may say in almost a single sentence what seems to me quite sufficient, and that is, that it was not within the contemplation of the parties to the treaty of Washington that there should be any return made to Great Britain of any portion of the award that might be made by the Geneva tribunal, in case the amount awarded should prove more than sufficient to extinguish the claims upon which the award was made. On the other hand there was no expectation on the part of the United States and of Great Britain that in case the amount awarded by the Geneva tribunal should not be sufficient to pay the claims allowed by that tribunal, Great Britain should make up the difference. Suppose, for instance, the Geneva tribunal, after having decided that Great Britain was liable for certain injuries, had awarded a sum that should prove to be insufficient to compensate the losers, there is nothing in the treaty nor was there anything in the expectation of the parties that would entitle us to say to Great Britain "Make up the deficiency;" and so, on the other hand—

Mr. BLAINE. Did the honorable Senator ever hear anybody take that ground?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator let me get through? If net, I will take my seat. He asked me for an explanation.

On the other hand, if the award should prove to be more than sufficient to satisfy the claims allowed by the tribunal, it was not within the contemplation of the parties to the treaty that the surplus should be returned to Great Britain. Therefore, Mr. President, after we have paid those whom it rests upon us to pay, after we have paid those in respect to whose claims the award was made and thus discharged the moral duty of this Government, if there shall be a surthat belongs to the Government, and it is for the Government to say what shall be done with it. The Judiciary Committee saw fit to say and report to the Senate and recommend to the Senate; that should there be such a surplus it should be paid to those who had lost by reason of the acts of what are called the exculpated cruisers.

Why did it not report in favor of paying it to the war-premium men? Let me tell the Senator one sufficient reason for it, and that is, if my memory is not at fault, that on the direct question in 1874 before the Senate whether the war-premium men should be allowed to receive a portion of this fund, the proposition received but nine votes in the Senate. We could have no better instruction to the Judiciary Committee not to report in favor of them.

Then, I understand the honorable Senator from Ohio to maintain, instead of the ground which we have heretofore had preached to us by the members of the Judiciary Committee, and instead of the high and lofty ground which the honorable Senator from Delaware took the other day that he would have his right arm cut off or make some other great sacrifice rather than that one dollar should be diverted-

Mr. BAYARD. I never said anything of the kind.
Mr. BLAINE. Did not the honorable Senator say that he would have it all go back to the treasury of Great Britain?

Mr. BAYARD. But I mean I did not say anything about cutting off my arm.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator made use of some very strong form of asseveration on that particular point—the exact language I will not asseveration that it. repeat now-he made some very strong form of asseveration that it was an obligation of honor and conscience to send that money back to Great Britain if there was a surplus. Am I not right in that?

Mr. BAYARD rose

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator please, I will yield to him presently.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. The doctrine that has been maintained here first and last by the gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee was that we were bound down by the decree, and that we who rose here to speak in behalf of the men who were the real losers and sufferers were violating the obligations of national honor. The honorable Senator from Illinois, who carries with him with such dignity the grace, manner, weight, and function of the judiciary, delivered two lengthy opinions enforcing upon the Senate that view, and advising all of us that we were violating national honor if we did not stick closely to the award and adhere to the very letter of it. Now, the honorable Senator from Ohio and the honorable Senator from Illinois entirely desert that ground, and say if there are a few millions left over they will take into consideration who are the most meritorious, and will give it to the sufferers by the exculpated cruisers, or to the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, or to Sunday schools, or to what-ever in their judgment is meritorious. They might have said just with the same logic that they are going to apply the discretion of Congress to the part that is left. We have then the clear admission of those two Senators, and they see the point of my question, that in so far as keeping this bill within what they have defined to be the obligations of the award at Geneva, they have absolutely abandoned that entire ground. I shall be glad now to hear the honorable Senter of Telegram. ator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I consider our dealing with this large sum of money a question too grave to be discussed in anything like mere declamation or mere talk for talk's sake. I endeavored in discussing this question to lay down principles by which we should effectuate the object of the treaty into which the United States entered with Great Britain and the award of the arbitrators to which we submitted by that treaty; and I was unable and I am to-day unable to find any other guide for my vote in regard to the money which was paid by Great Britain into the Treasury of the United States than the treaty and the award under the treaty, the decision of the arbitrators.

I said a few days ago at some length, and I do not propose to repeat it or do more than state the substance of what I then held, that we were bound by the decision of the arbitration to which we had submitted ourselves in advance under the terms of the treaty; that where they directed us to pay money we should pay it; where the award was in favor of certain parties it should be paid; where they had objected to other classes it should be withheld, and that when we had fulfilled, so far as we could discover, the directions of the treaty, the stipulations to which we had consented, the award of the arbitrators, if any money should then be left over, it would belong, not to the American people as a nation, but to the nation who had paid it to us under what was evidently an error which we could not correct.

I began by the statement that there was no such thing as a national claim in this case. All that the United States as a government asked for and obtained under the treaty was the acknowledgment of regret on the part of the Queen of Great Britain that these losses had occurred through the negligence of her officials. That was accepted as the plaster for national wounds, and there was no money belonging to the Government of the United States as a government included in the sum that was received by us, but what we did receive was received for a purpose. For what purpose? To distribute it. And what was to guide us in the distribution? The award made by those to whom we had submitted the question. And what was that award? Simply that certain classes of losses should be paid, for which Great Britain was held to be liable by reason of her negligence in enforcing her neutrality obligations or these new rules which were incorporated into the treaty of Washington for the first time and which she declared (and so far the United States assented to the proposition) were not international law prior to that time.

Three vessels were inculpated, together with their tenders; the rest were exculpated. I held that where the property, whether vessel property or merchandise laden upon vessels, belonged to American citizens and was destroyed by the inculpated cruisers, whether the claim was presented in behalf of the original owner or the underwriter who had lawfully insured it each was to be paid according to the terms of the award. I said that you were penalizing and stigmatizing the contract of insurance when you declared that a man who had fairly underwritten the loss of another was not subrogated to claim the rights of that other as if it had been a loss uninsured. could see no difference. I can see none now. I hold it to be a certain legal proposition in my mind that the right of the insurer to recover a loss he has fairly paid is just as lawful and protected by this treaty and our proceedings under it as the original loss to the owner of goods

Now, one step further. I never agreed that there should be payment for damages inflicted by the exculpated cruisers. This bill has not yet been discussed throughout. We are to-day upon an amendment pending upon a prior portion of the bill to that to which the honorable Senator has referred. Section 4 has been moved to be amended by the Senator from Massachusetts in one particular, which is to strike out the entire rights of the underwriters. That is the provision, that is the section, that is the class of facts to which my remarks the other day were addressed. I have no objection, however, to go further and consider a portion of the bill which the Senator has drawn attention to which was not under discussion, which was not reached, and that is the construction of the rest of this section from line 17 down to line 27.

I held (and I found that was the construction of some of my colleagues on the committee) that the losses here provided for within the lines which I have stated were not losses inflicted by exculpated cruisers, but they were losses inflicted by inculpated cruisers where the actual fact of the loss occurred within less than three miles or one marine league of the shore. There had been one or two cases in which the inculpated cruisers had cut out with their boats vessels too near the shore for them to approach and attack otherwise; and our own American court of commissioners of Alabama claims in considering those cases had for reasons of their own excluded claims for loss where the vessel had been destroyed by a boat, the destroyed vessel being within a marine league of the shore.

Mr. BLAINE. Why does the Senator exercise his discretion even in that case to which he attempts to whittle it down, and go behind

Mr. BAYARD. I will tell you why I go behind it if you can so style it. My information and intention in voting for this part of the bill was to prevent the exclusion from the consideration of our own commission and from payment, of the losses caused by an inculpated cruiser under the circumstances of the vessel destroyed being within three miles of the shore.

Mr. BLAINE. But still, if the honorable Senator will permit me, under circumstances which the Geneva tribunal rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. Not at all. The Geneva tribunal did nothing of the kind.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the honorable Senator understands this— Mr. BAYARD. If the honorable Senator asks me a question, he must let me answer it.

Mr. BLAINE. I will be very liberal to the Senator I will give him an hour if he wants.

Mr. BAYARD. If this debate shall not be conducted with courtesy will end it. The Senator called me into this debate just now and is compelling me against my will to repeat or restate the positions to the Senate did me the honor to listen a few days ago. is not a question of talking for triumph; it is talking for right; it is to deal justly with this fund in a manner consistent with the honor and reputation of this Government. That is the only object I have.

As to these insurers they are unknown to me. No one man of my acquaintance, I believe, is to receive one farthing of this moneya bit of it. If I happen to know them, I am ignorant of the fact. On the bill that came up in 1873, I took the position I do to-day and I think I am sustained in it.

I think I am sustained in it.

Now what I mean to say is this. The meaning and the effect of these lines from 17 to 27 on page 3, concluding the fourth section of the bill, and which as I say we have not yet approached the consideration of, is, in my apprehension, to relieve those parties who suffered from the inculpated cruisers where the loss occurred near shore; and my information is that in one or two cases ships lying close to the land were destroyed by boat expeditions from these confederate cruisers; but because the losses had not occurred strictly on what the Alabama commission—I am speaking now of the American commission—held to be the high seas, they proposed to exclude these parties from participation in this fund. The Geneva tribunal, according to my construction of their award, did not intend to exclude parties who suffered in any way by the action of the three inculpated cruisers, whether the losses occurred near the shore or far at sea; but the Alabama commission have undertaken to discriminate and to say that the loss near shore should not be paid; it must have occurred on the high seas in order to be paid. I do not think that to be the construction of the award of the arbitrators at Geneva.

I hold that they provided that for any marine loss inflicted by the I hold that they provided that for any marine loss inflicted by the three named vessels, or the two named vessels for all the time of their sea service and the Shenandoah after she left the port of Melbourne and was refitted there, together with their tenders, Great Britain should be responsible; for the acts of the other cruisers she should not; and I have endeavored to shape my vote, and propose to shape it, from the beginning to the end, according to that doctrine. I propose to execute the award of the arbitrators according to the treaty and the plain meaning of the words they use; and if I can find no American citizens included in their award who in my judgment are entitled to receive that money for the purposes for which it was paid to us, I for one will vote to pay it back to Great Britain, for I do not think we can honestly and honorably hold it, belonging as it does to certain classes of our people; and if we cannot find those classes under the award, then I hold we have no right to the money.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, if I understand the honorable Senator, he supports the bill as it is reported from the Judiciary Committee but does not understand that it includes anything excent losses resulting it, from the beginning to the end, according to that doctrine. I pro-does not understand that it includes anything except losses resulting from the three inculpated cruisers.

Mr. BAYARD. Well, Mr. President, I have told the honorable Senator; we are discussing this bill seriatim in its provisions—

Mr. BLAINE. No, we are not discussing it by sections at all. We are discussing the whole subject embraced in it.

Mr. BAYARD. Well, Mr. President, the speech that I made a few days ago and for which I was arraigned in a loud tone by the honorable Senator from Maine as to the positions I took, was expressly upon the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] to strike out the insurance companies.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator has taken quite a long time, and I understand him. Certainly I have no disposition to misrepresent him, and, therefore, I only ask him in order that I may not state him incorrectly—I understand him to support the bill of the Judiciary Committee, but that he does it with the interpretation that it gives no losses except those resulting from the three inculpated cruisces. Is that it? ers. Is that it?

Mr. BAYARD. I propose to vote for the payment of no money except to the classes pointed out by the Geneva tribunal as entitled

Mr. BLAINE. But still the honorable Senator supports this bill.
Mr. BAYARD. Oh, well, if it is any triumph to the honorable Senator to state my case, as I think unjustly, that is a different thing.
Mr. BLAINE. I certainly want no triumph about it. I am speaking not for victory, as the Senator says; I am speaking for a cause which I have deeply at heart, for the commercial part of the United The honorable Senator made no exception to this bill, and when I asked him to state his position he goes through a quite lengthy argument to show what the bill itself directly contradicts, as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Illinois have conceded.

Mr. BAYARD. But the Senator from Delaware speaks for himself.

He has his own opinions and generally is very apt to follow them.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; but the honorable Senator from Delaware appeared in a lengthy debate in support of this bill. It is not for me to peared in a lengthy debate in support of this bill. It is not for me to inquire, I have no right to inquire whether the honorable Senator voted in the Judiciary Committee to report it. I have no right to make that inquiry; but the honorable Senator from Delaware has appeared upon the floor of the Senate in an able, exhaustive, and lengthy argument supporting this bill; and when I have pointed out that the very ground on which he made his argument is contradicted point-blank in the letter of the bill—

Mr. BAYARD. May I interrupt the Senator as to a question of fact?
Mr. BAYARD. The only speech I have made on this bill and the only point of this bill to which my argument of two days ago was addressed was contained in the amendment offered by the Senator sed was contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts which does not touch the language of the bill which the honorable Senator from Maine is now discussing. I will not say that in the principle of that argument the language which we have now under discussion was not to be affected. When we come to vote on this, then it will be time to see whether the principle which I have laid down is answered by this language or not. If it be not, I shall probably move to amend it to make it meet my views. I do not undertake to give the reasons of the honorable Senator from Illinois or the honorable Senator from Ohio; they are amply able to give their own. I should differ with them with a great deal of self-distrust; but I propose to follow my own mind and judgment in this case and I have tried to tell the Senator from Maine why I do it.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well, Mr. President, it comes back to this, that the Judiciary Committee have stood before this body and before the country as the strict upholders of the doctrine that the Congress of the United States has no right whatever to go behind the Geneva award. The columns of the old Globe, which, I believe, was in existence during the first discussion, and of the Congressional Record, are laden with the able arguments of the Senator from Ohio to prove vote on this, then it will be time to see whether the principle which that very point. The honorable Senator from Illinois has made two able arguments this session to prove the same; the honorable Senator from Delaware the other day made a lengthy and able argument to prove it also. I do not know what other members of the Judiciary Committee are intending to speak on that side; but thus far the three members of the Judiciary Committee whom I have named, and the fourth I forgot, the very able argument of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.]

Mr. BAYARD. And the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] made an argument the other way.

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly; he moved a substitute. The honorable Senator from Indiana differed toto cælo from the whole doctrine. He was of the minority in that committee. But the four Senators who have spoken for that committee, the four Senators on that side of the Chamber who have spoken for it (if I can count the honorable Senator from Illinois as on that side of the Chamber) have all taken the ground I have named without making any exception whatever, and then, presto, change! when we come to read the bill it contradicts the ground on which those Senators champion it.

Mr. THURMAN. Where is the contradiction?
Mr. BLAINE. The contradiction is that, while you have maintained in such able and exhaustive arguments that we had no right to give one dollar of this fund, except as it was awarded at Geneva, you can stand here arguing that it shall be given to a class of losses which was expressly excluded at Geneva.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to say again—I thought I had stated it as clearly as it possibly could be stated before—that this bill does not propose to take from those men whose claims were allowed at Geneva one single senator and the stated in the senator and allowed at Geneva one single penny and give it to anybody else. It does not propose to divert from them one single dollar of this money. It proposes that they shall be paid first. And when they shall have been paid, if there is a surplus, then comes the question what shall be done with that.

Mr. BLAINE. And then with that we can do just as we please.
Mr. THURMAN. We can do with that just as we please undoubtedly, according to our own discretion; and what we do is in no wise inconsistent with the argument that the insurance companies, and not only the insurance companies, but those who were not insured and who lost by reason of the inculpated cruisers, are to be first paid.

There is no inconsistency in the bill at all, not the slightest.

Mr. BLAINE. I am willing to leave it just there.

Mr. THURMAN. So am I.

Mr. BLAINE. One other word and I have done. The ground on which the honorable Senator from Illinois quoted the remarkable language of Sir Alexander Cockburn was in aid of the argument that these were claims of citizens and not the claims of a nation, and when I read the letter which Caleb Cushing cited in his opinion, the letter of Mr. Fish, I was asked I think by the honorable Senator from Delaware whether that had ever been communicated to the tribunal, or whether they had ever made any mention of it. In answer to the honorable Senator from Delaware and all others who take that ground and who can quote as the honorable Senator from Illinois does the dissenting opinion of an angry representative of Great Britain, and whistle down the wind the mature deliberations of the American Secretary of State, to all those and to those who take like ground and especially to the honorable Senator from Delaware, I beg to read this quotation, and I say it with the more pleasure because of this much discussed and hackneyed and worn-out and threadbare discussion which has gone on ad nauseam for years. I do not remember to have heard or to have seen it quoted, but possibly I am in error. The argument of the American counsel says:

It has been assumed by many persons who were but partially acquainted with the history of the negotiations—

That language cannot have referred to any Senator of the United States of course, because it would have been discourteous to do so.

It has been assumed by many persons, who were but partially acquainted with the history of the negotiations, that the United States are contending before this tribunal to be indemnified for several independent series of injuries.

That is the ground of the Judiciary Committee to-day-the exact ground-

Where

Say the American counsel-

Whereas they do, in fact, ask reparation but for one series of injuries, namely, those which they, as a nation—

Will the honorable Senator from Delaware observe-either directly or through their citizens, and the persons enjoying the protection of their flag, have suffered, by reason of the acts committed by the several vessels referred to in their case, which are generically known as the Alabama claims.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator give me the page?
Mr. BLAINE. It is news to the honorable Senator.
Mr. THURMAN. No, not much. I have read it several times before; but I would like to have a reference to the page of the book.

fore; but I would like to have a reference to the page of the book.

Mr. BLAINE. If it is so familiar the Senator would not need direction. It is on page 159, volume 3, and it knocks entirely in the head the theory of the Judiciary Committee that we were dealing with several independent series of injuries.

Mr. THURMAN. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. BLAINE. Page 189, volume 3, of the "Papers relating to the treaty of Washington." I do not want to add to that, I will leave that over night to the honorable Committee on the Judiciary to wrestle.

with. It is signed by "Morrison R. Waite, William M. Evarts, and Caleb Cushing," although I do not think that the latter's signature has an affidavit attached to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. CARPENTER rose

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Burnside in the chair.) Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask the Senator to yield to a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly. Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive busines eration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before that is done—
Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator to allow the Chair to lay the papers on his table before the Senate.

Mr. CARPENTER. Very well.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

EVENING SESSION FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. COX. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, that the House will give to the Foreign Affairs Committee an evening for the consideration of business coming from that committee are veining to the consideration of business coming from that committee, say next Friday evening week. Mr. GARFIELD. What class of bills does the gentleman propose

Mr. GARFIELD. What class of bills does the gentleman propose to bring up?

Mr. COX. I propose to bring up the immigration bill. Immigration is coming in with unexampled force and numbers, at the rate of a thousand a day and more; and if the famine keeps on in Ireland, as it will, typhus will follow, and follow with immigration, as in 1847, into all parts of our own country. The hospitals at Hart's Island and the protective guards and aids at Castle Garden will be broken up, unless some action of Congress be taken. The decision of the Supreme Court demands Federal action. Unless it be had we will be at the mercy of all diseases coming from abroad, which follow famine, without protection at the gate-way of our immigration and commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.) What is the gentleman's request ?

Mr. COX. I ask to take up foreign affairs business on the Calendar Friday evening week, and that a session be set apart for the consideration of that business.

Mr. HUNTON. Friday evening week is already taken up for the business of the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. COX. Say then Thursday evening week, that the House, at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Thursday evening week, take a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of matters reported from the Comto be devoted to the consideration of matters represent the mittee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. I will not bring up the Irish appropriation, then, if that is the apprehension.

Mr. CONGER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has taken charge of a subject which has always been committed to the Committee on Commerce—the subject of immigration. I do not know how they got possession of it. I think it had better come up in regular order.

Mr. COX. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs by vote of the House and by consent of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know how it got there.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know how it got there.

Mr. COX. Because of the peculiar exigency. Most of the provisions of the bill refer to foreign affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CONGER. Let it come up in its regular order. More than one-quarter of it comes into Port Huron, where I live.

Mr. COX. My bill provides as well for that port and its portion of immigration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. CONGER. Well, let it go.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is to be limited to that bill.
Mr. COX. Yes, if the gentleman so pleases.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order made is limited to that bill. COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 1027) to provide for the establishing of terms of court in the district of Colorado be taken from the Speaker's table and put on its passage at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Colorado shall be held at the times and places hereinafter designated, namely: At Deuver, on the first Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in October in each year; at Pueblo, on the first Tuesday in March in each year; at Del Norte, on the first Tuesday in September in each year.

SEC. 2. Whenever the terms of the said circuit and district courts shall be held at the same time and place, grand and petit jurors summoned to attend in either of said courts may serve in the other of said courts, and but one grand or petit jury shall be summoned to attend on said courts at one and the same time: but this provision shall not prevent either of said courts from procuring the attendance of several panels of jurors successively, as the business of the courts may require.

SEC. 3. The records of the district court in the several divisions of the district of Colorado, as declared by the act approved February 15, 1579, entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts in the district of Colorado," shall be kept and retained in the clerk's office of the district court of Colorado; and the district court sitting at the places mentioned in this act, respectively, shall have jurisdiction of actions, civil and criminal, heretofore brought and now pending at any such place. Actions, suits, and proceedings pending and undetermined in the district court for the southern and western divisions, as declared by said act, of which a circuit court sitting at the same place for further proceedings therein and for final hearing or trial thereof.

SEC. 4. The act mentioned in the last section is repealed, but such repeal shall not affect the power of the courts to proceed according to the terms thereof in any action, suit, or proceeding now pending therein and undetermined, or according to the terms of this act.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. That is an important bill, and should go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not object. It relates only to terms of court in Colorado, and has been agreed to unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary. It has been the universal custom in reference to such bills to allow them to been the universal custom in reference to such bills to allow them to be controlled by the local representation. If this goes to the Committee on the Judiciary and be compelled to wait the regular order for action the term of the court affected by the bill will be reached. Hence to accommodate the bar and court in that State this bill has been agreed upon by all the persons interested. I hope my friend from Tennessee will withdraw his objection.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I do not see the chairman of the Judiciary Committee present, but I am assured by the gentleman from Colorado that he has consulted that committee and the bill is approved by it. If that be so, of course I am satisfied.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary I have conferred with various members of the committee in the House, and all agree to the passage of the bill and its importance at this time. I hope my friend from Tennessee will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee the Chair does not understand as objecting, but only suggesting that the matter go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to know if this bill has been reported by any committee.

Mr. HASKELL. It has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs and is the unanimous report of that committee. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and also from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking for its early consideration. It only affects three settlers upon these lands. A similar bill was passed by the House in the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed from want of time in the Senate. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to amend by adding the following provise:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported from the committee.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION FUND FOR THE NAVY.

I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business coming over from the session of last evening. Under the twenty-fourth rule ordinarily the morning hour would be the regular order; but the main question having been ordered on these bills they take precedence of the morning hour. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there be a motion to amend the title it will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move to strike out in the title of the bill the word "permanent," so it will read: "A bill to provide a construction fund for the Navy," &c.

The title, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the title of the bill was amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPEDITION TO THE ARCTIC SEAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill on which the main question has been ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS IN RELATION TO PRINTING.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table some House resolutions with Senate amendments, and some concurrent resolutions relative to printing, and have them referred to the Committee on Printing. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw his demand for the regular order for a few moments to allow these references to be read.

Mr. WELLS. I will yield for that purpose

Mr. WELLS. I will yield for that purpose.

REPORT ON BEET SUGAR.

REPORT ON BEET SUGAR.

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report upon beet sugar and the manufacture of sugar from beets, prepared by Hon. William G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, and transmitted by the President from the Department of Agriculture February —, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives; of this number, 15,200 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,800 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of Agriculture.

The Senate amendments are as follows:
In line 9, strike out "15" and insert "14."

In line 10, strike out "3" and insert "4."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the several resolutions read by the Clerk will be referred to the Joint Committee

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I think there is another resolution, No. 56, authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, which I would like also to have referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the resolution to which the gentleman refers is not among the papers on the Speaker's table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. McCOID. I ask leave to insert certain sections of the Revised Statutes in my remarks of last Saturday, not incorporated at the time.

There was no objection. [The speech referred to will be found in the Appendix.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:
An act (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 5161) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of certain Indians in New Mexico," approved June 20, 1878.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WELLS. I now demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order will be the morning hour.

Mr. WELLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour to go on with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to, (two-thirds-voting in favor thereof,) and the morning hour was dispensed with.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WHITTHORNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. When the committee was last in session an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] was being considered.—The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the pending paragraph, as follows:

Cheyennes and Arapahoes:
For thirteenth of thirty installments provided to be expended under the tenth article of treaty of October 28, 1867, $20,000.
For purchase of clothing, as per same article, $14,000.

To which Mr. HASKELL had moved the following amendment:

In the latter clause strike out "14,000" and insert "19,000;" so that it will read: "For purchase of clothing, as per same article, $19,000."

Mr. BAYNE. Does not the point of order lie against that amend-

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make the point of order, the amendment having been discussed for some time.

The question being taken, there were ayes 20, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following

For settlement, support, and civilization of Kickapoo Indians in the Indian Territory, lately removed from Mexico, and such as may remove, $4,500; in all, $9,179.05,

Mr. BAKER. I offer the following amendment:

In lines 425 and 426 strike out "$4,500" and insert "$6,000."

During the last few years for those three hundred and ninety Indians Congress has found it necessary to appropriate the sum of $8,000. For some reason that I am not able to comprehend that sum of $8,000 has been reduced in this bill to $4,500.

I am informed by the Department, and I think it will be evident to the House, that the sum of $10 for the support and maintenance to the House, that the sum of $10 for the support and maintenance of each of these Indians is entirely inadequate. I am satisfied that the least sum with which the Department will be able to get along, and supply in any fashion at all the wants of these Indians, will be $6,000, and then it will be $2,000 less than that appropriated for the current year, and $2,000 less than for the preceding year.

I desire to say further that the estimate as originally sent by the Department to the House and the Committee on Appropriations called for $8,000. I do not see, Mr. Chairman, how the Department can furnish any reasonable amount of subsistence supplies to these four hun-for $8,000. I do not see, Mr. Chairman, now the Department can turnish any reasonable amount of subsistence supplies to these four hundred Indians with the sum of $4,500. In the interest of the service I trust that this increase of $1,500 may be made.

Mr. WELLS. I will state that the Book of Estimates asks an appropriation of $8,000 for this purpose. After consultation with the Department the sub-committee who have charge of this bill concluded that $4,500 would be sufficient. There are very few Indians provided for by this item, and they have annuities or interest on trust funds amounting to about the same sum of money. After full consultation by the sub-committee with the Department, the amount of $4,500 was agreed upon and placed in the bill. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HUBBELL. I think the gentleman from Missouri is, perhaps, Mr. HUBBELL. I think the gentleman from Missouri is, pernaps, mistaken. I did not so understand the Department with regard to this item. The Department, so far as I know, have claimed all the time that the sum allowed by the sub-committee was not sufficient, and furnished me some time since with a statement showing the reasons why it was not sufficient, and I did not understand that for a moment the Department was satisfied with the sum named in this bill. I have attempted on several occasions to get it up to what the Department desired and what I thought was necessary for that service.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word.

I trust there will be no change at all in this appropriation. The sum of money appropriated here for this purpose is the same in amount that it has been for several years. This is not a treaty obligation at all.

at all.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman is making a statement of fact—

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman, if he desires to contradict my statement, will do so in his own time, and allow me to proceed.

I have taken occasion to examine this point, and find it is not under treaty stipulation that this sum of money is paid. The appropriation in the preceding paragraph is in accordance with treaty and in full compliance with treaty, but the second appropriation is not; and it is the amount appropriated for several years. I am in favor of not augmenting our expenditures on Indians beyond what our contracts are, and I trust that the House will see fit to stand by what has been done in past years, at least, and not multiply these contributions to done in past years, at least, and not multiply these contributions to

Mr. BAKER. I cannot permit the statement of fact made by the gentleman from Georgia to go uncontradicted. The gentleman states, as I understood him, that the amount appropriated for this purpose in this bill is the same as it has been for several years. I read now from the bill of last year which I hold in my hand:

For settlement, support, and civilization of Kickapoo Indians in the Indian Territory, lately removed from Mexico, and such as may remove hereafter, $8,000; in all, $12,679.25.

Instead of $9,179.05. That is the appropriation that has been made in past years. These Kickapoos are a portion of that tribe that many years ago went into Mexico. They have removed from Mexico into this country. They are in a poor and necessitous condition. If we want to preserve peace with these Indians, we must at least give them supplies enough that they will not go with hungry bellies. An Indian with a hungry belly has very little idea of keeping the peace.

Mr. PAGE. Strike out "belly" and put in "stomach." [Laughter.]
Mr. BAKER. Very well, if the gentleman desires it. Then another thing: it appears from the report which I hold in my hand that the crops of these Indians failed last year, and that makes this amenderops of these Indians failed last year, and that makes this amendment the more necessary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my formal amendment, and move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of saying that my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] in endeavoring to demonstrate that there was a treaty stipulation as to this last amount, argues that because on a former occasion these two sums of money were together in one item, therefore the treaty stipulates for the appropriation of this sum. The estimates before the House disclose the fact that one item sum. The estimates before the House disclose the fact that the term is called for by treaty stipulation, and the other, the item now under consideration, is called for because of a precedent in a former appropriation bill. I now withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. Baker;

and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 73.

Mr. BAKER. The vote is so close that I think we had better have

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER and Mr. WELLS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, noes 85.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

For interest on $69,120, at 5 per cent. per annum, being value of fifty-four sections of land set apart by treaty of June 2, 1525, for educational purposes, per Senate resolution of January 9, 1836, $3,456;

For interest on $300,000, at 5 per cent. per annum, to be paid semi-annually, in money or such articles as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per first article of treaty of September 29, 1865, $15,000; in all, $18,456.

The following amendment was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, to be inserted after the paragraph last read:

For this amount, to be expended for the Osage Indians, in accordance with section 12 of the act approved July 15, 1870, being interest at 5 per cent. from March 1, 1880, to March 1, 1881, as provided for by section 2 of the act approved May 9, 1872, on $1,594,479.24, being the net avail of Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands sold by the United States prior to March 1, 1880, $79,723.96. And the second provision of the second section of the act of May 9, 1872, an act entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on the Osage lands in the State of Kansas," is hereby so amended as to read "July 1" instead of "March 1," as the day of each year after which interest upon sales shall be calculated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska:

For eleventh of thirty installments, to purchase clothing for males over fourteen years of age, for flannel, hose, and calico, and domestics for females over twelve years of age, and for such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls, per tenth article of treaty of April 29, 1868, $130,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the last paragraph read by striking out "$130,000" and inserting "$150,000." I desire to say that $130,000 was appropriated last year for this purpose, and it is found to be insufficient.

The treaty stipulation under which this appropriation is required is the tenth article of the treaty of 1868, continued in force by the supplemental treaty of 1877. That article requires that we shall furnish each male of these Indians with a suit of clothes, consisting of a coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of home-made

Now, to show the inconsistency with which this bill is prepared, let me call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the provision made on page 16 of this bill for the Crows, giving $8,000 to supply clothing for six hundred Crows, or the sum of $12.50 each. Now, here are 21,611 Sioux who are to be furnished with clothing. At the same rate adopted by this committee for the Crows under a treaty provision identically the same, that is $12.50 a head, thereshould be appropriated in this item the sum of $250,000 instead of $130,000. Now, why is it that for these warlike Sioux we appropriate the paltry sum of $5.50 each for clothing, when every man in his with knows

Now, why is it that for these warrise slots we appropriate the partry sum of $5.50 each for clothing, when every man in his wits knows that it is utterly impossible to purchase such a suit of clothes as each one is entitled to receive under the treaty stipulation for any such sum of money as that? I would like to have some explanation of how it happens that under a treaty stipulation identically the same as this it is proposed to appropriate $12.50 each for the peaceable Crows and less than half that sum is appropriated for the warlike and savage Sioux whom we ought to endeavor to keep quiet and peaceable. There ought to be some consistency in this bill.

But apart from that, it has been found by experience during the last twelve months that the sum of $130,000 is not sufficient to supply these Indians with the amount of clothing to which they are ply these Indians with the amount of clothing to which they are entitled under the treaty. And the Department has assured me that the amount estimated for, $150,000, is the least for which they can supply these Indians with the necessary clothing.

Mr. WELLS. The amount appropriated by this bill for this purpose is the same amount which was appropriated last year, and I believe that it is fully sufficient. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Baker,] as well as other gentlemen on this floor who have given this matter any attention whatever, knows that the wild Indians of the Sioux Nation will not wear this clothing if you give it to them. They will tear up their pantaloons and use them for leggings or sell them for rum. The other Indians referred to by the gentleman as receiving a larger appropriation for clothing are more civilized and will wear their clothing when given to them. Most of these Sioux are wild Indians and prefer blankets. In my opinion the sum here proposed is sufficient for the purpose. We have had no estimate from the Departments of a deficiency last year on account of the appropriation being only $130,000, and the Committee on Appropriations believe that under the circumstances that sum is sufficient.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Chairman— Mr. WELLS. I believe the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUB-BELL] now on his feet agreed with me on the sub-committee in regard to this item.

Mr. HUBBELL. I had forgotten that I had agreed with the gentleman as he states, for I gave notice in committee that I would move the amendment; and the reason I did not take charge of this matter was that my voice troubled me so that I was not able to do it.

The argument which the gentleman uses seems to me preposterous. He says there are treaty stipulations requiring that we shall give these Indians certain articles—a suit of clothes for instance. They are a warlike tribe of Indians and we are attempting to civilize them. If any member of the committee will take the reports of the agents of these tribes and read them carefully, as I have done, he will see that we have made rapid advances toward civilizing these warlike Sioux. Now, we have by treaty agreed to furnish them with certain articles; and the reason given by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] why these articles ought not to be furnished is that if we furnish them good articles the Indians will trade them for rum. How does that affect the question? Does it affect our obligation in any way whatever? We are attempting to civilize these Indians, and unless we keep faith with them we must fight them.

The additional amount asked for here is $20,000. Why is it asked? If the price of cotton goods and other articles had not advanced, we could with $130,000 have fulfilled our treaty stipulations; but the advance in the price of goods has made it necessary that the Depart. advance in the price of goods has made it necessary that the Department should have $20,000 more if we propose to do what we have agreed to do. For my part I can see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from Missouri has already stated, the fact that some of these Indians are not so thoroughly civilized as others accounts for the difference in the estimates for the different tribes. This inconsistency the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] seems to think outrageous and inexplicable. Yet last year the gentleman himself, concurring with a unanimous sub-committee, reported the Indian appropriation bill; and that bill embraced this identical inconsistency.

In my judgment, as regards these Indians and their treaty stipulations there is not the slightest cause of complaint against us. Since the treaty of 1863 there has been an agreement under which we were to furnish them a large sum of money for purposes of civilization. In 1877 we gave them $1,000,000; in 1878, $1,125,000; in 1879, $1,125,000; and for this year, $1,025,000; on condition that these Indians were to resort to labor and to the methods of self-support adopted by civilized people.

We have from year to year been voting hundreds of thousands of dollars to these Indians, when we might very well have said, "You endollars to these indians, when we might very well have said, "rou entered into a treaty obligation with us that you would go upon your reservations and labor; and you are standing in open defiance of those treaties." They are to-day and have been for years yiolating their treaty obligations; yet we, in careful regard for our obligations, have been continuing to vote these sums of money from year to year. There is not the slightest wrong or injustice done to them.

As to this item of clothing, what evidence have we that these estimates are correct? We have a simple statement that more money is wanted on account of the increase in the price of goods, nothing more than this bare statement, upon which we are asked to vote thousands of dollars additional for this item. This estimate does not even come here in a regular way. The estimates upon which we are thousands of dollars additional for this item. This estimate does not even come here in a regular way. The estimates upon which we act come from the Treasury Department; they are official documents. Then afterward supplemental estimates, without details, without any statement as to the number of Indians, the cost of clothing, or anything of that sort, come in. I trust the Committee of the Whole do not intend to make increases in this way, especially when we are giving to these Indians hundreds of thousands of dollars which we might withhold without any violation of treaty obligations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman point out a single treaty provision that these Indians have violated? I do not want any general declaration, but I wish him to call the attention of the committee to a single article in any treaty, either the first or a supplemental treaty, which these Indians have violated.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will turn to the Statutes at Large, volume 19, page 256, he will find there—
Mr. HISCOCK. That is too indefinite; I cannot read through that volume

Mr. BLOUNT. Nor can I in five minutes' debate.
Mr. HISCOCK. When the gentleman charges that these Indians have violated a treaty provision which justifies Congress in withhold-

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not charge that this volume of the statutes shows a violation of the treaty; but the treaty as here given provides that a certain sum of money shall be given to these Indians on condition that they shall enter into agricultural pursuits; and the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that but few of them have

Mr. HASKELL. There is one point which I desire to make clear upon this question of estimates. It has been intimated here time and again that the amendments moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] are not authorized by the Department. Now, I want to say that the supplemental estimate on which all these amendments say that the supplemental estimate on which all these amendments have been based was sent to the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of the Interior, the first estimate on the 16th of March; the second, a full supplemental official estimate, reached the committee on the 25th of March; and the Secretary of the Interior holds the official receipt of the clerk of the committee. Those estimates are there; the figures are there; they have been officially stated to this House; and I do not care to have it said again that gentlemen on this side of the House, who are asking the treaty stipulations with these Indians shall be carried out, come in here without any backing, without any official authority. figures, without any official authority.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, this matter concerns the two best agencies, showing the best improvement, the highest degree of civiliza-tion in the time which has elapsed since they were put under civilizino in the time which has elapsed since they were put under civilizing influences, of any tribe in the United States. Spotted Tail and Red Cloud have kept their men to every line and letter of that treaty, every hour since it was entered into. Every dollar's worth of supplies going into those agencies are carted there by the Indians, those who nearly three years since were upon the war-path with blanket and knife. They are at work; they are engaged in agricultural pursuits, advancing just as fast if not more rapidly than any other tribe which has ever engaged in them. The Sioux tribe stands to-day as a living monument attesting the success of that administration of Indian affairs.

Indian affairs.

If in other localities, if with other tribes, there have been failures, there has been a grand success here. They are there under treaty stipulations requiring so many articles of clothing, so many pounds of meat, so many pounds of sugar, so much provisions under treaty stipulations, and yet this committee refuses to give the money to enforce the fulfillment of the law.

I do not care much, personally, whether this amendment fails or not, but I want the record made, for in the years which are to come, if this policy is pursued, when an Indian war is taking from the Treasury millions of dollars, when the blood of slaughtered settlers upon the frontier is demanding the avenging and protecting hand of the ary millions of dollars, when the blood of slaughtered settlers upon the frontier is demanding the avenging and protecting hand of the Government, then I want to be able to turn over to the pages of this record here in this House of Representatives, and be able to say as I will, that upon the head of this committee, upon the heads of the members of this House, rest down with all its great responsibilities the cause of that outbreak. Your committee have had under consideration the Ute question; and we learn that there the failure of the House to pass the appropriation bill two years since, and in consequence the failure of the Indians to get their supplies in time, was one of the leading causes of the Ute war. All I want is the record. I leave the settlement of this question to the vote of the House.

Here the hammer fell.

The question recurred on Mr. Baker's amendment.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 57.
Mr. BLOUNT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER and Mr. Wells were appointed. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 74, noes 70.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, including the cost of transporting supplies for the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Sioux Indians from the Missouri River, and Sidney, Nebraska, or Cheyenne, Wyoming, $1,000,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to add $95,000 in line 855, so the item will

Air. BAKER. I move to add $55,000 in the creat, $1,095,000.

Mr. Chairman, the sum of $1,095,000 was appropriated for the current fiscal year in order to carry out the treaty stipulations we have entered into with these Indians. There are 21,711 of these Sioux Indians, and by the fifth article of the supplemental agreement with them they are entitled to a ration for each one substantially the same that we furnish to our Army. I have not the time or I would read the article for the purpose of showing that.

Mr. BLOUNT. What article does the gentleman refer to.

Mr. BAKER. I refer to article 5 of the supplemental agreement with these Sioux Indians. Now, sir, for the purchase of these rations in the Army bill, we have allowed the sum of twenty cents per ration. in the Army bill, we have allowed the sum of twenty cents per ration. If we allow the same amount of money to purchase rations for the Indians that we do for our soldiers (and we are bound by treaty to do it) it would cost $1,584,000. We fail to appropriate enough to purchase the rations for these Indians stipulated for by this supplemental treaty. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not apprehend what a legislative body is thinking about when they undertake a solemn treaty obligation providing for supplying certain rations to these savage Indians, the amount specific in kind and quantity, when it is a matter of pure figures to ascertain how much these rations will come to—I say I cannot understand what a legislative body is about when it will undertake to say it will appropriate twenty cents a ration in order to feed white men, and for the same ration to go to the red man it will appropriate only one cent more than one-half of that amount. I do not know what other people may call it, but I confess ti seems to me an open invitation to these red men to go upon the war-path, an open notification that the highest legislative body of this country solemnly resolves it will violate the treaty stipulations which touch the very subsistence of these Indians.

I do not care, Mr. Chairman, personally very much whether this amendment is agreed to or not. If the majority in this House feel they can assume the responsibility of saying that they will appropriate only a cent more than one-half of what is required to purchase a ration such as would be needed for white men, they can do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I protest against the idea that the gentleman from Indiana should be the only apostle here on the subject of good faith with the Indians or with anybody else. He assumes that this House or some part of it is willing to violate solemn faith with the Indian tribes, and takes this item in the appropriation bill as an instance of it. Now, sir, if the gentleman will quit his sermonizing and address himself to the statute, the House, I think, would likely derive more information from him. I read now from the very statute which the gentleman claims we are violating. Article 5 of this treaty provides:

Whenever the said Indians shall be located upon lands which are suitable for cultivation, rations shall be issued only to the persons and families of those who labor, (the aged, sick, and infirm excepted.)

We are informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that these Indians are located upon arable lands. Large numbers of them are not at work. The gentleman from Indiana says, take the food from them and keep them off the war-path! We entered into a solemn treaty with them to aid them in their advance toward civilization; but that was based upon a recognized agreement that they should labor to support themselves, but when they refused to labor we had the right to withhold supplies from them. It is not claimed that they are at work. The proposition of the Committee on Appropriations is, that as a great body of the Indians are not at work—some of them are, but a large majority are not—and being officially informed that they are on arable lands-I say the proposition of the committee is, that, in view of these facts, the full amount of the supplies they would be entitled to under other conditions shall not be given to them. They have not complied with their obligations, and, for one, I propose to stand by this treaty to compel them to go to work, and not let them stand before the country with a continued threat of the tomahawk. We compel our own citizens to a strict obedience to the law, and I propose to give it force there as well as elsewhere, and that we shall not continue from time to time to vote money, until they do comply with the requirements of the law.

We have given, Mr. Chairman, already more than could be legitimately claimed under the contract. We have given $1,000,000 when we might have halved it, and I trust, sir, this House is not prepared to vote away these sums of money under the threat of the tomahawk or this clamor in the House about this alleged violation of treaty obligations. I hope, sir, the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, while I concede in this matter that some discretion should be exercised as to the amount to be voted for the rations of these Indians and the number of rations to be issued under the treaty, I ask the gentleman from Georgia to furnish this House with any information which he has or which the Committee on Appropriations has which justifies the reduction in the number of these rations to the extent made by the committee. I ask them to show me any warrant for this reduction. On the contrary the Department has furnished to them an estimate which is covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

And I insist, so far as this case is concerned, this reduction is made arbitrarily; that there is no warrant for it in the estimate of the Department or in the facts of the case. It is founded upon no arithmetical calculation. I ask the gentleman having charge of this bill what evidence he has to justify it; what evidence has been furnished to him by the Department that this reduction can be or ought to be made? And unless it is upon some evidence that it can be made with propriety, then we are willfully and arbitrarily violating this provision of the treaty we solemnly entered into with these savage tribes.

Mr. ATKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if there was a deficiency last year?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not able to say; I do not know whether there was or not; but there was $95,000 appropriated last year more than the amount contained in the present appropriation. I say that this appropriation bill cuts down the appropriations that much and cuts down the estimates made by the Department for this year. As has been suggested by gentlemen around me here, I understand that there has been an advance in the price of provisions and that these rations are to cost more now than they did last year. I also understand that there was no surplus of the appropriation for last year left over and covered into the Treasury.

Now, there were concessions made by the savages when they parted with the lands they were in possession of and agreed to go upon certain reservations. There were concessions on both sides; but these Indians are the wards of the nation and are dependent upon the fulfillment of the treaty stipulations for their support. They are dependent upon the bounty we are bound to give them. Gentlemen come in here without rhyme or reason and refuse to carry out these obligations. They refuse arbitrarily to comply with these treaty stipulations. I hold that this failure to comply with the treaty is an open, willful violation, which to some extent justifies these men in going on the war-path.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to strike out the last word. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will prevail. It is but just and right that it should be adopted.

The Committee on Appropriations say there is a discretion as to the amount to be appropriated for this purpose. But that discretion is not vested in this House or in this Congress, but should be left with the authorities and with the Indian Department.

These Indians are now doing quite well. They are rapidly improving in civilization. These agencies are immediately north of my own State, and it is the great interest of the people of Nebraska that the Government on its part should maintain the treaty that they have made with these Indians. As I have said, they are to-day, and have been since they have been moved to the new agencies, doing very well.

The gentleman from Georgia says they have information that a large number of the Indians are not at work. When they were first moved there but few if any of them worked; but they are gradually being taught the art of agriculture, and with each month more and more of them become laborers.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. VALENTINE. Yes, sir.
Mr. ATKINS. If these Indians are doing so well on the appropriation for this year, why will not the same appropriation do for next

Mr. VALENTINE. I am informed the amount proposed to be appropriated for next year is $95,000 less than was appropriated for the current year. Now, supposing these Indians are only a part of them at work and a thousand more of them become laborers and Congress has refused an appropriation, they will have to work a year without rations. Let us give to the Indian Department a sufficient sum to carry out the treaty as made with them for each and every one of them. And if they do not perform their part of the treaty it will then be the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to withhold from them this amount and it will be covered back into the Treasury.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has asked why, if they have done well the present year on the appropriation Congress made for them, the same appropriation should not be continued? Why, sir, that is all that is asked. This amendment only proposes to give what the Book of Estimates asked for, and nothing more.

The War Department asked Congress for $50,000 to erect a post, and that post is now being built between the white settlements and these Indians. You see, therefore, the War Department feels it necessary to be ready at all times to protect the settlers from these Indians. If Congress will do its duty toward them I believe we will have no trouble with them at all, and I sincerely trust this House will vote every dollar the Department asks for. It is right, and it should be

Mr. WELLS. We are appropriating for those Indians $1,382,000, over one-fourth of the whole amount appropriated for the Indian service. What governed the committee, as I understand, in reducing this appropriation $95,000 was this: We are advised that these Indians are on the reservations and largely engaged in cultivating the soil, and that this year they will plant a large number of acres with cereals as well as vegetables, which certainly will go far to support them and maintain them during the coming year. Further than that, the Government has provided them largely with cattle and sheep.

It is time Congress should take some steps in the direction of reducing the amount of appropriation for feeding the different tribes of Indians where we provide them all the agricultural implements necessary to cultivate the soil, together with farmers and laborers to assist in educating them in that labor. If we go on from year to year appropriating the same amount there is no inducement to them to be self-sustaining and to cultivate the soil which they have in abundance around them. I believe it to be the duty of the Department and of Congress to make their agents educate these Indians to be more self-sustaining than they have been in the past.

I believe $1,000,000 for the purpose here indicated will be sufficient during the coming year. If found not to be sufficient, it will be very easy to pass a deficiency bill in due season. I hope the Committee of the Whole will stand by the bill as reported. The amount, if my memory serves me, was unanimously fixed at $1,000,000 in committee.

Mr. BAKER. My colleague on the committee from Missouri will pardon me. I trust I am not revealing any secrets when I say the gentleman from Missouri himself and his colleague on the sub-committee agreed to the sum of $1,095,000 and reported that amount to the full committee.

Mr. WELLS. Yes, sir; but when it went to the full committee, after full discussion there, the amount was placed at $1,000,000. I voted for that, and according to my recollection my colleague on the sub-committee also voted in the same way.

Mr. GARFIELD. I renew the formal amendment.

I sympathize in almost every effort to cut down an Indian bill as a rule; but there is one class of items in an Indian bill which it is always unsafe and extremely unwise to cut down; that is, the items to fulfill treaty stimulations.

to fulfill treaty stipulations.

Now, gentlemen on the other side-there should be no side on a question of this nature, I mean the gentlemen who take the side opposite to that of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] who moves posite to that of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] who moves this amendment—say they think this is enough. I put this question to them: Is Congress the proper judge of how to execute a treaty made by Executive authority? That is the whole question. The treaty-making power of this country made a treaty, that is only three years old, by which twenty thousand wild Sioux that were fighting our pioneers were placated and settled; the terms being adjusted on the basis of estimates by the officers of the Army, and finally the officers of the Executive Department.

And we are now told all around that these wild fighting Indians And we are now told all around that these wild fighting Indians are becoming more quiet, more civilized, and more peaceable. Yet it is proposed, right in the midst of this, when we have pursued this policy for only two years, that we shall cut down the sum that was all used up last year; there was no deficiency, but there was no surplus. And now it is proposed that Congress, against the recommendations of the Executive Department, shall cut down the appropriation by the sum of $95,000. Goods are higher now than they were last year, transportation is higher now, and the prices of everything are higher. Yet by a mere arbitrary guess the Committee on Appropriations proposes to cut down this appropriation by the sum of $95,000, an appropriation made for that very perilous tribe of Indians who have in the past made us so much trouble, and who are liable to make us so much trouble in the future.

make us so much trouble in the future.

If we do this, gentlemen, then the Administration cannot be held responsible for the consequences, and we have no right to ask them to be responsible. If a war breaks out in consequence of this it will be our fault, if we violate the treaty; and if our pioneers are scalped and murdered, those who are left after the trouble is over can point to our interference with the Executive in carrying out these treaties, as the cause of all the trouble. I hope that gentlemen on the other side will not let this serious interference with the execution of a treaty go into this bill. I hope the amendment of my friend from Indiana [Mr. Baker] will be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. The persuasive power with which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] states that we are seeking to violate treaties, to assume to ourselves the right to construe treaties, and that this is only a question of the construction of a treaty, is marvelous in view of the facts. What are the facts? The gentleman says that the estimates are the evidences of treaty obligations; that the Executive Department, in their estimates which they send to this House for the Indian service, construe the obligations of our treaty. That is the proposition. Yet the gentleman must know that there are money items in this bill to the extent of $2,000,000 that do not depend upon

What is the status of this appropriation and what is the amendment? It is proposed by the amendment to vote, under article 5 of the treaty of 1877, an additional sum of $95,000. The Committee on Appropriations declined to recommend any such thing-not that the treaty was not agreed to, not that there was any question at all as to the construction of the treaty. But the Department referred us to the statutes on which the estimates are based. Here is the act of 1877, in which there is a provision to give to each one of these Indians a certain ration; but that is coupled with the condition that when they are placed upon arable lands they shall go to work, and when they do work they are not to be fed by the Government. That is all there is of it. Yet the gentleman from Ohio would have this House believe that we are refusing to give to each one of these Indians a ration, when the treaty absolutely and unconditionally requires that they should have it.

Mr. VALENTINE. Suppose that they all go to work?
Mr. BLOUNT. I do not want the gentleman to interrupt me. If I had the time I would give it to him. The matter stands in just this way: For several years we have voted money year after year, and the Department has given it to these Indians and they have not gone to work. It is about time that we should require some evidence of their disposition to go to work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORT. We are all in favor of faithfully observing our treaty obligations, and more especially our treaty obligations with those who are not powerful enough to compel us to observe them. Now, while that is so, and while we are all careful to keep strictly the engagements into which we have entered with the Indian tribes, it is still our duty, representing those who sent us here, to see whether we really owe this money to the Sioux or not. Gentlemen say that we have agreed to give a ration to each one of these Sioux, man, woman, and child, so long, however, as they are not settled upon arable lands, by the cultivation of which they may produce rations for themselves. Is it possible that the treaty-making power of this Government ever intended or ever did make a treaty with any people that for all time and under all circumstances it would provide each one of those Indians with a daily ration for subsistence?

That indeed would be a very strange liberality, if we could believe that the Anglo-Saxon race, those who provide the means for carrying on this Government, should agree themselves to labor in order to give another race of men the means of subsistence. Of course that could not have been the intention and it never was the purpose of the Government to agree to give a ration to any tribe of Indians with-out any reason for it and without any power to cut it off.

What is the inducement for this course? Of course, the first inducement was that these Indians should cease their warlike habits and engage in peaceful pursuits. As soon as they had engaged in peaceful pursuits under a fair interpretation of the treaty and had become self-sustaining, then we are no longer under any obligation to furnish them with rations

A million of dollars is a considerable sum of money; it is $3,300 to the people of my friend's district and to the people of every congressional district in the United States. It will saddle upon every district of the United States more than $3,000 for the purpose of supporting these Sioux. Now, we are willing to support the Sioux so long as it is necessary; but just so soon as it ceases to be necessary, then we are not willing to pay for each congressional district in the United States the sum of $3,000 to keep them longer in idleness.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then you had better put them in Illinois.

Mr. WELLS. Allow me to say that we appropriate in this bill nearly $1,400,000 for the support of the Sioux.

Mr. FORT. We pay them, then, $1,400,000, which makes my argument all the stronger—$1,400,000 to support the Sioux! All right, so long as it is necessary; but why should we tax each congressional district in this country four or five thousand dollars in order to support the Sioux when they can support themselves? In my judgment, so long as you feed them in idleness you may continue to do so. The longer you do it the more idle and vagrant they will become. But if you can bring them to understand that they must depend upon their own right arms for support as you do upon yours they will become industrious and far less troublesome.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am no more in favor of voting money uselessly for this purpose than any other gentleman on this floor. But I wish to say that the Indians are not ignorant of their rights under these treaties. They are perfectly conscious of all they are entitled to by treaty stipulations. They know when good faith is kept with them by this Government as well as white men do. There is nothing that will so soon drive them into hostility and war against the Government as a violation on our part of the treaties we have made with them.

Now, it is insisted that the amount of money named in the bill is sufficient for these two tribes for the next fiscal year. I will ask gentlemen who make this assertion whether they know how long these Indians have been on their present reservation. Do not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fort] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Blount] know that scarcely one year has elapsed since these Sioux were placed on their present reservation; that they have not had were placed on their present reservation; that they have not not time or opportunity to develop their present farming grounds, to make improvements, and put the land in a state of cultivation so as to make for themselves a livelihood.

These Indians are not like white men. You might put white men on that reservation and in the course of a year or two, with such assistance as the Government has given these Indians, they might work out their own living. But you must bear in mind that with the donation of public land to these Indians must be coupled the means for learning how to cultivate the soil and make it yield a livelihood. These Indians are not agricultural in their habits; they have not been educated to the business of farming. You must educate them before they can make their living out of the soil, and in the name of reason do you expect that this is to be accomplished in the period of one year? Certainly not.

the appropriation made for the present fiscal year was barely sufficient for the purposes for which it was made, why not continue it for the present year? These Indians occupy the same land, under the same circumstances. Why not give them the same appropriation for another year? Why not give them the same encouragement, the same protection, that you have extended for the last year, so that they may know this Government is attempting to lift them up into the sunlight of civilization and to aid them in their efforts to develop the resources of the country to which they have been assigned?

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the proforma amendment.
Mr. WRIGHT. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, so far as regards the treaty stipulations between this Government and the Indian tribes, I would conform to them with the utmost fidelity; I would not violate them in any particular. Wherever we have made a contract with the Indian tribes, let that contract be fulfilled. But what I object to, what I think is wrong, is our teaching these people the idea that we are to grant them gifts and subsidies, and thereby support them out of the National Treasury. It is a bad lesson to teach the red man or the white man that he is to live on public charity and by direct support from the Government.

In looking over this bill I see that it appropriates a large amount f money—only a fraction less than $5,000,000; and on examining the items I find $100,000 is appropriated for the payment of agents. A large amount also is appropriated for the payment of agents. A large amount also is appropriated for the payment of interpreters; and there are other appropriations, which I do not stop to enumerate, which convince me that in the carrying out of our Indian policy there is a degree of extravagance which this House and the Senate ought not to countenance.

Let us come down to the question of what we owe the Indians under the treaties, but let them not be the objects of our charity. Why, sir, here are $5,000,000 appropriated out of the National Treasury. There are poor white men in this land who are quite as well deserving our care and protection as are the red men. Let us have a fair ing our care and protection as are the red men. Let us have a fair disposition upon this question. If gentlemen feel inclined to grant subsidies to the Indian tribes of this country, let them in a corresponding spirit come up to the assistance of the white men who are in poverty.

in poverty.

It is the misfortune of the Indians—a misfortune for themselves, perhaps not for the country—that they are submitting to the progress of the times. They are obliged to move on; they must yield to the progress of the age in which we live. There is no appropriation of money that will change their condition, their habits, their mode of life. It is not a pleasant picture to dwell upon, but still it is a part of the destiny of this country that the Indians must give place to the Caucasian race. They must occupy for agricultural use the land that they now roam over with no other purpose than hunting game. My heart is with these people. I do not want to do anything to wrong them. I do not want to take from them a single right. They have voluntarily made their treaties with the Government. Let us pay them the money we have agreed to pay them. But when it comes to them the money we have agreed to pay them. But when it comes to charity, let us take care of the white man as well as the red man.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Chairman, the fact that the appropriation for these two bands of Sioux amount to about one-fourth of this whole bill is a proper commentary on the history of our dealings with the Sioux tribe of Indians, which is one of the most disgraceful in the long story of our dealings with and treatment of the Indians in the long story of our dealings with and treatment of the Indians in this country. In 1868 a commission composed of intelligent, high-minded, and philanthropic gentlemen was sent out to the plains. They had no earthly knowledge of the Indian country or of the Indian question, but were filled with Christian zeal and philanthropy. They gave to these Sioux Indians lands which never belonged to the Dakota tribes. They removed the Poncas from lands which did belong to them. They also entered into the treaty with the Ute Indians to the Ute Indians to the Indians to the Ute Indians to the Indians to dians and gave them the vast reservation which has caused the Government so much trouble. Under that treaty they gave to the Sioux Indians a large portion of the Crow reservation and settled the Crows upon lands that were occupied by the whites; consequently, Mr. Chairman, with the very best intentions in the world, through the ignorance of the country and the questions, they have managed to bring more complications into our dealings with the Indians than any and all other Indian commissions which have brought trouble and difficulty time out of mind.

Under that treaty we abandoned a line of road from Cheyenne to Montana, and we abandoned it after the massacre of Fort Fetterman, when these Indians, without warning, surprised and slaughtered a great number of our soldiers. We abandoned that country, we gave up our forts, we tore down our flags, and the Sioux followed our retreating army and scouted at it in contempt as it marched away. That surrender led to all the Indian complications we have had there since. It led to the Indian war in which Custer was killed. To be sure, there was only a portion of these Indians engaged in that battle, those under Crazy Horse, the rest of the hostile Indians having gone north of the line, are still hostile, and still making incursions upon

But, Mr. Chairman, we did buy this peace with these Indians. Our Government was stampeded, and we agreed to pay the Sioux this tribute just as the old Roman Empire in the time of its decadence paid tribute to the horde of barbarians which ravaged its border. We purchased this peace, and I presume the best thing to do now is for the Government to pay the purchase-money. I never believed in the policy of purchasing peace in that way and do not believe in it now. But having bought this peace let us pay the tribute.

At the same time I do not think, as some gentlemen have said, that the price of rations or subsistence has increased in the country.

the price of rations or subsistence has increased in that country. Beef and flour certainly ought to be cheaper, notwithstanding the general revival of business in the East. More flour and beef is produced in the neighborhood of these tribes.

But, Mr. Chairman, we of the West want such provision made as will prevent complications. We do not want Indian wars. It has often been said here upon this floor, and it is flippantly asserted in the newspapers, that the people on the frontier want Indian wars, because they make money out of them. Gentlemen who talk that way do not know what an Indian war means. And not only do they fail to realize the terrors of an Indian war, but they do not know even what however follow in the train of even, the very real Indian. even what horrors follow in the train of even the rumor of an Indian war. It means homes deserted, crops left rotting in the fields, stock abandoned in the pastures. And war itself means murder, rapine, and destruction everywhere. It means emigration checked and the whole tide of development rolled back. It means everything ruin-whole tide of development rolled back. It means everything ruinous and destructive to the opening prospects of new settlement. It means years of distrust, fear, nights of horror to children and women and of dread and apprehension to their natural defenders.

Why, sir, when I have heard gentlemen flippantly say your people on the frontier want an Indian war, I have felt like turning to them and replying that when the people of Chicago, for instance, shall burn down their magnificent commercial palaces and the princely residences which line their avenues in order to get the charitable contributions of the world, or when the people of the South shall invite into their midst the yellow pestilence which during the past year has turned their homes into hospitals, and their religious shrines into char-nel-houses, and their cities into cemeteries of the dead—when they shall themselves introduce this dread disease in order to obtain the gifts of the charitable people of the North, then, and not till then, will the people out upon the frontier be in favor of an Indian war in order that Washington contractors may make a few blood-stained dollars out of the miseries of the settlers upon the border.

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amend-

Mr. VALENTINE. I renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling attention to an extract from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1879, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This report is but general, and lack of conciseness in detail must be excused when it is remembered that this is the largest Indian agency under the Government and is but just emerging from a state of chaos, in which it has existed for when it is remembered that this is the largest Indian agency under the Government and is but just emerging from a state of chose, in which it has existed for several years past.

The annual reports and imperfect record of the Ogallalla Sioux agency for the past fifteen years form but a continued history of removals and creation of new agencies. Since 1863, when Fort Laramie, Wyoming, was the abiding place of these people, they have up to the present moved eight or ten times, sometimes a distance of three or four hundred miles. The responsibility for these repeated removals cannot be charged to the Indians. Locality and the love of home is as strongly marked, if not more so, in the American savage as in the white man. The return of the Cheyennes and Poncas, during the past year, from a forced transfer to a southern home in the Indian Territory, back to their northern hunting-grounds, across a broad stretch of partly settled country, and in spite of military and civil authority, is but a reminder of this. Investigation might show that the real responsibility can be traced to bribery, fraud, and corruption on the part of some of the former representatives of the Government, in the way of contractors, agents, &c. Is it to be wondered at that these people have been at times rebellious, and that they are not as yet self-supporting? The old maxim that "a rolling stone gathers no moss" was never more applicable. It is not at all remarkable that the "untutored savage," who originally "knew no guile," has become distrustful, and at the present day he at first looks with distrust on all efforts of our Government to assist him, his experience with the white man in the past being a sad teacher.

OUTSIDE INDIANS.

OUTSIDE INDIANS.

Another cause of the unsettled condition of these Indians in former years has been the turning of the agency into an asylum, or rendezvous, for the dissatisfied and renegade members of other agencies and tribes, such as Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Northern Sioux from Sitting Bull's hostiles. The influence of turbulent outsiders coming to an agency is always bad, and the taking in of any more people of that class is to be protested against. This agency is already large enough, containing, as it does, about seventy-three hundred people.

If the large bands of northern hostiles are to be taken back by the Great Father, which circumstances will certainly force us to do inside of one or two years, I would suggest that they be given an agency by themselves. The Ogalialias do not wish for them. The experiment of locating the Crazy Horse band, of fifteen hundred persons, after the Custer massacre of 1876, at this agency, and the subsequent jeal-ousies and troubles, finally resulting in the death of that chief and the departure of his people back north again, should be a sufficient test of the soundness of his policy.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield the remaining portion of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a single word further on this ques-Mr. Hiscock. Mr. Chairman, a single word further on this question. It is not a question, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, whether we are to give these people these rations. On that question argument could be made on both sides. But here is a treaty made by the Government with these Indians, and so long as that treaty is in force there is but one thing for the United States to do, and that is to vote the money necessary to carry out faithfully the stipulations which we have entered into with these Indians.

I have called upon gentlemen who represent this bill upon the floor to furnish this committee with the evidence which makes against this language in the report just read. I have asked it from either side of the House, from the members of the Appropriations Committee; but no such information has been furnished. Then the committee stand here confronting this proposition, whether without rhyme or reason they will arbitrarily reduce the amount which the Department reason they will arbitrarily reduce the amount which the Department deems necessary for it to carry out in good faith this treaty entered into with the Indians. That is the position in which they are placed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the only question for us to consider is what are our obligations under the treaty with these Sioux Indians? About that question we can have but little difficulty. We have stipulated that we will provide certain supplies for them. It is then a simple question of mathematical demonstrates the statement of mathematical demonstrates are not considered. tle difficulty. We have stipulated that we will provide certain supplies for them. It is, then, a simple question of mathematical demonstration or arithmetical calculation as to the amount of the supplies. The House of Representatives, the people of this country, can ill afford to disregard our treaty obligations with any of these Indian tribes. This discussion has proceeded upon the theory that these Indians should now be self-supporting. This whole doctrine to every intelligent man is absurd when it is remembered that but a short time ago this was a warlike tribe in a savage condition—in a condition of barbarism. We cannot expect them to leap from that condition into a condition of thrift, economy, industry, or civilization in the short space of one year.

I am surprised also at the view which has been taken of our treaty stipulations by the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and stipulations by the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and with the view expressed by the gentleman from Georgia particularly. If his opinion be correct, we have been very adroit in our treaty arrangements with these Indians. We have simply agreed in that treaty, according to his version of it, that we will give these supplies to the Indians only on these conditions: If they work they shall not have them, because they will not need them; if they do not work they shall not have them, because they violated their treaty obligations. That is the whole argument the gentleman makes against it.

Now, I hope every man who votes here will vote with regard to the good faith of the Government involved in this question, because if there is anything that we ought to deprecate it is a violation of our honor with regard to a community incapable of resisting us.

Something has been said regarding the consequences, the results, that will follow a violation of our treaty obligations. It is but a short time ago, within my own knowledge, that a tribe of Indians went through the western portion of my own State committing murders and atrocities that shock mankind, simply because we refused or neglected to comply with our treaty obligations to supply them with the medicine they were in need of, and for the want of which they were dying in the Indian Territory. This is one of the consequences that flowed from the violation of that treaty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I regret that an absence of one week from the House has prevented me from posting myself as thoroughly as I should like to be upon this bill. But having heard this discussion in part, I have made up my mind on it, and am disposed to give my views for what they are worth to the House. I understand the question before the House to be this: an estimate has been made by the Department of $1,095,000 for the benefit of Sioux Indians; that estimate is sent in to the Committee on Appropriations; that committee, for good reason no doubt, refused to appropriate so much, and reduced it to $1,000,000.

My friend from Ohio said just now that we ought to be governed in all cases by these estimates as made by the Department. Mr. Chairman, if that were so what is the object of having a committee at all? If that were so, then we would never have so largely reduced the expenses of this Government, but would to-day be staggering under the load of taxation which the democrats found upon the country when they came into power without even a prospect of relief. The reduction was made by the committee, just as this is to be done, upon such information as came to them in spite of the Department and their estimates

and their estimates.

I understand that we have an estimate from the Department for twenty-one thousand of these Sioux, and this estimate was based upon the assumption that twenty-one thousand of them would go to work, cultivate the soil, and that they would thus soon be able to provide for themselves, and yet the fact, as reported by the Department, shows that to-day only fourteen hundred of them are engaged in any agricultural employment whatever. The Department estimate for twenty-one thousand thus engaged and the committee for fourteen hundred, hence the discrepancy. The amount promised is conditional upon their going to work, and they should be paid according to agreement and not otherwise. My judgment is that if the facts were known there are not even fourteen hundred of them so engaged. I believe there is good reason to doubt whether so many as a thousand can be there is good reason to doubt whether so many as a thousand can be found who cultivate the soil or are engaged in either pastoral or agricultural pursuits.

The treaty which has been made with these people wisely provided that they should go to work and help themselves and then the Government would help them. But this amendment requires us to help them and let them work afterward. There are gentlemen on the other side of the House and on this side who believe, and I know that this opinion is largely shared by good men through the country and is getting more and more prevalent, because it is founded on good sense and reason, that the time is at hand when this Government should say to these Indian tribes, "If you will undertake to take care of yourselves and show that you are in earnest, then the Government will aid you, and not before."

Must we carry out this estimate of the Department for twenty-one thousand Indians when only fourteen hundred, according to their own report, are at work? If so, we feed them in idleness and encourage them to remain so.

I hope the House will do no such thing, but will show by their vote on this question, and on every other proposition to increase these amounts, that they must work and that they can expect nothing from the Government until they do. As has been said by a gentleman who preceded me, feed them in idleness and you will have to feed their children in the same way. You have pursued this policy for the last fifty years; go on and you will have to do it for the next fifty years; go on and there will be no civilization; and you may as well strike down every effort set on foot for that purpose. That great law of nature that man must live by the sweat of his brow must be taught these savage tribes. This Government can teach them, but can only do it through their necessities. Work, and law for their protection when right and for their punishment when wrong, will solve the question of civilization. Let us try it.

Here the hammer fell. Mr. REED. I have noticed in this debate that the gentlemen who are desirous of carrying out the treaty stipulations and giving the Indians what they are entitled to are western men, and mostly those living on the frontier, while those who take a different view are men who live at a safe distance. I suppose that arises from the fact that while a man from North Carolina or South Carolina may safely object to the sum of money being expended which is necessary to carry out the treaty stipulations it is really the frontiersman who gets scalped if the money be not paid. I think some consideration is due to those who are nearest the scene of danger.

Mr. COBB. Gentlemen on the other side talk of treaty stipula-

Now I submit the appropriation provided for here is in strict tions. compliance, so far as I have been able to understand the facts, with treaty stipulations. Gentlemen do not seem to put the construction treaty stipulations. Gentlemen do not seem to put the construction on this treaty which its language imports. I will read the exact words, and then we shall be able to see whether gentlemen on this side of the House are opposed to carrying it out in strict conformity with its actual requirements:

Such rations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves.

The gentlemen on the other side who favor this amendment rely upon that as the treaty stipulation. But that is not all. The treaty further provides that-

Rations shall, in all cases, be issued to the head of each separate family; and whenever schools shall have been provided by the Government for said Indians, no rations shall be issued for children between the ages of six and fourteen years, (the sick and infirm excepted,) unless such children shall regularly attend school.

We have established schools for those Indians; we have also erected mills for them, as the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows. But that is not all. The treaty provides that—

Whenever the said Indians shall be located upon lands which are suitable for cultivation, rations shall be issued only to the persons and families of those persons who labor, (the aged, sick, and infirm excepted,) and as an incentive to industrious habits the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may provide that such persons be furnished in payment for their labor such other necessary articles as are requisite for civilized life.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cobb]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cobb] yield to his colleague?

Mr. COBB. No, sir, I do not yield. I have but five minutes, and the gentleman will have an opportunity of speaking hereafter.

I submit there is no gentleman on that side of the House who will pretend to say that these Indians or a portion of them, say the least, are not located on lands susceptible of cultivation. If they are located on lands susceptible of cultivation, then unless they work they are not entitled under the treaty to one dollar of compensation in the way of provisions or anything else. That is a clear proposition under this treaty. And yet gentlemen say because we do not provide more way of provisions or anything else. That is a clear proposition under this treaty. And yet gentlemen say because we do not provide more money than is provided in this bill we violate treaty stipulations. Do they pretend to say these lands on which these Indians are located are not susceptible of cultivation; or do they insist that all the children between the ages of six and fourteen years go to school who have the opportunity of doing so? Yet the fair construction of this treaty is that appropriations should not be made for their benefit unless they do.

The report of the Indian Commissioner shows that these Indians produce, I may say, large quantities of cereals which are consumed by them and tend largely to diminish the demands upon the Government. And the object of this treaty is to induce or rather compel these Indians to work and till the soil, and produce for themselves the wants of civilized life, and if they refuse to do this the Government is not required by this treaty to appropriate money to support them. Nor are we morally bound as a Government to do so. Yet gentlemen want to give to them that which they do not need. They want to appropriate money which is not necessary.

There are twenty-one thousand of these Indians, I admit, but this bill gives to them nearly one-half of the entire appropriation provided in this bill for this part of the Indian service. And yet gentlemen say that we are violating treaty stipulations because we are not appropriating enough money. The facts do not sustain these assertions. There is no foundation for the alarm which gentlemen on the other side seem to possess. I feel greater alarm for the Treasury than I do for treaty stipulations, especially if these gentlemen are to control the appropriations.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I Mr. BAKER. I renew it. I withdraw the formal amendment.

I rise more especially to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we comply with our treaty obligations in reference to educating these Indians in just about the same manner we do in other particulars. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman who has just addressed the committee, says that if the Indians fail to send their children to school their children shall not be entitled to rations; and then he says we have furnished them schools. By the seventh article of the treaty of 1868, which I hold in my hand and which has been in force for twelve years, we are under obligations to furnish these Indians with one school for every thirty children between the ages of six and sixteen years. The statistics show that there are between six thousand and seven thousand children of those ages; and in order to supply them with the means of education according to the treaty stipulations there should be between thirty and forty schools. We have furnished them the magnificent number of three schools.

Mr. WELLS. Five.

Mr. WELLS. Five.
Mr. BAKER. Five, is it? I stand corrected. We have furnished them with the magnificent number of five schools. That is the way we have kept faith with the Indians, when we ought to have furnished them forty schools and school-buildings, have gathered these children in and educated them in the habits of industry. Yet my colleague [Mr. COBB] gets up here and gravely congratulates himself and the country that we have complied with our treaty stipulations.
Mr. COBB. Do you not know that all the Indians who will attend school are provided for to-day?

Mr. BAKER. I say they are not.
Mr. COBB. I say they are.
Mr. BAKER. I beg leave to say that that is not the fact. If the gentleman will take the trouble to read the report—

mr. Baker. The greater to say that that is not not accepted many will take the trouble to read the report—

Mr. COBB. I have done it.

Mr. Baker. He will find that they need far more schools than they now have. In addition to that, the obligation of the treaty is such that we have the right, and it is our duty, to enforce the attendance of these children at school. We never will civilize these Indians until we enforce the treaty obligations, take possession of the children, make them attend school, teach them habits of industry, and give them some knowledge of the English branches of learning.

I am not insisting or expecting that we will get this Congress to appropriate money in exact accordance with treaty obligations. I am not asking for that, I am not pleading for that. But I am asking and I am pleading that, in face of the fact that there are twenty-two thousand people there, six thousand or seven thousand of them armsbearing warriors, we shall not undertake to starve them, especially when the Department that has them in charge insist that it cannot be done without peril to the peace of the country.

Mr. WELLS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. BAKER; and upon a division there were—ayes 54, noes 67.

upon a division there were—ayes 54, noes 67.

Mr. HUMPHREY and Mr. VALENTINE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Baker and Mr. Wells were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were-aves 69, noes 82.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following: Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska:

Pay of second blacksmith, and furnishing iron, steel, and other material, per eighth article of same treaty, $2,000; in all, $1,382,300.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that it will be necessary to change the total in this item, in consequence of an increase of $20,000 in one of the preceding items, so as to make this total $1,402,300. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Sioux, Yankton tribe:
For second of ten installments, third series, to be paid to them or expended for their benefit, per fourth article of treaty of April 19, 1858, $25,000;
For subsistence and civilization of two thousand Yankton Sioux, heretofore provided for in appropriations under "Fulfilling treaty with Sioux of different tribes," $45,000; in all, $70,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out of the last paragraph read the sum of "$45,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$60,000." All I desire to say is that $60,000 has been found necessary for the last two years, and the Department has estimated for a like amount this year. Not only that, but the Department has assured us that they will be unable to provide for the subsistence of these two thousand Indians unless the amount here named is increased by $15,000.

Mr. WELLS. The appropriation of $25,000 in the first item is according to treaty stipulation. We do not interfere with that amount, but appropriate the amount estimated for by the Department.

The sixty-thousand-dollar item heretofore contained in this bill was under a treaty which has expired. The committee believe that $45,000 is amply sufficient for this purpose, being $22.50 a head for these Indians. We are informed that these Indians are cultivating the soil dians. We are informed that these Indians are cultivating the soil and selling a large number of horses, and consequently we believe that they can stand a reduction of $15,000. We have therefore recommended an appropriation of $45,000 instead of $60,000.

The amendment of Mr. Baker was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following: Collecting and subsisting Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico: For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona, $320,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$320,000" and inserting "$350,000." I shall feel that I have discharged my duty when I state distinctly that this appropriation discharged my duty when I state distinctly that this appropriation is for a large number of Indians, ninety-nine hundred and thirteen Indians. We appropriated last year for their subsistence the sum of $320,000. This year the Department estimates that $350,000 will be necessary for this purpose, and it says it does not believe it can get along with a less amount.

The country is pretty well advised of the fact that short rations last year have compelled a portion of our troops to carry on hostilities against the Victoria band of these Indians. I apprehend that we do not want any like occurrence in the future. I am advised that we do not want any like occurrence in the future. I am advised that the gentleman having this bill in charge has received supplementary estimates since the one put in originally for $350,000, showing that it is necessary to appropriate $450,000 for this purpose. I do not ask that that amount shall be given, but I do ask that this slight increase of $30,000 shall be made. The Department says that $420,000 is needed, $120,000 more than is proposed to be appropriated by this bill. It does seem to me that the small increase of $30,000 which I have asked for, and which is in accordance with the first estimate, should be granted. should be granted.

Mr. WELLS. Three hundred and twenty thousand dollars is the amount which was appropriated last year. In the case of these Indians the same reasons apply as in regard to the Sioux. We have provided agricultural implements, farmers, &c.; and we believe the Indians ought to be more self-sustaining this year than last year. Hence we believe $320,000 ought to be sufficient. If we were to give the amount estimated, of course we could never cut down the approximate at all priations at all.

Mr. HASKELL. I have no further interest in debating this matter than just to be on record upon this item as on the preceding one. because Congress failed to appropriate money enough to feed these same Apache Indians last year, Victoria's band of Apaches are on the war-path to-day. Simply because you did not appropriate money enough to fulfill your treaty obligations, you have a war on your hands. Yet to-day you propose to repeat the same policy of starvation—to keep this band on the war-path and to induce others to join them. That is the logic of the situation them. That is the logic of the situation.

If this Committee of the Whole would devise an amendment by which some of the honorable gentlemen on this floor should go out to the plains and explain to the Indians, as a pettifogger might do in a justice's court, that a technical construction of treaties and laws permits these small appropriations-if gentlemen on this floor would go out and undertake to satisfy the Indians in that way, I should be content. But, unfortunately, I do not see any process of that sort provided for. I do see Indians on the war-path; your Army is employed in subjugating them. The very same cause that put the Indians on the war-path is operating now; and when Congress is asked by the Department to give money enough to take these Indians off the war-path—to provide for them and stop this war—you deliberately refuse.

I have no personal feeling in this matter at all. All I want is a distinct vote of this House and a placing of the responsibility where it belongs, so that hereafter no gentleman shall rise on this floor and charge that the Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior and those terrible western men have incited another Indian outbreak. I want the responsibility for these Indian outbreaks to be located where for the last twenty years it ought to have been located. cause of them is right here on this floor.

I want to say here again, and again, and again, that your treaty stipulations with the Indians are broken. I want you to understand that you are compelling Indian wars now. I do not want anybody on either side of the House to come in and charge that Mr. Smith, on either side of the House to come in and charge that Mr. Smith, Indian agent, has been swindling the Indians, and therefore they have gone on the war-path. I want the cause to be specifically assigned and known to the whole country, that you are starving these Indians to death, that you are forcing them upon the war-path.

Here is a case in point. These Indians are on the war-path to-day. You are driving them upon the war-path year by year. You will have another Indian outbreak in the Northwest. The Crow Indians now in the city are asking of Congress that they shall be fairly dealt with under the law. Send them home, starve them, let them go on the war-path and devastate our frontier if you choose, but accept the responsibility for your act.

responsibility for your act.
Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] to say that it is not for us to charge that the Indian agents have defrauded the Indians, and he speaks of the Crow Indians. Now I have a little history in regard to the Crow Indians here in my hand—a history which is very apropos to this question, and to which I shall call the gentleman's attention.

An officer of the Army, Captain Ball, was sent out to investigate the affairs of the Crow Indians and to inspect supplies. He made a report directly to the Secretary of War. His superior officer, Major Brisbin, who returned the report, said that he could not make it to the Indian Department for the reason that it would be pigeon-holed and no notice taken of it. That report made in 1876 disclosed a most damnable record of fraud and corruption in which the Indian agent, the contractor, and all about the agency were involved. Yet the Com-and no notice taken of it. That report made in 1876 disclosed a most damnable record of fraud and corruption in which the Indian agent, the contractor, and all about the agency were involved. Yet the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has taken no notice of it. The report has never appeared in print. I learned of it through an officer of the Army, and had the good fortune to obtain a certified copy of it, which I wish to make a part of my remarks.

What were the facts in this case? The Indian agent of these Crow Indians, Mr. Dexter E. Clapp, and Mr. Nelson Story, the contractor, conspired together to defraud not only the Indians but the Government. When Captain Ball arrived on the ground they offered him $1,000 if he would pass the pork there at four hundred and fifty pounds to the barrel instead of two hundred and thirty pounds, the actual amount. There should have been two thousand and some hundred barrels of pork on hand. Captain Ball found there was a little more than eight hundred. They offered him a bribe if he would certify that there was an amount which was not there. They proposed to make money on the rise of the pork, and to sell it away from the Indians and divide the steal among themselves. Among whom? Among Captain Ball, "what is the poor Indian to do if you steal his pork and his flour and divide it among yourselves?" "Oh," said the agent, "there are plenty of buffaloes, and buffalo meat is good enough for the Indians." What was the next thing?

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. FINLEY. I do not yield. The next thing Captain Ball undertook to inspect the flour.

dertook to inspect the flour.

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to know whether the fact that an Indian agent is dishonest renders it unnecessary to make appropriations for

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have said that I do not yield. If the gentleman persists in talking he does so without any permission from me or from the House.

I was asking how the flour was inspected. The Indian agent and Twas asking now the nour was inspected. The indian agent and the contractor got all the flour double-sacked; each bag of flour had two sacks on it. The inspector would run in his test, take out some flour and examine it, and find it all good. He put his brand on the outside sack, and when his back was turned they stripped off the outside sack, and in that way were furnished with a complete set of extra sacks of flour to be again inspected. That is the way the flour of the Indians has been furnished and paid for by the Government; and where in fact they had but one thousand sacks of flour these contractors managed to get credit for two thousand sacks; and where there should have been four hundred and fifty pounds of pork to the barrel there really were only two hundred and thirty pounds. Now, sir, this was all reported to the Secretary of War—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Obio.

Mr. HATCH. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FINLEY. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his courtesy.

This, Mr. Chairman, as I was proceeding to state, was reported directly to the War Department, because Major Brisbin said they would pigeon-hole this matter and no notice would be taken of it. The Indian Department got on its ear about this matter and wrote an insulting letter to the War Department. It wanted to know why such reflections were made on that Department. It was sent to Lieutenant-General Philip Sheridan, and he wrote back that Captain Ball was an honest, upright man, who had served thirty years in the Army, and that he believed every word he said was true. General Sheridan an onest, upright man, who had served thirty years in the Army, and that he believed every word he said was true. General Sheridan therefore declined to have the matter investigated.

I come now to the pith of the whole matter. This Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his letter to the Secretary of War, protesting that he had been insulted by this report, undertook to say and did say that he would cause an investigation to be made into this whole subthat he would cause an investigation to be made into this whole subject, and if he found it to be true as alleged, he would deal in a proper way with these dishonest scoundrels. I have looked in vain for any investigation on his part. I have gone through all the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Not a word is there said about his man Story or his agent Clapp; but I find in the report made in 1877 on the Crow Indians, that Mr. Clapp signs himself as agent, and talks about Christianity and what good Christian Indians they were, winding up his report by asking the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the contractor may be allowed personally to deal out the sugar to Indians. He thought it would have a moralizing influence. [Great laughter.] This man Clapp was going to sugar the Indians in order it might have a moralizing influence on those whose pork and flour he had stolen. [Laughter and applause.]

I have this report in my hand. It is good reading; it is rich and racy. [Cries of "Read!"] If I have time I will ask the Clerk to read it; otherwise, I will ask, by unanimous consent, that it may be printed as a part of my remarks.

printed as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks from the size of the document that the gentleman has not time in which to have it read. The Chair hears no objection, however, and the gentleman can print the document as a part of his remarks.

The document is as follows:

Headquarters Military Division of the Missouri, Chicago, Illinois, February 26, 1880.

Sir: In compliance with your telegraphic request of the 25th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of Captain Ball's report of an inspection made by him on February 8, 9, 10, and 11, 1876, of supplies delivered at Crow Indian agency, Montana, and copy of a letter from the Interior Department of April 22, 1876, with the indorsement thereon of Lieutenant-General Sheridan.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. D. WHIPPLE, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Adjutant-General United States Army, Washington, D. C.

FORT ELLIS, M. T., February 18, 1876.

FORT ELLIS, M. T., February 18, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of the Department that I was at the Crow Indian agency, on the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th instants, making an inspection of flour, bacon, and pork delivered there on contract for the Crow Indians, and that Nelson Story, of Bozeman, Montana Territory, contractor for pork and bacon for the Crow agency, was present and presented for inspection fifty-seven barrels of pork. Fifty of these barrels were of the ordinary whisky barrels and seven of the ordinary pork barrels, all packed with fresh pork in the town of Bozeman, Montana Territory, during the months of December, 1875, and Jannary, 1876. I opened three of these barrels, the large-sized whisky barrels, and weighed the contents of each, one weighing two hundred and seventy-nine pounds; one, two hundred and two pounds, and one, two hundred and thrity-one and one-fourth pounds to the barrel. This pork consisted of the entire hog, ham and feet excluded, and could not come under the head of mess-pork as required by the terms of the contract, and I rejected the fifty-seven barrels. I would here state that that portion of, the pork belonging to mess-pork was of a good quality and would have passed the inspection had it been packed separately; but the entire head, shoulders, back-bone, and tail, with all the trimmings from the ham, were also packed with it, which, in my judgment, was good cause for rejecting the entire lot. The contractor did not care to have me examine any more barrels than those I had examined, he knowing full well that they were all alike, and that I knewit, I having visited the butcher's establishment frequently during the packing of this pork.

I would further state that on the 9th instant, while at the agency, and previous to my inspection of this pork, Mr. Nelson Story, contractor, made two propositions to me to defrand the Government and cheat the Indians out of their supplies, and in each of these propositions it was evident to me that the agent, Mr. Dexter E. Clapp, was a party to the proposed fraud. The first proposition was this: that I should pass the pork for him at four hundred and fifty pounds to the barrel, and that he would give me $1,000. The second was: that there was due on the contract for flour which he was putting in on the Kiskadden contract about three hundred thousand pounds, and that he was expecting an advance on the price, which, together with freights, would bring the flour up to $6 per hundred pounds, and that this amount, or a portion of it at least, should be certified to as having been received, and that we would make a good thing out of it; otherwise there was still $75,000 nexpended of the appropriation for the Crow Indians, which he was very anxious to have expended before the end of the fiscal year; and he intimated to me that with my assistance the money could be expended so as to make it profitable to us, meaning, as I suppose, the agent, myself, and himself. To this I replied that the agent might not submit to such transactions. He said, "Yes, he will; that is all right with the agent."

I then asked Mr. Story what the poor Indian would have to subsist on should such a transaction as he proposed take place. He replied that there were plenty of buffaloes and they could live on buffalo meat, as it was good enough for them. At this juncture I informed Mr. Story that I had served in the Army over thirty-one years; that I had never received a dollar in that way and that I never should; that I would inspect his supplies and if they came up to the requirements of the contracts they would pass, if not they would be rejected. You have seen the result of the inspection of the pork, now I will give you the result of the inspection of flour.

Mr. Story was putting in flour on the Kiskadden contract, and in that I would inspect his supplies and if they came up to the requirements of the contracts they would pass, if not they would be rejected. You have seen the result of the inspection of the pork, now I will give you the result of the inspection of flour.

Mr. Story was putting in flour on the Kiskadden contract, and informed me before I commenced the inspection that he had in store at the agency two thousand eachs of flour for inspection. This flour was ranked up in the agent solor-housetogother with flour that had been inspected counted with it. I separated the flour inspected and branded the sacks. The flour was of an excellent quality but fell short of the number of sacks the contractor reported to have had, there being only eleven hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand. This difference of eight hundred and ninety-seven sacks in seven the already inspected flour, first, by counting, if possible, some of the old flour in rank with the new flour, and, secondly, by researching some of the already inspected flour. My reasons for supposing the latter are these: Mr. Story had a large lot of flour made at Mr. McAdam's mills and gave Mr. McAdam particular instructions about the sacking of it. That was, that the flour should be double-sacked in flour sacks, inside and outside sack; and great hunusual way of putting up flour Mr. Story agreed to pay Mr. McAdam for any extra expense he might incur.

It must seem evident to all business men who might consider this matter and manner of double-sacking flour, that it shows at first sight an intent at fraud, and from the fact that Mr. Story has attempted to bribe

(Through Headquarters Department of Dakota.)

FORT ELLIS, M. T., February 20, 1876.

Respectfully forwarded through Headquarters Department Dakota. The within report is a damning record of the utter rascality now practiced by the thieves of the Indian ring. The coolness with which these scoundrels offer to bribe an honorable and honest officer of the Government is perfectly astounding. Captain Ball is an old and experienced officer of the Army, and of course everything he states is perfectly correct. If Nelson Story and Dexter Clapp were arrested and shot to death by musketry, it would be no more than such men deserved.

This paper is sent forward by Captain Ball through the military channels, lest if forwarded direct to the Indian Department it might be pigeon-holed, and no notice taken of the irregularities reported within.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, D. C., April 22, 1876.

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs,

Washington, D. C., April 22, 1876.

Sin: By Department reference of the 10th instant I have the honor to be in receipt of a communication from the honorable Secretary of War, of date the 7th instant, covering copy of a report from Captain Edward Ball, Second Cavalry, of his action in the inspection and rejection of certain supplies offered for the Crow agency by Nelson Story under his contract, and of an attempt by Mr. Story to bribe him in the discharge of his official duties. Captain Ball charges Agent Clapp of guilty connection with these proposed frauds, and whenever the services of an inspector can be procured, the management of affairs at this agency shall have thorough investigation.

In this connection, however, I cannot refrain from commenting on the action of Captain Ball in not making report of these alleged transactions direct to this office. He submitted a report dated February 17, and received here on the 2d ultimo, of his rejection of the pork presented by Mr. Story, and stated his intention of forwarding, through military channels, the detailed statement of Mr. Story's attempt to bribe him, which is now the subject of comment.

Captain Ball acts under the instructions of this office in the inspection of Indian goods, and should, in my judgment, make all his reports direct. Indeed, I do not see how the reports of his inspection of Indian supplies can gain any additional weight by their transmission to this office through the routine prescribed for purely military correspondence. They certainly lose in promptness.

It is matter of congratulation that Captain Ball and Major Brisbin write in such commendable zeal for the punishment of knavery and corruption, but their zeal has betrayed them into what I cannot but regard as gross discourtesy to this office. I know of nothing in my official conduct which furnishes Captain Ball with any ground for his fear, so frankly expressed in Major Brisbin's indorsement, that these direct charges of corruption

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 22, 1876.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication of this date from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in relation to the report of Captain Edward Ball, Second Cavalry, in the matter of his inspection and rejection of certain supplies for the Crow agency in Montana, and preferring charges against the agent and certain contractors at that agency, received from the honorable the Secretary of War, of date the 7th instant.

War, of date the 7th instant.

In transmitting this communication, I beg to call your attention to the indorsement of Major James S. Brisbin, transmitting Captain Ball's report, and to the gross imputation upon the Indian Department which it contains, knowing that it is but necessary for you to be aware of such discourteous conduct on the part of Major Brisbin and Captain Ball to insure the Indian Department immunity from its repetition.

I fully indorse the request of the Commissioner that these officers be required to state the grounds, if any exist, for their reflection upon him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN,

[Second indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF MISSOURI, Chicago, May 18, 1876.

Respectfully returned to the General of the Army, asking a reconsideration of this case so far as sending an officer to Montana to investigate it. Captain Ball is an honest, faithful officer, whose statements as to the quality of the goods and the offer of a bribe by the contractor are very positive, and, so far as I can judge, are not disputed by the Indian Bureau. I do not think that Captain Ball for a moment thought of reflecting on the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report, but that he by force of habit or from not reflecting sent his report through military channels instead of direct to the Commissioner. It is very common, if not always the case, that while one report is sent to the Commissioner a duplicate is sent to the War Department through military channels. The indorsement of Major Brisbin was uncalled for and unnecessary, and its faults are so apparent that they can be seen and condemned by the General of the Army without further investigation.

Looking at this case in the foregoing light, I do not see the necessity of incurring the expense of sending an officer so far for so little. Besides, Captain Ball and Major Brisbin are now out on an Indian expedition, and may not be in until late in the summer. If, however, after further consideration the General of the Army desires the investigation to take place, it shall be done by a good officer, and I hope the General will pardon me for asking this reconsideration.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, March 3, 1880.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I renew it for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] having charge of this bill a question in reference to the amendment and similar amendments which may be offered, and it is this: Whether, under the heading under which we are now proceeding, "removal, settlement, subsistence, and support of Indians," the various tribes mentioned in this article have not been formerly specifically appropriated for, and why there is any necessity for appropriation for "removal, settlement, subsistence, and support of Indians;" whether that "removal, settlement, subsistence, and support of Indians; "refers to expenses already incurred by the Department, or the probable expenses which are likely to occur in the future?

Mr. WELLS. I will say a portion of these Indians are on the reservations in New Mexico and Arizona. The same amount appropriated by this bill was appropriated last year; we have appropriated here $320,000, the same as was appropriated last year.

Mr. HOOKER. Is it done only because it was done last year? If it were done last year and expended for that purpose, what is the necessity of renewing it now?

Mr. WELLS. The law reads as follows:

This amount, to subsist and properly care for Apaches and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona.

This is not an act confined to one locality, but takes in the two Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amend-

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it. As the gentleman from Missouri has stated, the sum of money contained in this item is identically the same voted last year. The House is aware we have recommended, under the importunity of the Department, deficiencies where we had not provided money enough; but in this instance there is none, and for the reason there was an ample sum appropriated. The Committee en Appropriations have therefore thought fit to recommend the same amount of money for the same purpose for the next year, 1881, not having had any reason given why there should be any increase.

The gentleman from Kansas has announced on this very proposi tion that we have failed to supply these Indians with rations and they are now on the war-path. There is not the slightest intimation, sir, from the Department; and this is the loose way in which gentle-sir, from the Department; and this is the loose way in which gentlemen see fit to arraign reports of committees. These Indians are on the war-path; they are troublesome; and you may feed them and fatten them and they will still be upon the war-path.

For one, I think it is time for us to consider whether some other remedy than simply furnishing these Indians with meat and bread to eat in idleness out of which vice is born and murder and rapine—I say it is time for us to inquire whether we cannot devise some other method, and apply something of force where kindness has not proved availing. We are not under obligations to them by treaty stipulations. They are supplied with rations to-day without having any claim on us; and some of them are now on the war-path. This is no instance where it is proper for us to increase appropriations to these lawless men. I think it would be better to withhold them altogether and use some other method of dealing with them where, as I have said, kindness has proved unavailing.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in reference to the question I propounded to the gentleman from Missouri, or to any other gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations, that I have not as yet received what I accord as a strict feature of the control of the on the Committee on Appropriations, that I have not as yet received what I regard as a satisfactory answer. It was a simple business inquiry and I hoped to receive a business answer. But so far—

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to answer his question now?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; I desire an answer to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I beg the gentleman's pardon for not having given him my views upon the question before. These views, I may say, are the same as those entertained by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Wells,] and perhaps I may be able to state them a little more fully. At this time we are seeking to grat certain Indians back on the reser-At this time we are seeking to get certain Indians back on the reserat this time we are seeking to get certain Indians back on the reservations. They may or they may not get back. It has been a part of the policy of the Indian Bureau for several years, and for that purpose a part of the fund appropriated has been used. In that way this language is used in the present appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Mississippi will see that the appropriation does not cover the absolute wants of these Indians. It is simply an amount appropriated which will be used for the purposes indicated in the languages. ated which will be used for the purposes indicated in the language of this appropriation bill. It is in pursuance of the same policy that has been used heretofore. I think last year a few Indians were gotten on these reservations, and that is the reason that the same language is employed in the present bill. To cover the point and permit this work of collecting the Indians on reservations to go on, this same form of words is used, and I do not see, unless my friend the gentle-man from Mississippi shall take the position here that we cannot give a dollar for this purpose under any treaty stipulation, how we can improve the matter now.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.
Mr. PAGE. I understand the gentleman to say that we are appropriating money now for Indians who are already on the war-path?
Mr. BLOUNT. I say that we are appropriating money to collect these Indians on reservations. Some of these Indians are on the war-path; but no money is appropriated for those who are on the war-

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, neither the gentleman from Georgia nor the gentleman from Missouri nor any other gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations has answered to my mind satisfactorily the simple question as to the necessity for this appropriation. I am aware of the fact that for a series of years past it has been customary to make a similar appropriation, and it was under such an appropriation as this that the Poncas were removed-a subject which is now being investigated in the other legislative branch of this Government, at the other end of the Capitol.

It was in consequence of the fact that because the House and the Senate made an appropriation in this general way, using the terms for removal, settlement, subsistence, and support of the Indians, the Poncas were removed against their consent and in open violation of

Why, Mr. Chairman? Simply because you had made an appropriation and some contractor wanted to get the benefit of it. The only way in which you will ever cut down appropriations for the support of the Indians, is to cut down that portion of the appropriation bill which enables the vast army of cormorants to feed upon the Government and the Indians. The only way to protect the Government against this horde is to omit from the appropriation bills all such items as the one now under consideration. Every line and every letter of your laws in reference to treaties with the Indians ought to letter of your laws in reference to treaties with the Indians ought to be observed and the Government ought to pay every dollar which is due to them for any purpose under these treaties; but you ought not to so frame your bills as to permit either from the funds which belong to the Indians or the Government and appropriated by Congress for their support, maintenance, and settlement any part to be taken for the benefit of the contractors. I have only a word further to add, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this general appropriation which has not a specific object. I was proceeding to say, sir, that I think it the duty of the Government to pay to these Indians every dollar due to them under the treaty stipulations, and we ought to do it, not only in justice to them but in justice to ourselves. But when you go to make appropriations which are intended to support this vast army of hangers-on around the Indian Bureau, and who are in the service of the Indian Department, then I am opposed to appropriating a single

I want to say further upon this subject, that while I do not agree with some of the sentiments that have been uttered in discussing with some of the sentiments that have been uttered in discussing this bill neither do I concur in the view that you are to provide for these Indians in another way, as urged by the able, intelligent, and experienced Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Schurz. I am glad to have the opportunity of saying upon this floor that I accord to him the possession of the highest intelligence coupled in my judgment with the highest integrity in the administration of his Department. But I believe he has been sadly mistaken as to what constitutes the proper elements for solution of the Indian problem. It high he has entirely I believe he has been sadly mistaken as to what constitutes the proper elements for a solution of the Indian problem. I think he has entirely mistaken the question and has recommended a system which will not remedy the existing evils. He thinks it is to be found in the division of the lands into severalty. Yet the intelligent Secretary of the Interior, in the bill which he proposed to submit to the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, did not dare to provide an application of this principle to the five civilized tribes living in the Indian Territory. And why? Because, sir, they had intelligent representatives here who understood exactly what it was that constituted their interest; because he would not attempt to apply to intelligent citizens of the United States the principle, that, holding lands in common, there was any power in the Government to compel them to hold them in severalty when they did not desire it.

My own judgment is that if his theory is to be carried out, namely, that of dividing the lands in severalty and of destroying their tribal

My own judgment is that if his theory is to be carried out, namely, that of dividing the lands in severalty and of destroying their tribal relations, there are probably only a few years remaining during which the Indians will have any existence at all.

While I am in favor of carrying out the treaty and paying the Indians every dollar they are entitled to, I am opposed to paying in your appropriation bill the vast army of cormorants who feed upon the money of the Indians and not upon the money of the Government. When you comply with the treaty stipulations and pay what you owe them you are performing a duty which you owe under the you owe them you comply with the treaty stipulations and pay what you owe them you are performing a duty which you owe under the compact you have made, and which no government ought to be disposed to violate because that contract is made with a weak party on the other side.

compact you have made, and which no government ought to be disposed to violate because that contract is made with a weak party on the other side.

The only way you will ever economize in the administration of your Indian affairs, is to cut down the number of useless agents. And I would begin by decapitating the misnamed Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the head of the bureau. I would destroy it all and place the management of Indian affairs in the charge of the War Department, with a right to designate some honorable man from the Army to act for the general welfare of the Indians at every agency where an agent is necessary; some man who would be liable to be brought up with quick and rapid dispatch whenever he violates the law, to be tried by his peers before a commission who, after hearing the evidence, would say, "You have been guilty of misapplication of the funds of the Government, you have robbed the Indians of what is theirs," and would try him by that short, sharp, summary method which belongs to the procedure of the War Department. As I understand it there has been in the whole history of the Government but one conviction of a civil agent of the Government under the laws of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The question being taken on Mr. Baker's amendment, it was not agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill and read as follows: For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas, who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $305,000.

Mr. HUBBELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

In the paragraph just read, strike out $305,000 and insert $350,000.

Mr. HUBBELL. The reasons for this amendment can be briefly stated. We appropriated last year for the subsistence and civiliza-tion of these Indians $290,000. The year had not nearly expired when the question of short rations came up, and the Department was confronted with this dilemma: they must either create a deficiency or these Indians must go on the war-path; and the Department decided to create and did create a deficiency of $80,000; so that for the fiscal year, instead of $290,000, there was incurred an indebtedness of $370,000.

The Department says, as the committee know, and there is no need

The Department says, as the committee know, and there is no need perhaps of my repeating it here, that they cannot take care of these Indians and keep them from going on the war-path unless they have an adequate appropriation to subsist them. We have, therefore, this alternative staring us in the face again: whether we will take care of these Indians or whether we will fight them.

The precise sum named in this item is not adequate, and it means, just as it did last year, another deficiency. Now, I think the members of this Committee of the Whole ought to consider this matter. Where it has been tried and ascertained that it requires so much to take care of a band of Indians—for there are nearly ten thousand of these Indians, ninety-nine hundred of them—where it has been found to be impossible to subsist them any cheaper than has been heretofore it becomes necessary for the same reason as last year we can pass an appropriation for a deficiency.

I hope the Committee of the Whole will stand by this bill and vote the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, as we believe that will be found ample and sufficient.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hubbell]

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Micl will withdraw his amendment I will renew it.

Mr. HUBBELL. I withdraw the amendment.
Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying that this appropriation has no obligation upon us except simply our willingness to give a gratuity to these Indians for the purpose of keeping them from the war-path. Last year we voted for this purpose $290,000. The Department came in here and asked for a defikeeping them from the war-path. Last year we voted for a defipose $290,000. The Department came in here and asked for a deficiency of $80,000, giving as a special reason for it that there had been poor crops for these Indians last year. The Committee on Appropriations not being able to gainsay it yielded under the circumstances.
We appropriated for the present fiscal year for this purpose the sum of $290,000. We appropriated for the last fiscal year $240,000, and for the preceding fiscal year the sum of $240,000. We now propose to increase the appropriation for the coming fiscal year to $305,000.

Let me say to members of this House that the Department can spend $1,000,000 on these Indians if you will give it to them. During the Forty-fourth Congress we gave them $240,000 a year; and they worked through with that until last year, when we appropriated $290,000; and then they came in here for a deficiency for a very large sum. We now propose to give them for the next fiscal year $305,000, $65,000 more than was appropriated by the Forty-fourth Congress. and which they got along with. Yet we are told it is not enough.

Gentlemen tell us that they are afraid of a war with these Indians; and tomahawks are brandished here in this House all the time in order to frighten money out of us. Now, if you give the Department to understand that this much may be spent by them and no more—when the Department understands that that is the sincere announcement of those who vote the money of the people—ther ciencies will cease and this talk of Indian wars will stop. -then these defi-

I trust that this House will see fit not to increase this appropriation one dollar. For myself, I should prefer to see it reduced, but by no means increased by a dollar. We have tried them with less sums, and they have got along.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. Hubbell, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following: For subsistence and civilization of the Flatheads and other confederated tribes including pay of employés, $6,500.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve all points of order upon the amendment until it has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

For the support of an agricultural and industrial school, keeping in repair the buildings, and providing suitable furniture, books, and stationery, per fifth article of treaty of July 16, 1855, $300.

For providing suitable instructors therefor, per same article of same treaty,

$1,800.

For keeping in repair blacksmith, carpenter, and wagon and plow maker shops, and providing necessary tools therefor, per same article and treaty, $300.

For the employment of two farmers, two millers, one blacksmith, one carpenter, and one wagon and plow maker, per same article and treaty, $7,400.

For keeping in repair saw and flouring mills, and for furnishing the necessary tools and intures therefor, per same article and treaty, $500.

For keeping in repair the hospital, and providing the necessary medicines and furniture therefor, per same article and treaty, $300.

For pay of a physician, per same article and treaty, $1,200.

For keeping in repair the buildings required for the various employés, and furnishing the necessary furniture therefor, per same article and treaty, $300.

For the pay of the head chiefs of the Flathead, Kootenay, and Upper Pend d'Oreille tribes, per same article and treaty, $1,500.

Mr. MAGINNIS. This amendment contains simply a repetition of last year's appropriation, which it will be seen was then said to be the last of twenty installments for these Indians. This amendment, as compared with the provision I propose to strike out, makes a difference of about $7,500. The Government claims that treaty with these confederated tribes expired last year, and I suppose that in a certain sense it has. The Indians claim that it ought to run two years more. Their country is very remote; and they did not receive the first annuities under the treaty. They probably received nothing until three or four years after Congress began to appropriate for them; and very little then.

I do not threaten the House with any war if this amendment should not be adopted. These Indians will submit as they have submitted. But I want to relate something of the history of this tribe, and the claims they have upon the Government. The Selish tribe, miscalled Flatheads, are the Indians that harbored Lewis and Clarke in their exploring expedition through the Rocky Mountains. The grateful tribute of those dauntless explorers is warm with affection for this kind and hospitable tribe of Indians who fed, clothed, and sheltered their party which had passed through so many hostile and dangerous people and so many dread adventures. Ever since they have maintained their friendship for the whites, and have never broken the peace with their neighbors. They justly complain that a hostile course of action would have been more profitable to them, as only those Indians who defy and harass the Government seem to receive any favors at its hands.

Their peaceful and quiet conduct has largely been due to the efforts of the Jesuit missionaries. Father de Smet here raised one of his most successful missions. Years ago, when glass and nails had to be transported a thousand miles or more on pack-animals, the fathers and the Indians raised a church, which is even yet the largest and finest in the Territory. In this remote solitude, in a valley as beautiful as that in which the author of Rasselas placed his Abyssinian prince and surrounded by mountains as rugged and lofty as those which imprisoned that resiless spirit, the Sisters of Charity opened an industrial school for these poor people, which must be closed should this appropriation cease. Besides the school the agency has a small mill appropriation cease. Besides the school the agency has a small mill and a blacksmith shop, where the Indian tools are repaired and where the produce of their little farms are ground into flour. This tribe has between one and two hundred small inclosures on which they are engaged in raising grain and vegetables for their own support. The agency mill and these schools are the only mills or schools in that region. These Indians were related to the Nez Percés, but when that tribe revolted the Flatheads declined to join them and took lots with the whites and kept our people out of a great deal of misery and saved to the Government an amount of money which this House cannot repay. They claim that their treaty has not expired. They will have a grievance if you so declare. Two years ago the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs agreed to send out an inspector to settle this question. He was unable to do so. A year afterward the Commissioner agreed to go himself and settle the question, and he failed to do so. Now, I think that under the circumstances, there being a dispute as to whether the treaty has expired and the additional amount which the amendment proposes to expend being only a few thousand, we can afford to keep this mill and blacksmith-shop and these school-houses open one year longer until the questions at issue between these Indians and the Government to which they have been so loyal shall have been settled and some provision is made for them.

Mr. WELLS arose.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I admit that the Department claims that the treaty has expired; I admit probably all the gentleman will say on the question. I simply appeal to the equity of the committee. The Department has asked for this appropriation until pending questions with these Indians have been settled. The Indians are making good progress now, but in years past have been outrageously robbed and yet remained loyal through it all. This bill contains many large appropriations avowedly made to appease our bitter enemies. Surely if we pursue such a policy and yet turn a deaf ear to the well-founded complaints of our faithful friends we will find in some dread emergence.

gency that we have no allies when we need them most.

Mr. WELLS. As the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Maginnis] has stated, the treaty stipulation for these appropriations expired last year. The Department submitted an estimate of $13,000 for this purpose. The Committee on Appropriations under the circumstances recommend an appropriation of $6,500, making a difference of $6,100 between the amount which the gentleman asks for and the amount appropriated by the bill. I know nothing in regard to any understanding that there may have been between this tribe and the Indian Department.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MAGINNIS, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 10, noes 20. The Clerk read as follows:

Settlement, subsistence, and support of Shoshones and Bannacks and other bands, in Idaho and Southeastern Oregon: For this amount, to be expended by the direction of the President, in assisting the roving bands of Indians in Southeastern Idaho to move and locate on the Fort Hall reservation in Idaho Territory, and to assist them in educational and agricultural pursuits on said reservation, $20,000.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by making an appropriation $25,000 instead of $20,000. This small increase is the appropriation $25,000 instead of $20,000. This small increase is really needed by the Department to enable it to remove these Indians and locate them upon the reservation. It is within the recollection of all that only two years ago a portion of these Indians were at war with the Government. They have never been gathered in; they are still scattered; and the Department feels that it is impossible to accomplish the work desired unless an addition of $5,000 be made to this appropriation. The amount is so small and the object so important that I do hope the amendment may be allowed to go through.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows

Transportation of Indian supplies: For this amount, for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles, for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, $225,000.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, oats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve a point of order on this amendment until

Mr. Blockly. Teserve a point of order of this amendment until the gentleman has made his remarks.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the present practice of the Department is to receive and open bids for all these supplies and make the award of contracts thereon in the city of New York, some fourteen hundred or fifteen hundred miles away from the field of supply, and from fourteen hundred to three thousand miles away from the Indians who are to be supplied. It is an expensive and unprofit-able system, and I trust the Committee on Appropriations will accept

I want to call attention to the system of advertising. The Department advertises in some of the principal papers of the country that it will on a certain day receive in the city of New York bids for supplies of different kinds for the Indians, and for further particulars parties are directed to apply to the Department, from which they can obtain a schedule of items showing what supplies are wanted for different agencies. This advertisement is put out about three weeks before the letting of the contracts. When it reaches the notice of anybody in the extreme western portion of the country who may desire to bid, it is almost always too late to obtain the specifications and make a bid upon them. The result is that there is a monopoly of bidders for these supplies; the competition is confined to professional contractors. By examination of the reports it will be found that in the case of the very largest contracts, where there have been as high as seven million pounds of beef contracted for in one contract, there have been only about seven bidders in all. I call attention to the last report of the Department which contains "An abstract of proposals received and contracts awarded in New York City under advertisement of March 26, 1879, for furnishing supplies for the Indian service." ment of March 26, 1879, for furnishing supplies for the Indian service."
"Bacon:" Now, there were 225,000 pounds let, and there were only two bidders; and those supplies were to be delivered at Kansas City. This is the fault of letting the contract so remote from the field of supply. The same criticism will apply all the way through.

supply. The same criticism will apply all the way through.

Mr. WELLS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not withdraw my point of order.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will accept it as it is in the line of economy.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know whether it is in the line of economy or not. It is simply announced to this House without recommendation. I do not know it has the recommendation of any committee.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.
Mr. BLOUNT. Of course it will not.
Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman from Georgia say he reserved the point of order?

the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I did.
Mr. FINLEY. I was watching for that, but did not hear it.
Mr. BLOUNT. I am sorry the gentleman is getting old.
Mr. FINLEY. Let us look at the RECORD and see whether the gentleman reserved the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair has decided that I did.
Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to say if my friend will examine the reports he will see there are but seven bidders for the entire amount of the contracts awarded in New York City. This was to supply Indians in the extreme West, in the Indian Territory, and on the borders of Kansas, where there are over fifty thousand head of cattle. The field of supply is in the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys, and I undertake to say if these contracts were let at a location convenient to the field of supply, my State alone, for a contract of that sort, would furtake to say if these contracts were let at a location convenient to the field of supply, my State alone, for a contract of that sort, would furnish from twenty-five to fifty bidders. This system results in monopoly; and bidding is confined to professional bidders, who have their agents here at Washington with passes in their pockets, and who can go to New York and attend lettings. It is all wrong; and I hope the gentleman will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on his scient of carlor?

point of order?
Mr. BLOUNT.

I do; I have no official information on the subject. Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. You know these contracts are all let in New man from Georgia?

Mr. BLOUNT. This proposition does not come from any committee. It does not retrench expenditures. I do not know what merit there is in it. It is a proposition to change existing law.

Mr. HASKELL. Not a particle.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is a proposition to change existing law, not proposed by any committee, and does not carry with it any retrenchment of expenditure, and, therefore, it is not in order on this bill.

This is an important matter. Here is the Committee on Indian Affairs and if that committee had recommended it I would not open my mouth on the subject. There is nothing from the Department and I do not think there should be a change of the law in this way. I will say to my friend from Kansas, however, that, before the bill is disposed of, if he will obtain a recommendation from the Department or the Indian Committee, I will not renew the point of order.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I think you should withdraw the point of order, as this is in the line of economy.

Mr. WELLS. There is no law now requiring all bids to be opened in New York. It is simply a regulation of the Department.

Mr. DUNNELL. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that if this amendment yield the existing law it is not approach for any graph on the Committee of the control of the committee of the control of the c

Mr. VALENTINE. It is only the custom.

Mr. DUNNELL. They have been only opened there because it has een the custom. I am firm in the belief we could do no greater service to the Indian Bureau than break up that custom.

A gentleman said the other day the Indian peace commissioners were all from the East. I do not wonder at it. They are from the East, and the men who get these contracts are from the East; they own the Department. I was once told by a gentleman who was connected

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman say they own the Department?
Mr. DUNNELL. I undertake to say these men who furnish these supplies have a hold on the Indian Bureau, and have had it for many

Mr. BLOUNT. What sort of control does the gentleman refer to and Mr. DUNNELL. I mean to say the control, as the gentleman from Kansas has pointed out as a monopoly. They have a hold that cannot be broken until we break up the custom which permits these bids to be opened in the city of New York. Now, there is no reason why the bids should be opened there; no reason at all. There is nothing to be said in support of it. Everything is against it. All the supplies that are needed for the Indians come from the States of Iowa, Minthat are needed for the Indians come from the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois, and other States bordering on or adjacent to the Indian Territory. Why not let the contractors in these Western States have an opportunity to make bids, by inserting the advertisements for the supplies in all the papers of the Mississippi and Missouri Valley? Let the men who can furnish the supplies have an opportunity to make bids and a fair chance. But, as the gentleman says, there is a ring of professional bidders—a monopoly. The contracts are all advertised here. The agent is in New York. He knows when the advertisement takes place, and can post his principal; but the men in Kansas who can really furnish the supplies do not know anything about it, and cannot know anything about it, because they have no means of ascertaining. The bids are about it, because they have no means of ascertaining. The bids are to be opened in New York. The men who might bid are a thousand miles off. They cannot afford to go to New York, and they do not understand and they have no opportunity of knowing when the contracts are to be awarded.

Mr. HOOKER. Is it not true that if these bids were opened in Saint Louis or Cincinnati it would be greatly to the advantage of the Government by enabling an increased competition with reference to

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Certainly it would. There would be ten

Mr. DUNNELL. We would not only have a larger number of bidders and more competition, but we would be enabled to obtain these supplies, in my judgment, at largely reduced rates by saving transportation. There are contracts which have been let in the Indian Department for oats at upward of a dollar a bushel to be delivered in bulk the contract entered into in the city of New York. The conin bulk, the contract entered into in the city of New York. The contractor goes to Kansas, buys his oats at fifty cents a bushel, transports them fifty or sixty miles by wagon, fulfills the terms of his contract, and makes an immense sum of money out of the Department which the Government ought to save, and can save.

For my own part, I cannot understand why the same principle that prevails in the War Department for making these advertisements should not be applied in the Indian Bureau as well. If the War Department wants provisions or supplies to be delivered in Dakota or elsewhere the bids are published in Minnesota, Iowa, and other States proximate to the points where the supplies are to be used, and the men who actually have the supplies on hand have an opportunity of

Mr. PRICE. Is the question of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The question of order is before the com-

Mr. PRICE. In what I may say on this question I shall endeavor to speak to the question of order. The point of order that is made against this amendment is that it does, inferentially or in some other way, change existing law. Now, that point of order is made upon the supposition that there is a law on the statute-books which is to be changed by this proposed amendment. When a man wants to furnish a pound of pork to the Indians two thousand miles off he has not to be constituted in the sixty of the statute of the sixty got to go to the city of New York to make his bid to do it. This is the law that gentlemen say this amendment changes. Now, I doubt very much whether there is any such absurd law on the statute-books. If there is I shall be very much surprised. It ought not to be there.

Mr. HASKELL. There is no such law.

Mr. PRICE. Then, if there is no such law the point of order upon that is badly taken.

that is badly taken.

Coming now to the common-sense view of this matter, I wish to say a few words upon that. The Indians are away out yonder toward sundown; the contractor comes to the city of New York and makes a bid to supply them with flour, oats, bacon, and pork.

Mr. HASKELL. And corn.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, and corn. Now, they do not raise any corn, or bacon, or pork, or oats, or anything else that the Indian needs in the city of New York; and you go there and bid for a thing that does not exist, unless it is carried there from the very doors of the Indians. You have to go fifteen hundred miles in the first place to buy the pork and corn and oats and take it to New York, and then go to New York and get a bid for it for the use of the Indians and carry it back over the same road fifteen hundred miles again to where it is needed. Now, I say that is the common-sense view of this question. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a point of order. Mr. PRICE. I say, Mr. Chairman, that is the common-sense view of it; that is, common sense hanged up by the neck for people to laugh at.

Mr. ATKINS. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I insist that the gentleman must confine himself to the point of order. This discussion as to the merits of the proposition itself is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I am endeavoring to meet the arguments that have been made upon the point of order. I am following in the same line as my predecessors. If I am to knock down their arguments, I must go where their arguments lead me. I know of no other way of reaching them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. A few words, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order as connected with the question of retrenchment.

It seems to me to be considered as settled by some gentlemen that all the rascality connected with the Indian service centers in New all the rascality connected with the Indian service centers in New York. Very likely that is true as to rascality. It is not true as to morality. I know something of this Indian service myself, and of the contract system. I know that a great many of the lowest bidders in New York have turned out to be the highest. Why, look at some of your old contracts about hatchets, blankets, &c. You will find by the testimony of agents, contractors, and others that the lowest bidders became the highest before they got done. This system is not peculiar to New York. It runs all through our Indian service. I believe that the amendment proposed by my friend from Kansas is in the line of retrenchment. Why should we have the bids opened at New York merely? There is no law for it. Let there be fair, full competition everywhere. If Saint Louis or Kansas wants to do a little cheating let them do it. Do not limit it to New York. New York has not the monopoly of rascality in this country. all the rascality connected with the Indian service centers in New has not the monopoly of rascality in this country.

Mr. McKENZIE. It has a large part of it.

Mr. McKenzle. It has a large part of it.
Mr. COX. I wish to say to the gentleman who has charge of this bill, the gentleman from Georgia—

A Member. The gentleman from Missouri.
Mr. COX. I wish to say to the gentleman from Missouri, who has charge of the bill, and to the gentleman from Georgia also, who seems to have a partial charge of it, that it is possible to give the largest advertising, the largest publicity, to these bids for calico, for blankets, for hatchets, for everything the Indian wants, and it should be done. There has been more reproach brought upon our Governbe done. There has been more reproach brought upon our Government by this matter of Indian contracts than by anything else.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COX. Very well.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman not think it would be much better for the Indian Committee to consider this question than for the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. COX. That is not exactly pertinent to the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is a good deal of the gentleman's speech that has not been pertinent to the point of order.

Mr. COX. I will not discuss the point of order further than to say

I believe this lies in the line of retrenchment, and I do not think it needs to be referred to any committee.

Mr. ATKINS. I propose to address myself to the point of order. The merits of the question are all upon one side, as I suggested a moment ago and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has just suggested.

On the question of order I wish to say simply this: I believe it is conceded there is no law regulating the manner in which these publications shall be made. The law does not require anything specific lications shall be made. The law does not require anything specine in regard to it. It is a matter of mere regulation on the part of the Department. Now, the question is, is the regulation of the Department law? Does any gentleman claim that a regulation of the Department is law? I think not. If, then, there is no law, no statutory enactment about this matter, and if the regulations of the Department are not law, how can this point of order be sustained? That is the point I wish to make. I conceive that we are making a law by this amendment, but I cannot see that under Rule XXI we are changing avisting law. ing existing law.

Mr. SIMONTON. Will my colleague from Tennessee allow me to

Mr. SIMONTON. Will my colleague from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ATKÎNS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to finish my remark, and then I will be ready to hear his question. We are making a law. But the rule does not say we shall not make a law. It says we shall not change existing law. Now, I repeat, the regulation of the Department is not a law, and therefore this amendment does not come within the point of order. I say this with all respect to my friend from Georgia, with whom I dislike to differ on this bill.

Mr. SIMONTON. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: if there is not now any law by authority of which the proper officer made these contracts?

made these contracts?

Mr. ATKINS. It is done by a mere departmental regulation.
Mr. SIMONTON. Is there no authority of law for it? There must be authority of law for it.

Mr. ATKINS. Then show it.

Mr. SIMONTON. And if there is authority of law for it, the proper officer can now in compliance with the law make contracts in New York. After this he cannot do it; and therefore this must be a change of law

Mr. SPARKS. I think I can set my friend right on that point. There is authority of law for making these purchases. The mode, manner, place of advertising—all that is a regulation of the Department as I understand. So much money is appropriated for a particular purpose. That is the warrant to the Department for their expending the money. The manner in which it is done, the place and the mode of opening bids—all that is done by departmental regulation.

Mr. FINLEY. I agree with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Arkins] that there is but one side to the merits of this question and I shall that there is but one side to the merits of this question, and I shall devote the few remarks I have to make to the point of order.

The gentleman from Georgia says the amendment will change existing law. If that is true, the point of order is well taken. But the gentleman falls to show us the law it will change. He fails to show us that law by reference to book and page. I assert there is no such law. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Atkins] has asserted, and I suppose he understands what he talks about, that it is a mere departmental rule.

If, then, the amendment does not change existing law, it is certainly germane, and the point that it does not come from a committee does not attach.

not attach.

Now, if there be nothing more than a departmental rule upon this subject the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee is a valid one. We can make law. There is no rule which prevents us making a law; and we could not make a better law, one more for the interest not only of the Government but of the Indian, than by the enactment of this very amendment to this appropriation bill.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SCALES. I understand my friend to say that there is no law on the subject now, but merely a departmental regulation.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. SCALES. And I understand it is now proposed to make a law.

Mr. SCALES. And I understand it is now proposed to make a law. Mr. FINLEY. Well.

Mr. SCALES. If this makes a law, then it is changing a law, beanse there is no law whatever now.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the most remarkable argument I ever heard in my life. The gentleman says that if you make a law you thereby change existing law, although there is no law in existence; yet, if you make a law perferce you change the existing law.

you make a law, perforce you change the existing law.

Mr. SCALES. One moment. I understand the gentleman to say that here is a law which gives authority to the Department to make these contracts. It is now proposed to make the law specific. If that is not changing existing law, I should like to know what is.

Mr. FINLEY. I did not say that. I say that there is no law on the subject, only a simple departmental rule, which is worse than no

[Here the hammer fell.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. The point of order I understand to be that this proposed amendment, if adopted, will change existing law. I understand that it is admitted on all hands that if a law does exist providing that these bids should be opened in a particular place, this amendment would not be in order. But if the law does not specify any such thing, and the practice of the Department rests solely on the custom heretofore followed by the proper officer, which custom can be changed at his will and pleasure, it seems to me that this amendment would be in order. I ask the Clerk to read sections 2083 and 2084 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2083. All merchandise required by any Indian treaty for the Indians, payable after making of such treaty, shall be purchased under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon proposals to be received, to be based on notices previously to be given; and all merchandise required at the making of any Indian treaty shall be purchased under the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by such person as he shall appoint. All other purchases on account of the Indians and all payments to them of money or goods shall be made by such person as the President shall designate for that purpose.

SEC. 2084. No goods shall be purchased by the Office of Indian Affairs, or its agents, for any tribe, except upon the written requisition of the superintendent in charge of the tribe, and only upon public bids in the mode prescribed by the preceding section.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I will not detain the committee any further by calling attention to this matter, because all will see that the law leaves it to the discretion of the Commissioner himself where these bids shall be opened. He may direct that they shall be opened in the city of New York, in the city of Saint Louis, or in any other place he may designate. But it is fairly contemplated that certain notice must be given. Now, this amendment cannot change any existing law for the reason that the law does not now specify any place where these bids shall be either received or opened.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MILLS. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that as we are to have a night session to-night the committee should now rise.

should now rise.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield for that purpose. Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Carlisle having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Whitthorne reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask my colleague to withdraw that motion, for the House has ordered a session for this evening.
Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the motion.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. HATCH. I ask consent that two pension bills upon the Speaker's table be now taken up and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A bill (S. No. 748) granting a pension to Thomas E. Brawner; and A bill (S. No. 1360) granting a pension to Aaron Hatcher.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthere] that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were-will order tellers.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order now to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order having been withdrawn that no quorum voted, if no further count is called for the motion for a recess will be considered as agreed to.

No further count being called for, the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. CAR-LISLE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of this evening is exclusively for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tuesday, April 6, 1880, on motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, Ordered. That there be sessions of the House on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next, April 14 and 15, for the consideration of business reported, or to be reported, from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As indicated last night, I propose under the general instructions of the Naval Committee to take up the reports from our committee in their order and according to their dignity. As there are three or four of our bills remaining on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF THE NAVY

The first bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 2788) to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, &c., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the Navy or the Marine Corps, a judge-advocate-general of the Navy, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain in the Navy or a colonel in the Marine Corps, as the case may be. And the office of the said judge-advocate-general shall be in the Navy Department, where he shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards for the examination of officers for retirement and promotion in the naval service, and perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the solicitor and naval judge-advocate-general.

Mr. GOODE. I ask that the report of the committee may be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2788) "to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, and to fix the rank and pay of such officer," beg leave to report the same back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The bill proposes to authorize the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the Navy or the Marine Corps, a judge-advocate-general of the Navy, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain in the Navy or a colonel in the Marine Corps, as the case may be. It provides that the office of the judge-advocate-general shall be in the Navy Department, and that it shall be his duty, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards for the examination of officers for retirement and promotion in the naval service. He shall also perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the solicitor and naval judge advocate-general. The committee believe it to be important and necessary to the best interests of the naval service that the legislation proposed by this bill should be adopted by Congress, for the following reasons:

1. The duties required to be performed under this bill are among the most important branches of the public business which have been confided to the Navy Dethe legislation proposed by this bill should be adopted by Congress, for the following reasons:

Ingressons:

The distribution of the public business which have been confided to the Navy Department.

2. The business which it is proposed to assign to this office consists of the records of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, boards for the examination of officers for retirement and promotion, the preparation of charges and specifications for courts-martial, the organization of courts and boards, the various claims filed for investigation, numerous questions of law, regulation, and other matters. The records of proceedings of the various courts and examining boards, many of them being voluminous, require careful reading and examination preliminary to action thereon by the Secretary. The claims filed for investigation, and the questions of law and regulation arising in the Department, necessitate a thorough examination and consideration of the statutes, regulations, and established customs of the service relating thereto; and the business generally of the office being so extensive, it is impossible for the Secretary, in the midst of the other varied and important duties required of him, to give to this branch of the public business the attention and consideration that its importance demands.

3. Owing to the peculiar nature of the duties pertaining to the office of judge-advocate-general in the Navy Department, it seems to be absolutely necessary that the officer appointed to said office should be familiar with the law, forms, and practice of courts-martial, the rules, regulations, and established customs of the Navy that the should have practical experience in the naval service and an acquaints of the various classes of officers and enlisted men in the rank, grade that he should passess proper legal attainments to enable him to discharge satisfactorily the duties of that office.

4. The necessity of having any officer of the service possessing these qualifications to perform the duties tof judge-advocate-genera

Mr. GOODE. I presume no further explanation of this bill is necessary. I move, therefore, that it be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DOCKAGE OF PRIVATE VESSELS AT NAVY-YARDS.

The next bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 4787) to provide for excepting from the provisions of section 3617 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the proceeds from dockage of private vessels at the everal navy-yards of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act section numbered 3617 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, to use and apply the proceeds from dockage of private vessels at navy-yards in making the necessary repairs to said docks.

Mr. GOODE. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 4787, beg leave to submit the following report:

It frequently occurs that private docks in the vicinity of navy-yards are in use or incapacitated, and the owners of vessels in cases of emergency are obliged to resort to Government docks.

resort to Government docks.

Before the use of the Government dock is granted, however, certificates are required from private dock companies in the vicinity, of their inability to dock the vessel in question. The custom has been to charge the owner or agent of the vessel only the actual cost of docking, and no charge of wear and tear of the dock; the material used being returned in kind.

The entire proceeds received for docking vessels must necessarily be turned into the Treasury under the head of "Miscellaneous receipts," as provided by sections 3617 and 3618 of the Revised Statutes.

Under these circumstances the appropriations which are required for the maintenance of repairs of navy-yards are largely absorbed for docking private vessels, and the fund so expended entirely lost to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, since the gross amount received for docking must be covered into the Treasury.

It often occurs in docking large steamers that the dock suffers injury from one cause or another, requiring large outlays for repairs. The California dock is a case in point; the authorities of that yard having submitted an estimate of $45,000 to put the dock in good working order.

The committee are of the opinion that section 3617 of the Revised Statutes should be so modified that the proceeds received for docking vessels at United States navy-yards may be retained by the Navy Department as a dock fund, the same to be expended in keeping the docks in repair and working order. This modification is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and would enable the Bureau of Yards and Docks to have the full benefit of its small appropriations for legitimate needs, and at the same time keep its docks in order from the funds received for docking private vessels. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. GOODE. This bill is very strongly recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and has the unanimous approval of the Naval Committee. I move that it be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House

The motion was agreed to.

EXPERIMENTS IN MOVABLE TORPEDOES.

The next bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 5046) to provide for experiments in movable torpedoes

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Under the instructions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask that this bill be passed over. As a reason for this action I will state that the Committee on Appropriations, we understand, will report a somewhat liberal appropriation for experiments in torpedoes; we do not wish any action on the pending bill until the experiments authorized by the regular appropriation bill shall have been made by the Secretary of the Navy. We deem it to the interest of the Government, for the present at least, that the bill be passed

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed ever, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

PROFESSORSHIPS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

The next bill on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 231) to establish upon a permanent footing the professorships of modern languages and of drawing at the United States Naval Academy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the head of the department of modern languages and the head of the department of drawing at the United States Naval Academy shall be commissioned in the Navy as professor of modern languages and professor of drawing, respectively, at said Academy, under the same provisions as to pay and retirement as professors at the United States Military Academy.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out at the end of the bill the words "professors at the United States Military Academy" and insert the following:

Professors of mathematics in the Navy: Provided, That in estimating their length of service credit shall be given them from the date of their appointments as head of the department of modern languages and of drawing, respectively.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask one question.
Mr. BREWER. The report sets forth briefly the reasons for the bill. I ask that it be read, as I presume it may answer the gentleman's inquiry.

The report was read, as follows:

man's inquiry.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 231) to establish upon a permanent footing the professorships of modern languages and drawing at the United States Naval Academy, respectfully report:

They have had the same under consideration, and find that section 1399 of the Revised Statutes provides that there shall be appointed not to exceed twelve professors of mathematics in the Navy. These professors are subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, and are usually assigned to fill positions at the Naval Academy and at the Observatory. Their pay is $2,400 for the first five years of their service, $2,700 for the second five years, $3,000 for the third five years, and $3,500 per annum after fifteen years of service. The professors of mathematics assigned to the Naval Academy are placed at the head of some particular department, and are members of the academic board. For some years past the professorship of modern languages and the professorship of drawing have been filled by persons from private life; yet they have been full professors, and at the head of their respective departments, and, like the professors of mathematics, they have been members of the academic board. They have differed from the professors of mathematics in this: While the professors of mathematics have held rank in the Navy, the professors of drawing and modern languages have not. Appropriations have been made annually to pay these two last-named professors at the rate of $2,500 each. The bill in question is to place them upon an equal footing with the professors of mathematics as regards rank and pay. The passage of the bill is recommended by the present superintendent of the Naval Academy and by the entire academic board and by the following former superintendents of the Academy: Admiral Porter, Rear-Admiral Worden, and was recommended by the present superintendent of the Academy used this language in their report:

"The board recommend that the heads of

Mr. BREWER. This bill is recommended by the unanimous voice and wish of the committee, by the Secretary of the Navy, and by the superintendent of the Naval Academy, as stated in the report. I ask, therefore, that the amendment reported by the committee be agreed to, and that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How many professors of modern languages are here at Annapolis?

Mr. BREWER. Only one is provided for in this bill; the other proessorship is that of drawing. Each of these professors is at the head of a department.

Mr. BEALE. What is the present pay of a professor of mathematics, and what increase does this bill provide?

Mr. BREWER. For the first five years of service there will be a decrease of pay. These two professors are now getting $2,500 a year each; but under this bill they will receive for the first five years only $2,400 a year; after that there will be an increase based upon length of service.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside, to be favorably reported to the House.

MACHINISTS IN THE NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 5628) relating to machinists in the Navy. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all men now serving in the Navy who may be discharged as machinists, with continuous-service certificates entitling them to honorable discharge, and those discharged in the said rating with such certificates since the 20th day of November, 1879, shall receive one-third of one year's pay as a machinist for each good-conduct badge they have received, or may receive, not exceeding three in number under the said certificates, the said gratuity to be received in lieu of re-enlistiment as a machinist under such certificate, and to be in full and in lieu of all claims against the United States in connection therewith, for extra pay for re-enlisting, or for continuous service, or for enlistment as a petty-officer; and the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GOODE. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3821) providing for the permanence of machinists in the Navy after certain re-enlistments, beg leave to report:

That they have had the same under consideration, and recommend the adoption of the accompanying substitute. The committee call attention to the letter of the Secretary of the Navy as embodying their views upon the subject-matter referred to in said bill:

"Navy Department"

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, "Washington, February 19, 1880.

"SR: I have examined bill H. R. No. 3821, presented by you to the Department for its views thereon, providing for the permanence of machinists in the United States Navy after certain enlistments.

"The enlistment of machinists to do the duty of assistant engineers was determined on ten or twelve years ago. There was no statute establishing such a rate in the Navy or fixing the pay thereof. Under authority given the President by law to fix the pay of petty-officers and seamen in the Navy, he fixed the pay of machinists at $75 a month.

"The system of enlisting machinists for the purpose above stated was rather an experimental one, and in its operation does not appear to have given satisfaction. The engineers in charge of machinery on board vessels in commission and where machinists have been placed in the responsible position of standing on engine-room watch have generally condemned the system, and many of the injuries to engines, boilers, and their dependencies have been attributed and traced to the inefficiency, inexperience, and want of knowledge on the part of the machinists. The heads of the Bureau of Steam Engineering have all reported against the system.

tem.

"The duty which has been assigned to machinists can be carried on more efficiently by responsible and educated engineer officers of the Navy, and it is better for the service that our cadet engineers and assistant engineers should discharge this duty altogether. They can then be held directly responsible for any disasters which may occur or any injuries which may be sustained in the steam department, and not be able to shift the responsibility to machinists under them, as may now be the care.

which may occur or any injuries which may be sustained in the steam department, and not be able to shift the responsibility to machinists under them, as may now be the case.

"A class of cadet-engineers is annually graduated from the Academy and sent at once to sea for service in the engine-room of vessels, and, after a two years' cruise, are appointed assistant engineers. From this source, and the occasional appointment of qualified candidates from civil life, the Navy will secure all the engineer officers required for the service. There will be no actual necessity for machinists, as was the case, to some extent, when the system of enlisting them was introduced. Such subordinate assistance as may be needed in the engineer's department of vessels and stations can be performed by first-class firemen, and thus save $522 a year for each machinist that is in the service at the present time. The pay of a machinist is $900 a year, and that of a first-class fireman, $378.

"On the 20th of November last an order was given to suspend the enlistment or re-enlistment of machinists, and, by reason of the expiration of the terms of enlistment of those now in the service, this class of employés will, at no very distant day, be removed from the Navy.

"In view of all the facts in the case and the unsatisfactory experience with the system of enlisting and employing machinists, I cannot recommend the passage of this bill, which proposes to ingraft upon the Navy a permanent corps of this class. "There are among the machinists in the service many good and faithful men, who have performed their duties with zeal and with all the ability and educational advantages they possessed. It would, therefore, seem to be a harsh measure to throw them out of employment without some substantial recognition of their past services, and I would therefore recommend suitable legislation to provide such recognition.

"Those who have received three honorable discharges and three good-conduct badges, having served three consecutive enlistments, might r sent to you.

"Very respectfully,

"R. W. THOMPSON, "Secretary of the Navy.

"Hon. JOHN GOODE,
"Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives."

Mr. GOODE. I will state to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that the bill as originally introduced provided for a permanent establishment of machinists in the Navy, but inasmuch as the law provides for cadet engineers and experience has shown there is no necessity both for enrineers and machinists in the engine-room, the head of the Bureau of Steam Engineering and the Secretary of the Navy have agreed in the opinion that for the future these machinists ought to be dispensed with. But inasmuch as when these machinists enlisted the prospect was held out to them for good behavior they would be entitled to re-enlistment the Department thought it a hardship (and in that the committee agreed) to send them adrift without making some provision for them, and the object of this bill is to bestow on them this small gratuity.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How many of them are there?

Mr. GOODE. One hundred and six only.
Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. What is the amount to be taken by this bill?

Mr. GOODE. The amount will be from fifty to sixty thousand dol-

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire whether under the bill referred to all further employment of civilian or enlisted machinists is to be prohibited?

Mr. GOODE. They are dispensed with by order of the Navy Department issued on the 20th of last November, stating that from and after that date no further enlistment of machinists is to be had, for the reason that the law already provides for cadet engineers, and experience has shown there is no necessity for both engineers and experience has shown there is no necessity for both engineers and machinists in the engine-room, as they are really in each other's way. The Department felt called upon to dispense in the future with these machinists, in the interest of economy. You will see by the report there is a considerable saving to the Government by this legislation. We would save in each case $522 a year. But we thought it a hard case, inamuch as these men had enlisted with the prospect of re-enlisted with the prosp listment on good behavior, they should be turned adrift without some small gratuity like this.

Mr. BREWER. I wish to ask my colleague on the committee a question, and it is this: whether the substitute reported to the House does not meet with the full approbation of the Navy Department?

Mr. GOODE. The bill was prepared there. I sent the original draught to the Navy Department, and the Secretary, for reasons given in his letter, said he could not recommend that bill, but in lieu of it prepared and recommended the passage of the bill which is now before the House.

before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but it may be all right that all employment in the Navy should come through one channel, the cadets and the educated boys of the Navy. I thought in the ordinary business of machinists it might possibly be advantageous for the Government to secure the services of practical, scientific, and skillful machinists, and I am not myself in favor of discharging these old machinists with a little extra pay and sending them adriftmen who have spent their lives in the faithful discharge of their duty to the Government. to the Government.

Mr. BREWER. They are only to be discharged as their terms of enlistment expire.

Mr. CONGER. They enlisted and entered the service of the United States just as much as an officer did with the understanding if they could maintain their position as good machinists they should hold it so long as they were capable of serving. They are, under this law, to be dismissed from the service in which they have labored long in under to make your for young advected boys who come through the order to make way for young educated boys who come through the regular channels.

Now, I desire to say that within the last few days my idea of these close corporations, the Naval Academy at Annapolis and the Military Academy at West Point, has changed somewhat materially from what it heretofore has been. I have begun to think that it is barely possible some of the remarks of my democratic friends heretofore made sible some of the remarks of my democratic friends heretofore made may turn out to be true.

Mr. RICHMOND. Good. [Laughter.]
Mr. CONGER. Yes; it may seem somewhat incredible. [Laughter.]
It may be true that we are educating a class of men in this country at the expense of the Government, who feel themselves so much above Senators and so much above Representatives in this House, that they consider it unworthy of them to associate with their fellows who may differ from them in color or religion or previous condition of servitude. [Laughter.] I make these remarks now because this system of letting in a few favored ones under a system of education in the United States who shall hold all the offices and all the places of employment in the Navy or in the Army, under civil service places of employment in the Navy or in the Army, under civil service rules, seems or begins to seem to me as perhaps not the best way after all.

And this is striking at the right of all citizen machinists and citizen mechanics to be employed in the service of the country for these purposes in the Navy. I do not want to say much about this at present or enlarge upon it now so much as to prevent me from taking back what I have referred to in regard to the management of another institution. If the facts are developed to the country as to the ability of the Government to control unruly educated gentlemen at West Point, if they are able to control them, perhaps we can manage machinists in the Navy. I will wait the result.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say but a word upon this matter. The object, I think, of the Secretary of the Navy in discharging these men was for the purpose of causing these gentlemen engineers, educated at the public expense, to take off their kid gloves and soil their fingers by doing a little honest work. The committee did not believe that it was proper that the Government committee did not believe that it was proper that the Government should continue longer to pay machinists for doing the work of these gentlemen who would thus be required to do nothing but hang around and superintend. Such is not the purpose of the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to call attention to one fact which seems to have escaped the observation of gentlemen, and that is that this bill does not compel the Secretary of the Navy to dispense with the services of any of the machinists employed from civil life. He can employ them if he sees fit or if it be necessary; but if he, in the exercise of his duties as Secretary of the Navy, thinks and feels it proper in the interest of economy and good management of his Department to discharge machinists taken from civil life, he has the right to do so. That is a regulation already existing. But there is not one single word contained in this bill or in the substitute of the Committee on Naval Affairs that compels the Secretary of the Navy to discharge any Naval Affairs that compels the Secretary of the Navy to discharge any man now employed from civil life as a machinist or to prevent him from employing them hereafter if necessary. It only recompenses these people who are discharged from the Navy and who were entitled by good behavior to re-enlistment. Not being re-enlisted, this simply allows them some compensation for the disappointment.

Mr. GOODE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. I wish to know how many of these machinists have these

Mr. GOODE. There are different kinds of badges.
Mr. SAMFORD. I mean these continuous-service badges referred.

Mr. GOODE. There are one hundred and six, I think, of them. Mr. SAMFORD. What peculiar privileges do these badges confer upon them?

Mr. GOODE. The continuous-service badge is equivalent to a promise on the part of the Government that the holder shall be entitled to re-enlistment.
Mr. SAMFORD. Is that the law?

Mr. GOODE. No; that is a matter of regulation of the Department.

Mr. SAMFORD. The law provides for the cadet engineers?

Mr. GOODE. Yes, sir.
Mr. SAMFORD. But it does not provide, as I understand you, for the enlistment of the machinists from civil life?

Mr. GOODE. No; that is a matter of regulation.

Mr. SAMFORD. Now, I would like to ask whether or not these machinists employed from civil life have not been paid from the time of their enlistment?

Mr. GOODE. They have been, but the idea was held out to them that they would have the right to re-enlist under these good-conduct badges but the Deposit was been that they would have the right to re-enlist under these good-conduct badges, but the Department revoked that regulation, and these men-are thrown ont

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to state to my friend from Alabama a fact that probably some other gentlemen of the committee may not be aware of, that there is no law or statutory enactment that fixes the pay of seamen, masters, sailors, and ordinary seamen, &c. All of that is a matter of regulation under the law by the Secretary of the Navy himself. He goes along from time to time a various interior into these mathimself. He goes along from time to time examining into these mat ters and fixing the pay of landsmen, seamen, ordinary seamen, sailors, yeomen, &c. Now under the regulations of the Secretary of the Navy, after the introduction of steam into the Navy, and in this case subsequent to the war, the Secretary of the Navy made a regulation providing for the employment and pay of these machinists in the subsequent to the war, the Secretary of the Navy made a regulation providing for the employment and pay of these machinists in the Navy.

Mr. SAMFORD. Under the law?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir, under the law; because the law authorizes the regulation of the pay, and by the President, I think. Now, the regulations provided, in the employment of these machinists, that they should have so much pay for the first three years. Then if the service was satisfactorily performed the party was entitled to what is called a good-conduct badge, and upon re-enlistment that badge entitled him to so much additional pay.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then they have received that additional pay for the badge, have they not?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. These gentlemen, or a part of them, for I do not agree with the gentleman from Virginia as to the number.

Mr. SAMFORD. It takes three years to get a badge.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand when the machinist has received his badge at the end of the three years he may be re-enlisted at a higher rate of pay?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMFORD. Now, my question is if that be the case, is it not true that these parties who have been re-enlisted have been already recompensed for the possession of that badge?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No, sir; because it is a part of the compensation promised him—that having served three years he shall be entitled to promotion, as it were, and to additional pay. Now, how-ever, in the interest of the service and under the operation of this order from the Secretary of the Navy, by which a large part of these men are dismissed from the service, they lose what they were entitled to under the good-conduct badge. In addition to that I wish to say that there will be a much larger saving than that proposed to be paid to these parties under this bill.

There will be a saving in the expense in the employment of these machinists from civil life. It is in the interest of economy that the Secretary of the Navy discharges these machinists because there are now officers in the Navy to perform those duties, the cadet engineers. We find one hundred and six machinists upon the one hand, and there are cadet engineers who are commissioned officers provided by law and who receive salaries under the law, which is fixed. These cadet engineers we cannot dismiss because they are fixed officers under the law. But these machinists exist only by regulation of the Department, and we can discharge them. Therefore the keeping of that body of men in pay is an unnecessary tax upon the people while there are officers already provided to perform the duty.

Mr. SAMFORD. If the gentleman from Tennessee will pardon me
I understand him to state when the machinist serves three years he is entitled to one of these good-service badges.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMFORD. And he is entitled to be re-enlisted at a higher rate of pay?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMFORD. And at the end of three more years entitled to another badge

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes.

Mr. SAMFORD. Now your bill provides that whoever is in possession of three of these badges shall have a full year's pay?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes.

Mr. SAMFORD. Notwithstanding he has had the benefit of the badges that he has won heretofore in being allowed to re-enlist at a higher rate—he gets it in addition to that. Now, here is a man who has been in the Navy perhaps three years, and has but one of these You give him no gratuity; you give him nothing; and yet he enlisted on the same implied agreement with the Government.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The spirit of this bill is that of the ordinary equities of life. That is to say, if I employ a man and ask him to abandon his home, to abandon his surroundings or ordinary pursuits, and enter into my employment, holding out the promise to him that I will keep him in my service for such and such pay for such a length of time, and he comes in good faith and performs all the conditions on his part, but I find it to my interest to discharge him sooner, the equities in the ordinary relations of life require that I should give him some compensation.

Mr. SAMFORD. Does not that apply in the case of an engineer who has served but three years and has but one badge? I am asking for information.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think I understand the gentleman now The gentleman will find that under the practical operation of the order of the Secretary of the Navy, referred to, these men who are under enlistment now may be retained, I do not know how long.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand that; but I say a man who has been there but three years and has but one of these badges is entitled to be re-enlisted, as well as the man with three. I ask the question why do you not compensate that man as well as the others? I am not in favor of the bill, I am not in favor of granting gratuities; but the logic is the same for the man who enlisted and served but three years, and has but one badge, as for the man who has three badges.

Mr. CONGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the re-enlistment of machinists in the Navy.

Mr. MORSE. I think there can be no objection to that.
Mr. BREWER. I think there is objection to it. What is the use of passing the bill if you accept that amendment? It takes away the whole force of your bill.
Mr. MORSE. It simply provides that a man may re-enlist if he wants to.

Mr. BREWER. Let the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GOODE. I see no objection to that amendment. I am not authorized by the committee to accept it but it seems to me that this being a matter of regulation in the Department altogether, there can be no objection to incorporating that provise in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the amendment is to prevent the Navy Department from assuming that this bill sanctions the discharge of all machinists from the Navy because provision is made for those who are discharged.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan this question: Whether this bill in his estimation prevents the re-eplistment of machinists in the Navy if the Secretary shall so conclude

Mr. CONGER. I understand the regulations prevent that; and this bill providing for those who are dismissed may be presumed to sanction those regulations, which I think are very hard upon the

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I understand the bill as giving the right to re-enlist.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from Michigan if the amendment proposed is not inconsistent with the portion of the bill beginning at the tenth line?

The said gratuity to be received in lieu of re-enlistment as a machinist, under such certificate.

Mr. CONGER. If received at all it would of course be received in lieu of re-enlistment. But my amendment leaves it optional with the machinist himself to receive the gratuity or re-enlist.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I submit if the bill be adopted with the amendment, it amounts simply to a gratuity of one-third of a year's pay or two-thirds of a year's pay, or the pay of an entire year's service to the party accepting it. It is nothing more nor less than that.

Mr. CONGER. Not if he re-enlists.

Mr. BRIGGS. He cannot re-enlist unless the Secretary of the Navy wants him to re-enlist.

Mr. TALBOTT. And he does not get the gratuity if he re-enlists.
Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to understand what effect this will have on the revenue. What amount will this draw from the Treasury?
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Thirty thousand dollars; $300 each to one hundred and six men.

Mr. McMILLIN. While I am up, I desire further to ask my colleague from Tennessee why this bill is made retroactive. It provides for the payment of this gratuity to all who may have been discharged since the 20th November, 1879. Why not make it operate from the date of the passage of the bill, or some day in the future?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to trespass upon the courtesy of the Committee of the Whole; but prior to anupon the courtesy of the Committee of the Whole; but prior to answering the question of my colleague from Tennessee I desire to answer my friend from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Chairman, interrupting my friend from Tennessee, I will say that a more careful reading of the bill satisfies me that my construction was erroneous. I see that the gratuity is extended to the machinist who holds only one badge, as well as to the one who holds three. And as it seems that under the law they are entitled to re-enlistment, it may be cheaper to get rid of them in this entitled to re-enlistment, it may be cheaper to get rid of them in this way. And in that view, it may be advisable to pass it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Then I will say nothing about that. I will now answer my colleague [Mr. McMillin] and other gentlemen, who assume that under this bill $30,000 must be paid out of the Treasury. Let us look at the other side of the account. Some gentlemen here seem to be disposed to hold these machinists in the Navy; not to let them me out at all. Now they will find that to keen these men in the them go out at all. Now, they will find that to keep these men in the Navy will require a tax upon the Treasury of between $100,000 and $150,000 per annum. And in order to save $150,000 per annum the Committee on Naval Affairs have thought it best and equitable to try and get rid of this continuous annual charge by paying this

I do not understand very well the amendment of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER;] but giving it a liberal construction, if one of these machinists re-enlists he will not then be entitled to demand or receive from the Treasury the amount provided for in this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. If you propose to get rid of him, why leave him with the right to re-enlist? Mr. WHITTHORNE. That proposition comes from another gentleman, not from me.

tleman, not from me.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is inconsistent with this bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Now, in regard to the other question, why we should give this bonus to any of these men who have been discharged; why make this bill retroactive? Members on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and other gentlemen who are familiar with the legislation of the country, know that these men Belonging to the military branches of the service set up the claim that they have a vested right, that they were in office, that they were in possession, and that the Secretary of the Navy had no right at all to discharge them; that under the terms of their enlistment, although it was at first for three years only, they had the right to re-enlist, of which right they that there the terms of their enistment, although it was at first for three years only, they had the right to re-enlist, of which right they could not be deprived by the order of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Whether they are wanted or not?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Whether they are wanted or not? Pardon me there again. I have not the order of Secretary Robeson, or who-ever was Secretary of the Navy at the time that these good-conduct badges, so called, were established. But under the law of the land the Secretary of the Navy has the right to fix the pay of the men of the Navy. Assuming that under the law he had that right, the Secretary of the Navy proceeded to provide for enlistments not only for three years, but also looking forward to continuous re-enlistment. Now these parties come up here and say that under the law and under the regulation of the Secretary of the Navy, and in good faith, they enlisted for three years; but at the time of their enlistment, when they cut loose from their families and their hearth-stones, they looked forward not only to three years' service, but to nine years' service, under the promise of re-enlistment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does my colleague understand the law to authorize one of these enlisted men to thrust his services upon the Government for nine years, whether the Government wants him or not?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Pardon me again. My colleague, if he knows me at all, ought to know that I have been trained in a school which teaches one not to believe in vested rights anywhere and in any man. When my colleague asks me that question he certainly does not know the gentleman whom he addresses as his colleague. I do not believe in anything of the kind.

But unfortunately neither his opinion nor mine controls this House or the world. Men come along and say that there are such things as vested rights, that they have equities and all that sort of thing. Now, with the view of disposing of all such things and of saving money to the Treasury, we have reported this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Which recognizes vested rights.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I would be glad to know, if the gentleman can inform me, when the law was passed assigning cadet engineers to this duty.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. When the gentleman speaks about "assigning them to this duty" he takes me back to the introduction of steam ing them to this duty" he takes me back to the introduction of steam into the Navy of the United States. The "engineer" officer was originally created for the purpose of performing this duty, and it has grown up since about the year 1847. Since the war there has been established the grade of cadet engineer, and he being the junior officer in the Engineer Corps is now made to perform the duty which originally was performed by the machinist.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Then, this regulation has been made since the law was passed assigning this duty to the cadet engineer, if I understand the gentleman?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It has grown up hand in hand with it. If my friend will allow me to give him an outside explanation, I will my friend will allow me to give him an outside explanation, I will say that, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] has intimated, there has been a disposition on the part of the cadet engineer to get some "other fellow" to do this duty for him; and the Secretary to get some "other fellow" to do this duty for him; and the Secretary of the Navy now proposes to have the cadet engineer do the work which has been done by the "other fellow."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I should be willing to vote for this bill if it was to pay men for labor which they had performed, and for which they had not received adequate compensation. But I am not willing to vote for it upon any theory that any set of men have a mortgage on this Government by which they can remain in its employment all the time, whether they are wanted or not, or whether there is any work for them to do or not. If that is the principle more which this work for them to do or not. If that is the principle upon which this bill is based, I shall not vote for it.

Mr. MORSE. This bill is based upon the same principle as the bill passed a few years ago retiring a certain number of lieutenants from the Army

Mr. McMILLIN. The principle of getting rid of them to make new

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Here are a hundred men whom the Government does not want. Their term of enlistment has expired or is about to expire. The Secretary of the Navy has ordered that they shall not be re-enlisted. If they have earned more money than they have received, let us pay them whatever is due. But if it is the theory that they have a legal right to be re-enlisted, and that we must buy them off in order not to put the Government in the position of repudiating a contract, I cannot vote for the bill on any such theory.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Several times during the last two or three years there has been a proposition before the Naval Committee to offer inducements to some of our naval officers to retire from the service. I think it would be an excellent plan to offer to pay certain officers of the Navy, if thereby we could induce them to retire.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would agree to retire all these officers at West Point.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I do not want to touch West Point ow. This bill does no more than say to these gentlemen, "You cannot be turned out; but the Government offers you so much money to go out." In my opinion, if we could get rid of the whole retired list of the Navy by paying the officers on that list something considerable, it would be economy for the Government; and I should not call it a gratuity.

The amendment of Mr. Conger was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NAVAL WHARF AT KEY WEST, FLORIDA.

The next bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was the bill (H. R. No. 1023) making an appropriation for the erection of a naval wharf at Key West, in the State of Florida.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the erection of a naval wharf at Key West, in the State of Florida.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 1023, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

The naval station at Key West is one of very great importance as a depot for coal and stores, and it affords a very convenient place for the repair of the machinery of vessels belonging to the Atlantic squadron.

The present wharf is an old wooden structure in a runous condition, requiring frequent repairs, and is wholly unfit for the necessities of the station. The Secretary of the Navy, in a communication to the Naval Committee in relation to the construction of a new wharf at this place, uses the following language:

"The Department regard this wharf as an improvement of the utmost importance and as absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the naval force employed at the West India station, and strongly recommend the passage of the bill, as the present old wharf cannot stand much longer."

The committee report said bill to the House, and unanimously recommend its passage.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move that this bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The report from the committee which has been read will itself be sufficient, I hope, to insure the favorable consideration of this bill. But as the appropriation asked for will, if granted, be expended in my district I beg the indulgence of the committee for

This bill provides for an appropriation of $30,000 for the erection of a naval wharf at Key West. The importance of this work, the absolute necessity for this appropriation, is clearly and distinctly shown by a letter of the Secretary of the Navy addressed to a member of the Naval Committee. Though extracts from that letter have been read, I will ask the Clerk to read the letter in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 2, 1880.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 2, 1880.

SIR: A copy of the bill presented by you in the House of Representatives making appropriation for the erection of a naval wharf at Key West, Florida, has been referred to the Department for an opinion as to the merits of the bill.

The Department respectfully begs leave to state that there is but one landing-wharf at the naval station at Key West. The station is an important one as a depot for coal, stores, and for repairs to the machinery of vessels attached to the North Atlantic squadron.

This wharf has been built many years, and is the only means of access to the public property except through private premises, and without it the Government would experience great inconvenience and loss.

The climate and the marine worms are very destructive to such wooden structures, and they require constant care and repairs.

The Department regards this wharf as an improvement of the utmost importance, and as absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the naval force employed on the West India station, and strongly recommends the passage of the bill, as the present old wharf cannot stand much longer.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. THOMPSON,

R. W. THOMPSON Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. R. H. M. DAVIDSON, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DAVIDSON. From this letter it will be seen that the Navy Department regards this work as one of vast importance and an absolute necessity. The statement of the Secretary is that the present wharf is an old one which cannot last much longer, and that unless a new wharf be erected the Government must experience great inconvenience and loss.

Key West is a place of far more importance than it is probably thought to be by many members of this House. I recollect the aston-ishment expressed to me by a member of the Forty-fifth Congress who visited that island in company with the Postmaster-General and other officials about two years since. He said that he expected to find there a village of a thousand or twelve hundred inhabitants, but to his great surprise he found, instead of a village, a thriving town or city of nearly fifteen thousand people.

The place is important as a naval station. As this letter states, it furnishes coal and stores for the vessels of the South Atlantic squadron. Its commerce is large for a place of its size, and is rapidly increasing. It is a fact which may surprise many gentlemen that the internal revenue annually collected there is about $300,000, an amount larger than that collected at all other Florida ports, together with Savannah and Mobile.

The Secretary of the Navy recommends strongly the passage of this bill. It is known that he is honest, judicious, and utterly opposed to the useless expenditure of the people's money; and it seems to me that no stronger evidence than his recommendation need be adduced to prove that the bill is meritorious.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, the State from which I come has had but little share of the paternal care which has been so liberally bestowed upon other sections of the country, other States of the Union, in the way of appropriations. I appeal therefore to gentlemen on this committee that this moderate request of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, this request so strongly indorsed by the head of the Navy Department, may be granted by this House so far as this House has power to grant it.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman give us some idea of the additional amount of internal revenue that would be derived from the building of this wharf?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I merely mentioned the amount of internal revenue paid to this Government by way of showing the importance of the place as a commercial point.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As this finishes the bills from the Naval Committee on the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I move the committee rise and report the bills, which have been laid aside favorably, to the House. The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. Carlisle) having resumed the chair, Mr. Stevenson reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills, some with and some without amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendments will first be disposed of.

NAVAL SOLICITOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the bill (H. R. No. 2788) to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, &c., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODE. I move to strike out in the title of the bill the word "detail," and in lieu thereof to insert "appoint," so as to make it

"detail," and in lieu thereof to insert "appoint," so as to make it correspond with the body of the bill.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOCKAGE OF PRIVATE VESSELS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was a bill (H. R. No. 4787) to provide for excepting from the provisions of section 3617 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the proceeds of dockage of private vessels at the several navy-yards of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was a bill (H. R. No. 1023) making an appropriation for the erection of a naval wharf at Key West, in the State

PROFESSORSHIPS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 231) to establish upon a permanent footing the professorships of modern languages and of drawing at the United States Naval Academy, is reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with an amendment; which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 8 and 9 strike out "professors at United States Military Academy," and in lieu thereof insert:

Professors of mathematics in the Navy: Provided, That in estimating their length of service credit shall be given them from the date of their appointments as head of the department of modern languages and of drawing, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BREWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

MACHINISTS IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 5628) relating to machinists in the Navy is reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with an amendment; which the Clerk

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the re-enlistment of machinists in the Navy.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, that bill to my mind is of so doubtful a character I do not think we should pass it to-night. If we pass it at all it should be when a quorum is present, and upon a call of the yeas and nays. If it is pressed to-night, I shall feel it to be my duty to raise the point there is no quorum present. I will agree, however, it shall be put in such shape that the yeas and nays may be called upon it when there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on concurring in the amendment.

the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think as it is to go over the amendment should go with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be impossible to order the main question upon the passage of the bill until the amendment has been

Mr. McMILLIN. If the bill is to go through at all, I do not think the amendment should go through with it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not object to the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendment makes the bill of such a character that it is simply a gratuity, and can be considered nothing else. Furthermore, if I may be indulged for one moment, the amendment in an indirect way gives according to the idea they have a vested. in an indirect way gives acceptance to the idea they have a vested right to thrust themselves on the Government again. I do not think we ought to allow any such idea to get ingrafted by amendment, innuendo, or otherwise. We have a right to say who shall serve us, and I think we should exercise that right.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The amendment is right.

Mr. BREWER. I sincerely hope the gentlemen will withdraw their objection to the passage of this bill. They have put themselves upon the record, and they can do no more if they have the yeas and nays to-morrow. It seems to me there is no opposition I know of except on the part of these two gentlemen, and as they have made their speeches against it, I hope they will now allow the bill to pass.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have a proposition to make, and it is this: that unanimous consent be given that this shall go over as unfinished business.

Mr. REED. Is it not possible by ordering the previous question on the bill as it stands now to carry it over until to-morrow morning when the question will be on concurring in the amendment, then ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. GOODE. I suggest we have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. REED. Will not the main question be ordered on the bill and amendment as it stands, and then take a vote first on the amendment and afterward on the bill as amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that can be done if gentlemen on the floor do not now make a question as to the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REED. Then I hope that some gentleman on the committee will move the previous question upon this bill, so that it will come up as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent the main question can be considered as ordered upon this bill. That will bring it up as unfinished business in the morning.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Very well; I hope the House will act upon that

There being no objection, the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs has three small bills on the House Calendar, and I hope that unanimous consent will be given to take them up now and consider them. I think there will be but little difficulty in getting through with them, as they will not be likely to lead to any discussion. I therefore move to proceed with the consideration of the business on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will require no motion, the session of to-night being ordered for the purpose of considering bills upon the Calendar from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DUNNELL. Would the action of the House calling this session sustain the consideration of private matters from that committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it would cover all business reported from the Naval Committee and on the several calendars

Mr. WHITTHORNE. These bills to which I refer are upon the Public Calendar—the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first business on the House Calendar from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PROFESSORS OF MATHEMATICS IN THE NAVY.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5047) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter no person shall be appointed a professor of mathematics in the Navy until he shall have passed a physical examination before a board of naval surgeons, and a professional examination before a board of professors of mathematics in the Navy, to be convened for that purpose by the Sccretary of the Navy, and received a favorable report from said boards; and no person shall be appointed a professor of mathematics in the Navy who is more than thirty-five years of age, unless he shall have been continuously engaged in scientific duty under the Navy Department or in the duty of instruction at the Naval Academy from and after attaining the age of thirty years until the date of his appointment.

The report was read as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The law provides for the appointment of not exceeding twelve professors of mathematics in the Navy. These professors shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by the Secretary of the Navy at the Naval Academy, the Naval Observatory, and on board of ships of war in instructing the midshipmen of the Navy or otherwise. These professors have relative rank in the Navy as follows: Three, that of captain; four, that of commander; five, that of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant. These professors are, or should be, appointed by reason of their scientific attainments. They are appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and generally taken from private life. Under present laws late yare not compelled to submit to any examination as to their fitness for such professorship, but may be appointed by the favoritism or caprice of the President without regard to fitness. These professors may be appointed under present laws late in life when they are unfitted for the position; and they can soon be retired with rank and pay. The bill as amended provides for a suitable board to examine applicants for appointment, so that neither political nor personal feelings will control their selection; but, on the contrary, they will be appointed for their special fitness for the position. The bill also fixes the age at which an individual becomes ineligible for appointment. The committee report said bill with amendments in form of a substitute, and recommend that such amendments be concurred in, and that when so amended the bill do pass. The bill as amended fully meets the views of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to know whether the Committee on

Mr. CONGER. I would like to know whether the Committee on Naval Affairs has undertaken to change the constitutional provision vesting the power of appointments of officers in the President in a little bill like this—a small, unpretentious, little bird? [Laughter.] The Constitution says the President shall appoint. The law is in the following words:

Professors of mathematics shall be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—
Section 1400 of the Revised Statutes, page 249.

Now, this Committee on Naval Affairs probably sit in a room where there is no copy of the Constitution of the United States. Of course I cannot presume that they would intentionally and with malice prepense violate the Constitution of the United States or ask this House to do so. Whether they relied so much upon the disposition to ignore the Constitution, of which we have heard so much lately in this House, or thought the question would not be raised at all, I am, of course, unable to say; but this committee has recommended to this House to pass a bill that some board shall appoint or prevent the appointment of professors of mathematics.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan that, as the Constitution recognizes the law of nations, it has jurisdiction only three marine leagues from the shore.

Mr. CONGER. Well, that is a question that must be settled by Now, notwithstanding the constitutional provision which says that these officers shall be appointed by the President, all the officers for the various departments, for the courts, and so on, the Committee on Naval Affairs have got so far beyond their soundings [laughter] that they ask this House to pass a law that the President hereafter shall they ask this House to pass a law that the President hereafter shall not appoint the professor of mathematics in the Navy until he shall receive a favorable report from a board of professors of mathematics in the Navy authorizing him to do this constitutional act.

Now, to most minds the mere statement of this proposition, the mere calling attention to this fact as it exists in this bill, would make most any sallor jibe ship and go back into port and give up the voyage.

I would like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs on this subject. Or perhaps it would be more proper for me to ask the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] who is the strict constructionist of the Constitution par excellence, (especially when it suits his views,) to explain why this bill from the Naval Committee should undertake to take away from our beloved President the power to appoint these officers. [Laughter.] What has he done lately [laughter] that he should induce this Committee on Naval Affairs to make this attack upon the prerogatives? [Laughter.] I call with an anxiety I have not words to express for an explanation. [Great laughter.] I would like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Naval [Great laughter.]

RANK OF ENGINEER OFFICERS IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5627) to amend section 1486 of the Revised Statutes, in order to preserve the meaning of the original law from which it was taken, with reference to the rank of engineer officers, graduates of the Naval Academy.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1486 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting after the word "service," in lines 5 and 6, the words: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to give to any officer of the staff corps precedence of, or a higher relative rank than that of, another staff officer in the same grade and corps and whose commission in such grade and corps antedates that of such officer."

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 1439, beg leave to report the same back with a substitute therefor. They recommend the adoption of the substitute.

The original bill has apparent merit, in that it seeks to re-enact what was omitted by the revisers of the statutes in their codification of the laws of the United States, yet it seems to the committee in their review of the statutes that the revisers substantially adopted the intent and purpose of the law-makers.

In fixing the grade and rank of officers of the Navy, the question of the relative rank of the staff presented some very sensitive questions, in part arising from the fact that staff officers, being appointed from civil life, could not, without authority of law, be credited with the period of pupilage, as in case of the line officers graduating at Annapolis; hence, with the purpose of securing harmony and doing justice in fixing questions of precedence, &c., as it seemed to the then legislators, it was provided by law that the staff officer should be credited or allowed "six years" as of service, when it was provided by law that engineer cadets should be appointed to the Naval Academy, and should have and receive the same period of instruction as cadet midshipmen; and an effort was made by act of June, 1873, to preserve the harmony intended by the act of March, 1871. This purpose is manifest. Yet, if the "word" is followed, the "spirit" thereof is killed, as is apparent; since, if the original bill is allowed to pass, it will, in the opinion of your committee, evade the true intent and meaning of the act of 1871 for the benefit of a few engineer officers appointed in 1866, and at the expense of a larger number of equally meritorious officers.

The operation of this bill upon the service, and the reasons which induce your committee to recommend the adoption and passage of the accompanying substitute, are to be found in the letter of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, herewith submitted

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, February 21, 1880.

"Sin: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter inclosing bill H. R. No. 1439, 'to amend section 1434 of the Revised Statutes, in order to preserve the meaning of the original law from which it was taken with reference to the rank of engineer officers graduates of the Naval Academy,' and making certain inquiries of me in connection therewith.

"The law regulating the precedence of staff officers in their several grades and corps, and with officers of the line of the Navy, is embraced in sections 1484, 1485, and 1486 of the Revised Statutes.

"By the statute of March 3, 1871, (section 1486, Revised Statutes,) it was provided that in estimating the length of service for the purpose of determining precedence, the several officers of the ine of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank who have been in the naval service six years longer than such staff officers have been in said service. In enacting this provision, which gave the benefit of six years of constructive service in determining the question of precedence among officers, it seems to have been the intention of Congress to equalize the rank of the officers of the staff with those of the line, by giving them a period which would be supposed to answer to the time which was expended by the line officers during the course of stady at the Naval Academy, four years, and in the grade of midshipman about two years, before reaching the grade of ensign, which is the relative rank of staff officers upon their original appointment from civil life to the lowest grades in the staff corps.

"Under the provisions of section 1485 of the Revised Statutes the precedence of staff officers, in their several grades and corps and with officers of the line of the same relative grade, is determined by length of service in the Navy.

"By the construction then given to the regulations of the Navy, six years was expended by the line officers in their education at the Naval Academy and service in the grade of midshipman before attaining the rank of ensign, and which period was counted as service in the Navy. It was undoubtedly deemed proper to fix this (six years) as the time which should be given to the staff officers in order to equalize their rank with that of the line officers of the same relative grade.

"At this time certain engineer officers were educated at the Naval Academy, and, in determining the question of rank, should such engineer officers graduates of the Naval Academy be allowed the constructive service, and, in addition to that, they would have what has been termed the fictions or constructive term of se ice allowed to the officers of the staff corps appointed from civil life. The act of March 3, 1873, (section 1848, Rev. Stats.,) therefore provided that engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy should take precedence with all other officers with whom they had relative rank according to actual length of service in the Navy.

"While, therefore, in the Revised Statutes, section 1484 precedes section 1486, it is in fact a limitation or exception to section 1486, and when thus read together it will be seen that all staff officers are entitled to the benefit of the six years' term of constructive service, with the exception of those engineer officers who graduate at the Naval Academy, and whose term of service, like that of line officers, begins at the commencement of the period of their education, and not, as with other staff officers, at the time when they actually enter upon their staff duties.

"This bill (H. R. No. 1439) proposes to allow to the engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy, who entered the academy prior to March 3, 1873, in addition to the time expended by them in their education at the academy, six years' constructive service in estimating their length of service in the Navy, for the purpose of establishing their precedence and relative rank with other officers of the same relative grade. The effect of the legislation proposed by this bill would be to give to about twenty-two engineer officers graduates of the Naval Academy six years' before such engineer officers were appointed. This would be an exception to the general rule prescribed by sections 1484 and 1486 of the Revised Statutes, which establishes precedence and rank in grades, and, in the opinion of the Department, no reason exists why this advantage should be accorded to those officers; and, as they already have precedence and rank in grades, and, in the opinion of the Department, no reason exists why this advantage should be accorded to those officers; and they are accorded to the same allowed to the same provision of sect of that year.

"Mr. Lawrence, therefore, who entered the Navy about four years after Mr. Leitch was appointed to the Naval Academy and fourteen months after he (Leitch) was commissioned assistant engineer, is a grade higher in relative rank than Mr.

Leitch.

"Thus it will be seen that officers of the engineer corps graduated at the Naval Academy, and whose commissions in their grades antedate those of officers subsequently appointed from civil life in the same grade and corps, are, in some instances, a grade lower in relative rank, as determined by the provisions of the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to. In consequence of this, claims have been made by assistant engineers appointed from civil life to be advanced in their grade over graduates of the Naval Academy whose commissions in that grade are of a prior date, and such claims are advocated by them on the ground that they are entitled by law to a higher relative rank than such graduates.

"It is not thought that it was the intention of Congress, by the acts of March 3, 1871, and March 3, 1873, to advance the staff officers in their grades and corps, but, on the contrary, that the object of those acts was to equalize the rank of line and staff officers.

"It is important and necessary to the harmony and efficiency of the service that the operation of the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to which is inconsistent with military usage should be corrected by legislation directed to that end.

I take the liberty, therefore, of offering as a substitute for bill H. R. No. 1439 the PURCHASE OF TOBACCO FOR THE NAVY.

The next bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs on the House Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4477) to regulate the mode of purchasing tobacco for the United States Navy, reported with amend-

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to cause all purchases of tobacco for the use of the Navy to be made in the city of Washington, and as follows:

Washington, and as follows:

In the months of February and March of each year the Secretary of the Navy shall cause proposals for bids for supplying the Navy with tobacco during the next year to be advertised thirty days in one daily newspaper in each of the cities of New York, Baltimore, Richmond, Lynchburgh, Petersburgh, Danville, Saint Louis, Louisville, and Chicago; said tobacco to be manufactured during the months of June, July, August, and September; the bids to be accompanied by samples of the tobacco which each bidder may propose to furnish; the samples to be carefully examined by three experts in tobacco appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and upon a comparison of the reports of these inspectors with the corresponding proposals the tobacco for the ensuing year shall be selected and purchased.

The appendments were read as follows:

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 6 of the bill strike out the word " and," after the word "February," and nsert the word "or."

In the fifteenth line, strike out all after the word "furnish" and insert the following:
"The lowest bid for furnishing tobacco equal to the United States Navy standard now in use shall be accepted."

Mr. CONGER. This bill affects the manufacturers of tobacco all over the United States, providing a particular point at which the to-bacco shall be brought and delivered, if I understand it correctly. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to permit this bill to be passed over.

Mr. BROWNE. The bill, as I understand, simply provides that the bids shall be opened and the contracts made at the city of Washington. It does not confine the bidding to any particular locality.

Mr. GOODE. That is all. The contracts are made here, but the proposals must be advertised.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Virginia explain the present

Mr. GOODE. Under the present system the Paymaster-General purchases without advertising, and he may select a single manufactory. The object of this bill is to open the field to fair competition, and give all manufacturers an equal chance. That is the whole object of the bill.

Mr. BROWNE. I speak of this because in the Committee on Military Affairs we have a similar question as to the purchase of tobacco for the use of the Army. I understand that now under the present The present system the purchases are nearly all made in the city of New York. The present system gives absolutely a monopoly to the tobacco manufacturers of the city of New York. The object of this bill, as I understand, is to provide that the bids shall be received and opened at Washington, where I believe there are no tobacco manufacturers; but that the advertisements shall be at all the prominent points at which tobacco is manufactured, so that there shall be absolute freedom which tobacco is maintactured, so that there shall be absolute freedom and fair competition among the tobacco manufacturers.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia why it is the bill requires purchases of tobacco that are manufactured in four particular months. I would like to know the reason

Mr. GOODE. That is for the purpose of securing tobacco of a good quality. In certain months the manufacture can be carried on more easily and a better article made than in certain other months. This is the suggestion of the tobacco manufacturers. They find as a matter of experience that the best tobacco is manufactured in those months.

Mr. BROWNE. This is a question which arose not long since in another committee, and we were not sufficiently advised on that point to know why purchases should be confined to tobacco manufactured in particular months.

Mr. GOODE. The tobacco manufacturers assigned as the reason for their suggestion that there is a difference in the quality according

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Suppose as good a quality of tobacco could be raised in Iowa or Illinois, or any State north of Virginia, but that it could not be cured or placed in the market before October, would not this bill entirely exclude the growers of such tobacco?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The bill speaks of tobacco "manufactured," not "cured," in the months named.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman from Iowa has referred to the growth; the bill refers to the manufacture.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. You cannot manufacture it before you grow and cure it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. You must cure it before you manufacture it.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask the gentleman who reports this bill, the gentleman from Virginia, if he will inform the House what amount of tobacco the Government buys yearly

Mr. GOODE. I have not the information the gentleman asks for. Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Would an amendment be in order, or a substitute prohibiting the use of tobacco in the Navy? I ask that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as these amendments reported by the committee are disposed of it will be in order to offer others.

The amendments reported by the committee were then agreed to.
Mr. GOODE. There is one other amendment which should be made, to correspond with the first amendment just adopted. The word "months" should be "month;" so that it will read:

In the month of February or March.

I offer that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. McMILLIN. I desire, with the consent of the gentleman re-porting the bill, to insert after the word "Louisville" the word "Nash-ville." The city of Nashville is in one of the principal tobacco regions of the country.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MORSE. I move to amend by inserting "Hartford, Connecti-

Mr. BROWNE. I think the bill is being loaded down by these suggestions. Suppose it be amended by adding the words "and at such other points as the Secretary of the Navy shall think best."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan to insert "Detroit."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to insert after the word "Detroit." "Colore."

Mr. THOMAS. I move to insert, after the word "Detroit," "Cairo," which is one of the largest tobacco markets in the country.

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. [Browne] will send up his amendment.
Mr. BROWNE. I am content if the amendments stop here, but I do not wish the bill to be loaded down.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend by adding "Rochester, New York." I offer this amendment in good faith, because some of the very heaviest tobacco manufacturers in the United States are located there-at least two of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move that the House now adjourn. The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to, upon Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] how many more bills there are which have been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. According to my recollection there are some ten or twelve bills on the Private Calendar. We have disposed of the bills on the other two calendars, and I now propose to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the Committee on Naval Affairs has been handsomely treated to-night, and it seems to me that this would be rather overdoing the thing.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] and to the House that I but express the heartfelt sentiments of my committee when I return their thanks to the House for the courtesy already shown the committee. It is only in the interest of the public service and of the claimants here that I make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. So far as the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs are concerned, they are grateful to the House and to the members who are here for the courtesy extended to them. here for the courtesy extended to them.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the resolution of the House setting apart the session of to-night for the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs be read. I do not think the resolution contemplates action on any bill on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.
The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That there be sessions of the House on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next, April 14 and 15, for the consideration of business reported, or to be reported, from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the order of the House makes no distinction between the business on the different calendars

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will state to gentlemen here that I will not ask them to proceed now to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, as they have treated my committee so generously and kindly last night and to-night. In view of the fact that before this session closes I may find it necessary to ask for another night session, I wish to show that we fully appreciate the kindness of the House, and I will myself make the motion that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and thirty-eight minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 16, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of February 27, 1880, a report of the Secretary of State, concerning the investigation of certain cases in which awards were made by the late United States and Mexican commission; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MORRILL. I know it is not, but I think the Senator from South Carolina should wait until the Senate is fuller before such a motion is offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EATON. I believe that we shall do a proper thing to adjourn until Monday. My friends know very well that I am usually in my seat, and do not often ask for adjournments. I know there is a great deal of committee work that is absolutely necessary to be done to-morrow. It will take several committees that I know of all day to-morrow to get up their work. Therefore I think the Senate ought to adjourn over.

Mr. MORRILL. When the Senator from Connecticut speaks, I know he speaks in behalf of the democratic party, and I withdraw my opposition to the motion.

Mr. EATON. I did not speak in behalf of any party. I spoke in behalf of a democratic Senator that is anxious to do the work of the session and get home; and I think we can do it better by adjourning over until Monday than by coming here to-morrow.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays

17; as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of Allen H. Crosby, Hamilton Lee Smith, George F. Wilson, Jesse Boynton, José Manuel Glas, H. Billini, H. J. Boardman, Richard N. Young, L. L. Brown, and others, praying for the incorporation of a company to be styled the Dominican and United States Navigation Company. The purpose of this association of business men and capitalists is to develop our trailerith Dominica from which government they have an important railerith Dominica from which government they have an important railerith. with Dominica, from which government they have an important rail-road concession connecting with the interior. I move that the peti-tion be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of E. A. Searles, J. P. Blackwell, and 198 other citizens, residing in the valley of the Savannah River, State of South Carolina, praying Congress to make an appropriation to improve the navigation of that river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of ex-soldiers of Indiana praying for the passage of what is known as the equalization bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GROOME. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Maryland, and ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States to procure an appropriation for the location and preparation of the Choptank and Delaware Ship-Canal line, and for the survey and location of the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tide-Water Canal line.

Whereas application is made to the Legislature at its present session to pass an act of incorporation for the construction of the Choptank and Delaware Ship-Canal; from Ferry Creek, on the Choptank, to Lewes, at the Delaware breakwater, connecting the water of the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, and opening a direct route to sea for vessels trading at the ports of Baltimore, District of Columbia, and along the coasts of the Chesapeake Bay, thereby shortening the distance from Baltimore to European ports, and New York and New England seaboard cities two hundred miles, and avoiding the dangerous and tedious route doubling Cape Charles; and Whereas this General Assembly approves of the construction and speedy opening of the Choptank and Delaware Ship-Canal as of paramount importance to the growing commerce of Baltimore, the coal trade of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, and the great agricultural sections of the Southwest, the West, and the Northwest, which find their market and natural outlet at Baltimore City; and Whereas the said canal would afford the cheapest and most effectual means of defending the cities of Washington, Baltimore, and Annapolis, on the south side, and Wilmington, Philadelphia, and New York, on the north side, in case of war, by enabling the naval forces of the United States freely and speedily to pass from bay to bay, and on interior lines to pass up the Atlantic coast for the defense of threatened points, and would also enable merchant shipping to retreat from one bay to the other in case of danger from a hostile fleet; and

Whereas the Federal Government is charged with the public defense, and it is its duty to adopt the most complete modes of rendering the capital of the United States and the great seaboard cities impregnable, and the interests heretofore mentioned are national, and the construction of said canal of international importance:

Now therefore.

tioned are national, and the construction of said canal of international importance: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Representatives and Senators from Maryland in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to urge upon the Congress of the United States to appropriate $30,000 for the location and preparation of the Choptank and Delaware Ship-Canal line as laid down in their charter, that is to say, starting from Frederick Creek, on the Choptank River, to Walnut Landing, on the Nanticoke, and via the Nanticoke and Broadkill Creek to Lewes, on the Delaware Bay; and to solicit an appropriation of $5,000 for the survey and location of the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tide-Water Canal, as laid down in the charter, starting from Beaver Dam Creek, on the eastern branch of the Potomac River, via Beaver Dam Creek, western branch of the Patuxent, Patuxent River, Lyon's Creek, and across to Herring Bay on the Chesapeake Bay.

And be it resolved, That the governor of Maryland be, and is hereby, requested without delay to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of the said Representatives and Senators from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and laid on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 347) for the relief of John B. Nix, find that it is a matter affecting wholly public lands, and have directed me to report it back and to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 795) to abrogate the power of the executive officers of the United States in allowing indemnity locations or scrip for confirmed, unsatisfied private land claims, under section 3 of the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, (United States Statutes at Large, volume 11, pages 294 and 295, chapter 81,) and to vest that power in the courts of the United States, to report the same back with a recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The committee have heard counsel interested in land claims, and received the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is rather in favor of passing a bill upon the subject; but our investigation and consideration of the matter has led us to the opinion that it is not desirable to make any change in the law at present upon that subject. We therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel B. Brightman, praying for an increase of pension from the date of his discharge from the service, have instructed me to report it back. The petition discloses that he was granted a pension in 1879; it does not appear whether by special or by general law. If the pension was granted to him under the general law, his application for arrears should be made to the Pension Office; if by special act, the committee are of opinion that arrears of pension under special acts should be provided for by a general law, and not in individual cases. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Vernon Henry, praying that a pension be granted to her, to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. She is the widow of a deceased naval officer, but does not come within the pension law.

The report was agreed to.

thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

dered to be printed.

Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1593) to authorize the Richmond and Southwestern Railway Company to build bridges across the Pamunky and Mattaponi Rivers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

No. 938) authorizing the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company to construct bridges across Young's Bay or River and Lewis and Clark's River, in the State of Oregon, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. WITHERS. In regard to the bill (S. No. 923) granting a pension to Brevet Major Morven M. Jones and the petition of said Jones accompanying the bill, I ask permission to withdraw the petition and accompanying the bill, I ask permission to withdraw the petition and papers from the files of the committee, at the request of the petitioner; in order they may be presented to the Pension Bureau, where application never has been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and leave will be granted to the petitioner to withdraw his papers.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1639) for the relief of Henry T. Johns; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GROOME asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1640) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Addie B. Bacon to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1641) for the relief of certain purchasers of the public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1642) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Key West, in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CANAL IMPROVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution, which was read: Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be requested to furnish the Senate with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the filling up of the old canal, the amount of ground that will be reclaimed thereby; also the probable cost of placing James Creek Canal in good sanitary condition.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the reference of that resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to modify the word "requested" and turn it into "directed" where the resolution says that the commissioners are "requested" to do this. It is a constant practice as exercising a right on the part of the Senate to demand that.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that modification.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

NEBRASKA BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. ALLISON. A few days ago I entered an objection to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Saun-DERS] asked unanimous consent to consider it. The Senators from that State are anxious to have the bill considered, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We must have the regular order, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Inasmuch as the objection is now withdrawn by Mr. SAUNDERS. Inasmuch as the objection is now withdrawn by the Senator from Iowa, I should be glad to have the Senate take the bill up. The amendments that have been proposed are acceptable, and therefore I presume there will be no question or debate upon the subject. It is a subject that I should like to have acted upon now. The bill was put over for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Iowa to examine some points. He has examined them and now with draws his objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the call for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No sir; there are matters on the Calendar that affect pensioners and other people which ought to be taken up in their order. I think this bill ought to take its regular place. It is a proposition to increase the already small area of the State of Nebraska by a handsome little corner, that can wait for a few days I think. It may be perfectly right; I am not questioning the merits.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The object of the bill is merely to straighten the boundary line of the State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to take up the bill for making an addition to the present City Hall in Washington.

Mr. WITHERS and others. The regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the regular order, and that can be taken up after we get through.

JESSE F. PHARES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar of General Orders, commencing at the point reached when last under

The bill (S. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I listened with some attention the other day to the interesting discussion of this man's case, and I shall vote against the indefinite postponement of the bill. I think his case falls within the spirit, and only that it is said the Pension Office decides otherthe spirit, and only that it is said the Pension Office decides otherwise I should say within the letter, of that provision of law which provides for paying a pension to anybody who volunteers for the time being to assist in an engagement, as I understand in substance this man did, and was put at the front, and in getting back to his command, although he was contracted with as a scout, was wounded. That comes, as it appears to me, within the spirit of the provision of law that was read by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood;] and it does not at all fall, as it appears to me, within the spirit of his engagement as a scout and the supposed enhanced price that he gets for the risks that he runs in that particular character. Take the case engagement as a scout and the supposed enhanced price that he gets for the risks that he runs in that particular character. Take the case of a teamster. If a teamster in an engagement gets shot, I am quite sure the practice was, when I used to be the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to give him a pension if he was drawing up ammunition and was hurt in that way; but if in the mere performance of his duty as a teamster on account of a rut he fell from his wagon and was your by a borree or whetever it might be the risks agon munition and was hurt in that way; but if in the mere performance of his duty as a teamster on account of a rut he fell from his wagon and was run over by a horse, or whatever it might be, then it was his civil employment, it was a civil accident, and it did not come within the provisions of the pension law.

Take the case of officers' servants who have been entitled to pensions although they are not enlisted men. They have an allowance, they hire themselves, and all that. I think there have been a great many cases in the earlier times, in 1867, 1868, 1869, and 1870, when I was connected with the Committee on Pensions, where an officer's servant being shot in attending him or wounded in doing his duty as that officer's servant, fell within the theory, as it was thought, perhaps erroneously, of the pension laws, and had a pension.

Because this particular man was not obliged by his contract to expose himself to the infinite peril of acting actually as a sentry or a vidette in the front of our lines at the place where this matter occurred, and being cut off by the forces of the enemy, in making a brave dash in getting back to our lines again was wounded, I confess I cannot see upon what principle of justice a distinction is made between him and an enlisted man who might properly have been sent out then and there on that very spot to have done the same duty.

Consequently I shall vote with satisfaction against the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I have only one word to say in reply. This man, being a non-enlisted man, although he may have received an injury from a gunshot wound, does not belong to a class which is pension-able under the existing law. The effect of granting a pension to this man will be accepted by the Committee on Pensions as an indication of the views of the Senate that it is right and proper to extend the benefits of the pension laws to a class of men who under existing law are not pensionable, and consequently that the remaining cases and cases of similar character which are now pending before the committee, of men belonging to the civil employés of the Government, will be reported favorably. There are several such cases on the Calendar and there are several others before the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite willing to accept the logic of my friend from Virginia. I am not in favor of this claim because it happens to be for this particular man; I never heard of his case until I saw it in this report; but I am in favor of providing a little consolation, sustenance, aid, to any man, whether he was enlisted or not enlisted, who was wounded or received an injury in performing a strictly military service.

tary service.

The fact that this man was generally performing the business of a scout does not prove that he was not on the occasion when he was wounded performing strictly military service. He was in the very position, as I remember the report, where very properly a regularly enlisted mounted vidette might have been and ought to have been, to know whether the enemy was approaching. The enemy, it seems, learning that this man was lying out to keep watch of them, ambuscaded him, or rather made a flank movement, as the saying is, got between him and his supports; a collision came on, and he dashed back and was shot. If that is not doing military service I confess I do not understand what is.

Mr. WITHERS. The facts of the case are not precisely as the Senator from Vermont understands them. This man had not been sent out for a special purpose as a vidette. He was employed generally as a scout, and in pursuance of his avocation, going around getting information, there is no doubt that he was intercepted on his return to the camp, not by an ambuscade, but simply on the approach of a to the camp, not by an ambuscade, but simply on the approach of a force of the confederates who desired to surprise the post, at which there was a force of Union soldiers. They threw out an advance there was a force of Union soldiers. They threw out an advance grard for the purpose of intercepting persons on the roads leading to this point in order to prevent information being conveyed. Among those intercepted was this scout, and upon being challenged and ordered to halt, instead of doing so he attempted to escape by dashing through the force which was opposing him. In doing so they fired upon and wounded him. The fact that he thus received his wound it are admitted fact, there is no question about that the three courses. upon and wounded him. The fact that he thus received his wound is an admitted fact; there is no question about that; but the cause of the adverse report from the Pension Committee was that they did not conceive that it was proper to select one or two cases from a class of cases embodying thousands, and give them the benefit of the pension laws and exclude all other persons of the same class from those benefits. The Pension Committee have no feeling whatever upon the subject. They are perfectly willing to accept the views of the Senate and to carry them out in their action hereafter. If their construction of the law is erroneous in the opinion of the Senate, they will conform their future action to what the Senate may decide to be the proper construction of these laws. I only wanted the Senate to vote understandingly with a full knowledge of the facts in the question.

tion.

Mr. VOORHEES. For myself, having been a member of the Pension Committee, I know that there is no subject more difficult than a case like this. The Pension Committee is confronted with a rule which is necessary and proper; that is, the rule of pensioning only those who were enlisted in the Army or Navy; and yet there are cases when something more than that ought to be done.

I have not advised myself carefully as to the facts in this case. I am under the impression, however, that it is one of that sort which in support of the view that I take of this matter I recall, and which I will state. During a season of great excitement and pressure upon the armies in the Southwest all the steamboats of the Ohio River were seized and impressed. Among the rest was one above on the Ohio seized and impressed. Among the rest was one above on the Ohio River, on which there was an engineer, with his son as his assistant. It was seized by military authority, came down the Ohio River, and was loaded at Cincinnati with supplies. The engineers were not allowed to go ashore for fear they might not come back. The vessel was taken under these circumstances down the Ohio River and up the Tennessee, close to the enemy's country. Meantime the son took sick, and the father stood at that engine, my impression is some five sick, and the lather stood at that engine, my impression is some five days and nights, without relief and without assistance except such as came to him by the laws of nature and exhaustion. When the vessel returned to Cincinnati he was carried ashore and died. His daughter came here and raised the question whether her father had not lost his life in the service of his country. I thought he had, and took that ground in the committee; yet I have no complaint to make of the committee in adhering to the rule that he was not an enlisted man, but I brought that unction before the Seneta and the killern man; but I brought that question before the Senate, and the children of that man now draw a pension, and rightfully and properly.

I think that it is proper for the Senate now and then to make exceptions in regard to persons who were thus situated, and who were not regularly enlisted in the military service, and I think at the same time it is proper for the Committee on Pensions to adhere to their rule and let the Senate make the exceptions. That can always be done, and I believe it is the safer course to pursue.

I think I shall vote in this case to give this man some support and subsistence, because he was injured in doing his duty and defending the country, as in the case of the engineer who lost his life, as much so as if he had charged in battle.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is a peculiar case and one in which there is great merit. I doubt whether a similar case has made its appearance before the Committee on Pensions. The facts are that this man Phares is completely incapable of doing anything and is dependent upon charity for a living, as I understand, in consequence of his wound.

Now, what did he do? He entered the service as a scont with the first appearance of General McClellan in West Virginia, and served there until he was shot in 1863. The Union and the confederate officers in this case both agree that he saved the Union forces that were at Beverly at the time. How did he do it? He was outside of the town when the confederates were approaching. They intended to surprise the Union forces. This man being outside and hearing of it attempted to get to the Union forces in the town, so as to give them notice. In doing so he passed the pickets of the confederates, and they demanded him to halt; but he proceeded, and as he did he and they demanded him to hait; but he proceeded, and as he did he was shot and, as I understand, shot badly, so much so that he could not sit at all upon his horse, but he lay down upon it, resting himself as best he could, and went into where the Federal forces were and notified them of the approach of the confederates, and thereby saved the Union forces, for the confederate forces were much larger and intended to surprise them. If this man has not done a service to his country, and one that few men would have done, I do not know who has. He was in a safe position; he could have remained at his home and nothing would have occurred to him; but he chose to take his life in his own hands, and pass the confederate forces to get to the Union forces as best he could and notify them of the coming of the confederates, which he did; and Colonel Latham, who has recently been confirmed by the Senate as supervisor of the who has recently been commend by the Senate as supervisor of the census in our State, certifies that but for that information he would have been surprised and perhaps his whole force captured.

What else? This man was in tolerably fair circumstances, as the report shows, and from the fact that he did give this notice to the Federal forces, and because of his action as a scout, his entire property was taken and destroyed by the confederates, and from being in a fair way of making a living he is now, as I said, living on the charity of his neighbors. I believe this is such a case that there is not another one like it before the committee, and probably will not be another. I agree with the chairman of the committee that we cannot be too careful, and I will aid him in that respect. I believe we have been entirely too liberal in granting pensions. As was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] the other day, we are paying more for our pension list now than all the rest of the world. All the rest of the world to-day are not paying as much in pensions as the United States is paying to its pensioners. I think we must call a halt somewhere; but certainly it ought not to be on this bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I inquire of the Senator from West Virginia

what this Government has money for, or what better purpose can it apply it to than to pay it to those who have made this Government apply it to than to pay it to those who have made this Government what it is? I confess there ought to be a proper economy; but this talk about the waste of public money upon such of our own citizens as have enabled this Government to exist, I do not sympathize with. Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I think I appreciate the condition in which the Committee on Pensions are placed here; but I am unable to see why they should hesitate about making an exception in regard to cases of this character, when they do make exceptions in other instances. The Committee on Pensions have in many instances recommended a pension much greater in amount in individual cases than the law permitted them to do. Why? Because there were particular circumstances in the case which called for and justified the committee in allowing a greater amount of pension than the law provided. On what principle can that be justified? Only on the principle. ple that the particular case should be made an exception, and ought not to be brought within the general rule. Where there were particularly brave or gallant services, or where the survivors of an officer were more completely dependent than in other cases, the committee has allowed a greater amount of pension than the law provided; and it was only because they reported the case and a special law was passed Congress that that additional amount was allowed.

What is the case here? Here are meritorious services, gallant services, performed by this man whose case is before the Senate; but it is claimed by the committee that he is not within any class of pensioners known to the law. They do not claim that the services are not such as to call for a pension; they do not deny that the services were meritorious and gallant, that they were military services strictly; but by reason of the fact that this man was not technically in the military services of the Arms the law of the committee of the Arms the law of the committee of the Arms the law of the A itary service of the Army the law does not authorize them to grant a pension. Can we not pass a special law for this case? Cannot the committee recognize the fact that here are military services which have been performed, gallant and brave, and that this man has suffered wounds and been so disabled that he cannot sustain his family, and that by the result of the very approach of the confederate army at this time property to a large amount, belonging to him, was destroyed, and he was reduced to poverty? Cannot the committee recognize that as a special case in which they can say that this man ought to be allowed a pension?

I am unable to see the distinction in principle between allowing an officer a greater amount of pension than he is entitled to by the general law, although he was connected with the Army of the United States, and making a special law granting a pension to a man who did perform military service although not technically in the Army, and therefore not within the letter of the pension law. We can bring this case within the pension law by passing the bill proposed here and refusing to indefinitely postpone it. This case is one which calls for the exercise of this action on the part of the Senate, and I think we should not hesitate to pass the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I have but a few words more to say in addition to what I said when this matter was under consideration the other day; and when I have said them, I shall leave the matter to the Senate.

My belief is strong, my opinion is clear that this man is within the law. Let me read now the third subdivision of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes. That section defines what classes of persons shall be entitled to pensions. The third paragraph itself includes three classes. I shall only read the operative words that I think apply to Any person, not an enlisted soldier in the Army * * * who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the is entitled to a pension. How does that apply to this man? "Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army,"—he was not an enlisted soldier in the Army—"who volunteered?"—what is meant by that? What is meant by the term "volunteered?" A man goes of his own A man goes of his own motion, willingly, not drafted, not compelled to go. This man undoubtedly went of his own motion. He was not drafted; he was not compelled to go. He went of his own free will. "For the time being." That means temporarily. An enlisted man has agreed to serve for a definite time; he cannot leave before the expiration of that time; but that is not required in this class of cases. A man who "volunteers for the time being" may have a pension. He may terminate the service when he pleases, and so might this man.

"Who volunteered for the time being" to do what? "To serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States." any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States." There is no question that he was with a regularly organized military force of the United States; and the only inquiry is what is meant by the words "to serve." He was a non-enlisted man, volunteered for the time being to do something with a regularly organized military force; but what he volunteered to do to entitle him to a pension must be "to serve" with them. What is meant by that phrase? It was argued some days ago that it meant to perform military duty, and it seemed to be considered by some that it meant the carrying of a gun or a sword, and that nothing else than that was service. I had occasion the other day to show that that ground was not tenable by referring to another section of the statute, showing that teamsters.

referring to another section of the statute, showing that teamsters, wagoners, artificers, hospital stewards, and farriers, if enlisted men, are held to be serving with a regularly enlisted force.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Can this man be said to have volunteered when he was acting under a contract?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think so.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. His compensation was fixed by contract?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The compensation that is paid to soldier is not fixed by contract, but is fixed by law. I want to call he stention of the Senator to that distinction.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well. I say, Mr. President, that every volunteer soldier of the United States was serving under contract. The law being itself an offer of the Government to pay certain sums of money and give certain privileges for certain services, became a contract with a man who consented to serve and render the service upon the terms proposed to him; and the amount of money he received for his services was paid to him under a contract just as much as in the case of a special contract made with a man occupying the position this man did.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. When the soldier agreed to serve the law fixed his compensation.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. When this man entered into the contract the law did not fix his compensation, but the compensation was fixed by the terms of the contract.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certainly it was.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senate will recognize the distinction between the two cases.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It strikes me that it is a distinction without a

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think not. Mr. KIRKWOOD. The volunteer soldier agreed that he would serve the United States for three years for, say $16 a month; he entered into a contract with the United States to do that thing. In good faith he could not be required to take any less than that during the time for which he contracted to serve at that. All the services rendered in our Army and in our Navy is by a contract between the Government and the soldier or the sailor to render certain service for covernment and the soldier of the sailor to render certain service was the meaning of the words "to serve." He volunteered for the time being to do something. Was the thing that he volunteered to do a voluntary agreement "to serve" within the meaning of the law?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He agreed to do something. He did not, I think, in the terms of the act, volunteer to do anything. He agreed according to the terms of his contract to do something.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. He agreed voluntarily.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly he agreed voluntarily. I presume he did, at least.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The distinction between doing a thing voluntarily and agreeing to do it I cannot understand.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I can see a very clear distinction.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator would allow me to ask another question on that point before he leaves it. He is speaking about the contract made by the soldier and by the scout. He alludes to the fact that the soldier agrees to perform certain service for the Government for a stipulated consideration during a specified period of time. If the soldier violates that contract before the expiration of his period of service he is liable to be arrested as a deserter and shot at a drumhead court-martial. The scout, having a vastly increased compensation, can terminate his contract any time he sees fit without incurring any penalty whatever. He can ride off on horseback in the midst of an engagement. He can terminate his contract whenever he pleases. Now, does the Senator from Iowa pretend to say that he sees no distinction between the contract made by a private soldier with the Government and that made by a scout with the military commander of a district?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Oh. no: the Senator must not understand me

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Oh, no; the Senator must not understand me in that way at all. I say there is a wide distinction between them, but they are both contracts notwithstanding. We may make different contracts, and yet both are contracts.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend from Iowa allow me to answer the Senator from Kansas?

me to answer the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am afraid my whole speech will get so mixed up that nobody will understand it unless I can get it somewhat consecutively together.

Now, it is shown clearly that the service of a teamster, that the service of a farrier, that the service of a farrier, that the service as entitles the man, if an enlisted man, to a pension for wounds or disability.

Mr. INGALLS. There is exactly the distinction, "if he is an enlisted man."

listed man.'

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Exactly so; but I am speaking of what is meant by the words "to serve." If to shoe horses is to serve, why is not scouting to serve as well? If to drive a wagon is to serve, why is not scouting service as well?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator entirely avoids the operative words

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator entirely avoids the operative words in the statute.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What are they?

Mr. INGALLS. "If an enlisted man." That is what fixes the question of what may be called pensionability under existing statutes. These men to whom the Senator refers in that section from which he has quoted are enlisted men, and who therefore by that fact alone are entitled to pensions, not in consequence of the services fact alone are entitled to pensions, not in consequence of the services they rendered, but in consequence of the fact that they were enlisted. Mr. KIRKWOOD. Enlisted as wagoners, enlisted as farriers, enlisted as hospital stewards, all of which tends to show that something else besides carrying a musket is service within the meaning of the law. Mr. INGALLS. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well, then; this man "volunteered for the time being to serve," if the service of a scout is as much service in the military sense as the service of a wagoner or a teamster.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator will pardon one more interruption. He must be aware that the word "volunteer" in that connection has a specific definite, well-ascertained, and, if I may say so nection has a specific, definite, well-ascertained, and, if I may say so, nection has a specific, definite, well-ascertained, and, if I may say so, a technical meaning.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is that?

Mr. INGALLS. It is a man who volunteers to render military service in opposition to a man who is in the regular service; as, for instance, in the case of a sudden foray of Indians, in the case of a sudden incursion of rebel forces, there is a demand made for service by volunteers for a specific purpose; and that is the definition that should be employed in connection with that portion of the section of the statute to which the Senator has referred. It ought not to be said that one volunteering means a man who performs voluntary service. That is trifling with terms. The word "volunteer" when taken in connection with military service has a distinct and well-ascertained and defined significance. It will not do to play with terms and make puns by saying that it has reference to the fact of its being voluntary.

and defined significance. It will not do to play with terms and make puns by saying that it has reference to the fact of its being voluntary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is what I supposed "volunteer" meant.

"Volunteer" service is service rendered voluntarily, willingly, of the man's own motion, not because he is compelled to do it; and for that reason every soldier that we sent into the war, except those in the regular Army, was called a volunteer during the war. Those men went there of their own will; they volunteered to go. The difference between them and this man was that they volunteered to go for a definite time, and this man volunteered to go temporarily. That is the difference between them. They both went of their own will, they both went of their own accord. The drafted man was not a volunteer,

Mr. INGALLS. That is a pun.
Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is the Senator's opinion upon the matter, but he is liable to err about that as well as about other things.

I have endeavored to show, Mr. President, that this man not being an enlisted soldier did volunteer for the time being to serve with a an enisted soldier dad volunteer for the time being to serve with a regularly organized military force, and that the duty he performed was such as comes within the meaning of "service" as applied to military men. But it was argued, I argued or tried to argue that even if it were not so, we should still pension this man because he had rendered such service to the country as required us in good faith had rendered such service to the country as required us in good faith and decency to give him a pension.

What have we done, Mr. President? At the last session of Congress we passed a bill giving to General Shields's widow and children $100 a month during her life-time and the lives of her children until they reached a certain age. Why? Did they come within the terms of the pension law, I should be glad to know? No man claimed that they came within the terms of the pension law. No man on this floor a year ago, who voted that pension to them, claimed that they came within the terms of the pension law.

The very same bill that gave that pension to his widow and children gave to the widow of Colonel Fletcher Webster a pension to which she was not entitled under the law. Why? For no other reason that tever I heard, for no other reason that I ever imagined than that she was the widow of the son of Daniel Webster. That was all, nothing more and nothing less than that. And yet here is a man living ing more and nothing less than that. And yet here is a man living in a State that went into rebellion, possessed of a comfortable competence when the rebellion broke out, who did not go with his State as so many men unfortunately did, and remained true to the Union

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that I think this is a meritorious case, and I will with great pleasure vote for the bill, but I do not think that this man Phares is within the statute as the Senator is trying to prove.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am so happy to get the Senator's vote on the right side that I am indifferent as to the reasons that constrain him to give that vote.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I never had any intention of voting otherwise; but I think that the Senator from Iowa is wasting his own time in attempting to prove that this case is within the statute.

own time in attempting to prove that this case is within the statute. I think it is an exceptional case, and that being exceptional and being a meritorious case Congress ought to enact this bill for his benefit.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am very glad to hear it; and with a very few words more I will leave the matter, Mr. President.

We have been doing continuously things not nearly as proper to be done as what we are asked to do in the passage of this bill. This man has lost all his property just because he remained a Union man when his State went into rebellion. He is crippled for life; he is unable to earn anything to support his family about him, wounded by a rebel bullet. What was he doing? What was he doing at the time? Let a rebel officer tell. There may be some men not as fully convinced as my friend from Wisconsin, and for their benefit I will read this. Lieutenant-Colonel Hutton, a rebel officer, says of this man:

His knowledge of the country was thorough; he was smart, daring, and vigilant, and capable of great endurance. In consequence of the knowledge we possessed of this fact, every possible exertion was made on our part to capture him, but without success until the 23d day of April, 1863, when General Imboden advanced upon the Federal forces then stationed at Beverly, commanded by Colonel George R. Latham.

Now look at him. A rebel force was advancing to attack a Union force. This man had been sent out to ascertain what was the condition of affairs so that our force might be prepared, if about to be attacked, to meet that attack. The rebel officer continues:

In order to cut off all scouts that might be outside the Federal pickets-

So as to make their attack effective-we sent by night a party of men through the woods to gain the road near the out-side Federal picketpost before daylight on the morning of April 23, 1863. About day-light said Phares, who was thus cut off, approached said party of men on horseback and was ordered to halt, but dashed forward and past the men, when he was fired upon by them, one ball taking effect, passing through his body—through he lungs— from the effects of which he is now almost wholly disabled. He retained his seat, however, until he reached the Federal picket and gave information of our advance.

from the effects of which he is now almost wholly disabled. He retained his sekt, however, until he reached the Federal picket and gave information of our advance. And probably saved from capture the Union forces; and now we are hesitating here, some of us, whether or not we shall grant the man a pension under these circumstances, his property all gone, his ability to support his family gone for the reason that I have read to you from a rebel source. Another word or two and I am done.

It was argued the other day that pensions were matters of contract between the Government and the soldier, that when a soldier entered the service he entered with the understanding by law that he was to have a pension. Is that really so? The law read by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] the other day is dated in July, 1861, the law promising pensions to soldiers who might be wounded in the service and to the families of those who might die. How many men had we in the field before that law was passed? The first seventy-five thousand men called out by President Lincoln were called out long before that law was passed, and many of them had died before that law was passed; and yet their families are entitled to pensions although there was no contract, express or implied, at the time of their enlistment that they should have pensions. "That won't do," if I may be allowed to use the language of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman.] The pension is granted for meritorious services, whether it has been promised or whether it has not been promised. Something was said the other day that our pension list is large. Very well, Mr. President, it is large. It was a large war that we were engaged in—a very large war—and the consequence is that our pension list is very large. I wish the war had been much less, and consequently our pension list much less; but we have to take these things sequently our pension list much less; but we have to take these things as they are and not as we would wish to have them.

Now, let us look at it a little. The burden of the war upon us to-day arises from two sources largely. The interest on our public debt is one of them; and the pension list the other. We are raising by a tax upon tobacco and whisky and beer about enough of money to pay the interest on the public debt. What good reason exists why the men who use these three articles should pay the interest on the public debt, perhaps might be difficult to discover; but they do it, and do not complain, so far as I know, in regard to it. Now, if the and do not complain, so far as I know, in regard to it. Now, if the putting upon the pension list of a few men—and there cannot be the thousands of them that gentlemen speak of—who as scouts or in some other capacity served their country well and are disabled in consequence of it; if putting them on the pension list will increase the pension list largely, can we not increase a little by an amendment of our revenue law the amount of our income so as to cover that amount? The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] is not here with his constitutional objections to almost everything; and I will suggest, suppose that to offset the tax upon tobacco we put a tax upon clawsuppose that to offset the tax upon tobacco we put a tax upon claw-hammer coats—swallow-tails, I believe they are called. That will raise something.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. They are tax enough on the men who wear them. [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Suppose in addition to that we tax every man who wears a stove-pipe hat, or rather a tax on every stove-pipe hat manufactured. I do not see why in the interest of art it should not be done. Something certainly ought to be done, it seems to me, to discourage the use of those monstrosities.

Mr. HAMLIN. Why not tax frock-coats and reach the Senator from

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No; I say tax claw-hammer coats and stove-pipe hats; and then if you would only tax the trains of ladies' dresses by the foot or yard, I am sure you would raise the amount of money required, if we add the few men who come within the scope of this bill to the pension list. I do not see why that would not be precisely as fair as to tax the man who smokes cigars, chews tobacco, or drinks beer occasionally.

beer occasionally.

It will not do for us to make this complaint; it will not do for us to say that we cannot afford to pay a man who has earned a pension as this man has earned it. Believing that, and comforted by the assurance of my friend from Wiseonsin [Mr. CAMERON] that he intends to vote for the bill, I will say nothing further upon it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the fact that this question has been so much discussed must be my excuse for asking the Senate to listen once more to some suggestions from me.

I do not think, in view of the colloquy which has just occurred between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Iowa, that it is worth while to discuss the question whether this is a case which is now pensionable by law. It seems to be conceded that it is not. Then if I understand the situation it is this: The Senate is asked to grant a pension to a man, there being no law for granting that pension, because it is said that he has earned a pension by some meritorious service. I want to look at that for a moment.

I deny that there is any merit in this case which entitles the man to a pension. That he did a gallant deed I do not deny. I may illustrate the way in which it strikes my mind thus: The Senator from West Virginia described what he had done. He was out on a scout. He knew that the force of the enemy was approaching, and he rode into camp through that force, receiving a ball in his body, for the purpose of communicating that information to the Army. Does that purpose of communicating that information to the Army. Does that entitle him to a pension?

Suppose it had been a sutler who had been there, and suppose the sutler had obtained information that the confederate army was advancing, and suppose he had ridden to camp, and suppose he had been shot on the road, would the Senator from West Virginia or anybody else say that a sutler was a man who was deserving a pension?

Now, let us go a little further. This man's property was destroyed; why not pay him for it? Would the Senator from West Virginia stand upshere and advocate a bill to pay this man for his property? It is said that under the law he cannot get pay for his property. Why

It is said that under the law he cannot get pay for his property. Why not? Why not make a special act? My friend from Wisconsin, who is going to vote for this bill because he thinks it is a meritorious case, is upon the Committee on Claims. I apprehend that if this case had come before the Committee on Claims, he would be the first one to stand up and say, "there is no law under which we can pay this man for the destruction of his property." It is a great deal easier to pension a man than it is to pay his claim when he presents one; it is so exceedingly easy. The Senator behind me says we do not wait for a law to do these things. That is just what I insist the Senate ought to do.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Make a law.

Mr. PLATT. Congress ought to wait for it, and if there is no such law they ought to make it before they grant a pension.

Now, let us see just what the situation is. Here my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMillan,] has got a scout case; my friend, the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Hereford,] has another; I believe my friend, the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood,] has another or is interested in some case of an Indian scout, or something of that sort. So they all combine here to tell us that each of their cases is the most meritorious kind of a case, when there are hundreds and hundreds of scouts (if we could learn the facts and circumstances) who are just as much entitled to the consideration of Congress as these men who have come here and excited the sympathies of gentlemen.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. Do I understand the Senator from Connecticut that if he had a scout case he would support this bill?

Mr. PLATT. I confess that I do not think I would be here pressing a scout case with my views of the law. I think that if a scout ing a scout case with my views of the law. I think that if a scout came to me and asked me to present a bill here to obtain a pension for him and to get it through, to do all I could to obtain a pension for him, I would say to him, "My dear friend, I will try to get a law passed to pension scouts, if that is right; but there being no law, I think I must be excused from presenting your case to Congress."

It is said that we have granted a pension to the widow of Colonel Fletcher Webster. I think I might well put the question to the Senator from Iowa whether he thought that was right?

Mr. INGALLS. But her husband fell in battle.

Mr. PLATT. I know it. It was a larger pension than she would have been entitled to on that account, however.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We pensioned the widow of General Custer.

Mr. INGALLS. She was pensionable, and the only thing the Senate did was to increase the amount to which she would have been entitled under the general law. That act of Congress did not create a pensionable class

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senater from Kansas allow me to ask him how different in principle that is from the case before the Sen-

Mr. PLATT. I think that there are a variety of cases which can be made here which will appeal to the sympathy of the Senate. I read in the newspapers a few days ago of a marshal of the United States endeavoring to execute the laws of the United States shot through the body. Will the Senate pension that marshal's wife and children when they come here asking for a pension? Why not? It is said we have pensioned an engineer of a steamboat who was not in the service; we have pensioned a teamster who was not in the service; but would Congress pension the wife and children of a marshal of the United States shot dead in trying to execute the laws of the United States? I apprehend not. Why not? Because they do not come within that class of persons who are recognized as pensionable. That is the distinction.

This man makes a contract to serve-not to serve with the Army, not to serve as a soldier, but to get information for the Army just as a civilian might get supplies for the Army. If there was but one case here, or if that one case had not such eloquent advocates to enlist the sympathies of Senators, it seems to me they would all agree that we had better be governed by the law as it is until we make a new law.

Will the Senate pass a law, if reported by the Committee on Pensions, to pension all scouts disabled, and their widows and children where they were killed? Will they pass a law to pension all engineers and employes on steamboats disabled, or their widows and children if they were killed? Will they pass a law to pension those cases? If not, are we to sit here and adjudge on each particular case whether it has a shadow more of merit than another case which we may not have heard of? It seems to me that we had better be governed by some well-known, definite rule of action.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HEREFORD. This case has been before this body now for the fourth day, I believe, and certainly I think it can be disposed of in

Mr. HEREFORD. This case has been before this body now for the fourth day, I believe, and certainly I think it can be disposed of in ten or fifteen minutes, and I should like very much if the Senate would by unanimous consent let us proceed with it for a short time. I am ready to take the vote now, so far as I am concerned. Let it be proceeded with informally; and if the Senator from Florida, [Mr. Jones,] who is entitled to the floor on the Geneva award bill, shall call for the regular order at any moment it can be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIENT. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the unfinished business, being the Geneva award bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HOAR to the fourth section of the bill.

be read now for information.

The CHEF CLERK. In section 5 it is proposed to strike out, in line 5, after "Washington," the words "and the interest accruing therefrom;" so as to make the section read:

That the judgments rendered by said court under this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of the money paid to the United States pursuant to article 7 of the treaty of Washington, not expended in payment of claims heretofore proved and allowed under the provisions of said original act, and the act extending the time for the filing of claims thereunder, and of expenses under this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and laid on the table. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, when this matter was under consideration last evening, I was struck somewhat with an observa-tion or two which fell from the senior Senator from Ohio who has this measure in charge [Mr. THURMAN] in reference to the pending bill. One would infer from what the Senator stated that all that was intended to be submitted by this bill to the court proposed to be revived or continued was a mere hearing of the claims of insurance companies, the question as to whether they had any status or not. For fear I should do the honorable Senator the least injustice, I propose to read his own language:

The question from the first has been, Shall these insurance companies be allowed to prove their claims before any tribunal that we may establish to hear claims upon this fund! In 1874 the Congress of the United States excluded them from a hearing virtually, and the question ever since has been whether or not they should be entitled to a hearing.

The Senator also said:

I do not know that I have ever witnessed quite such a proceeding as we have now before us. The great contest from the very first bill that was introduced on this subject has been whether the insurance companies should be paid. They had claims according to as well-settled law as ever existed in the world. Their right to present those claims, their right to stand in the shoes of those who lost the property captured, was expressly admitted by the attorney-general of Great Britain before the Geneva tribunal.

Mr. President, I have not thought it necessary to go over the vast record which we have before us in reference to what took place at Geneva touching these claims, but I have turned to the argument of the attorney-general of Great Britain, as he is called, Sir Roundell Palmer, who did allude to these claims, and what did he say? I attach, for one, but very little importance to what any British authority said on this subject; but when an argument of this kind is brought forward in behalf of these corporations to sustain this bill, I think it is eminently proper for those of us who do not concur with the Judiciary Committee to reply to it in the usual way by showing that it is not entitled to any weight. Sir Roundell Palmer before the Geneva tribunal used this language in his argument:

With respect to the insurance companies, it must be remembered that, as against the losses which they paid, they received the benefit of the enormous war premiums which ruled at that time; and that these were the risks against which they indemnified themselves (and, it cannot be doubted, so as to make their business profitable upon the whole) by those extraordinary premiums. Would it be equitable now to reimburse them, not only the amount of all these losses, but interest thereon, without taking into account any part of the profits which they so received?

16. These remarks would hold good if an exact valuation of the claims were possible; but, before this tribunal, neither an exact valuation of any part of these claims, nor any approximation to such a valuation, is possible. This consideration alone ought to be decisive against the demand of interest, as an element of damages, in any gross sum to be awarded by the tribunal.

That was the language used by the distinguished counsel who reput

That was the language used by the distinguished counsel who represented the case of Great Britain before the Geneva board, and I am greatly at a loss to discover anything in that language which can be greatly at a loss to discover anything in that language which can be tortured into an admission upon his part that these underwriters had any claim there that that tribunal was bound to recognize.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, does he refer now to that so-called opinion of Mr. Cushing?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Not at all. I quote from the language of the distinguished counsel that represented Great Britain, to which an ellusion was made lost evening by the Senator from Ohio.

allusion was made last evening by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, it is not to be denied that this controversy is an old one, and that it would require a person of greater ingenuity and power one, and that it would require a person of greater ingenuity and power than myself to be able to put anything forward in the shape of a new argument upon this threadbare subject; but finding as I do so many able and distinguished legal minds in this body supporting with all the vigor and all the power of their great intellects the claims of the underwriters to this fund, and differing as I do with them most sincerely with respect to their conclusions, I cannot east the vote which I propose to do without assigning the reasons which shall actuate me

I think that this case is clearly susceptible of determination by the express words of the treaty, and that it is not necessary for us to go into that great labyrinth of matter upheaved at Geneva by the two contestants to spell our way to a reasonable conclusion in this case. For my part I do not intend to do it. I rely upon the terms of this treaty, this international compact or contract entered into between treaty, this international compact or contract entered into between the two great powers; and I say that according to the terms of this contract this problem must be solved. The very first thing that meets the eye in the paper that I have before me is the preamble of the proclamation of the President of the United States, which announced to the civilized world that this angry controversy was about to be terminated in a rational way. President Grant issued this proclamation after the treaty was concluded, and what did he say?

Whereas a treaty between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, concerning the settlement of all causes of difference between the two countries, was concluded and signed at Washington by the high commissioners and plenipotentiaries of the respective governments on the 8th day of May last; which treaty is, word for word, as follows.

Leaving that and coming down to the first article of the treaty, it tells us what the character of the controversy was:

Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims;"

And whereas Her Britannic Majesty has authorized her high commissioners and plenipotentiaries to express, in a friendly spirit, the regret felt by Her Majesty's government for the escape, under whatever circumstances, of the Alabama and other vessels from British ports, and for the depredations committed by those vessels.

sels:

Now, in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims, which are not admitted by Her Britannic Majesty's government, the high contracting parties agree that all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generically known as the "Alabama claims," shall be referred to a tribunal of arbitration, to be composed of five arbitrators, to be appointed in the following manner, that is to say: One shall be named by the President of the United States; one shall be named by Her Britannic Majesty; His Majesty the King of Italy shall be requested to name one; and His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil shall be requested to name one.

Then provision is made for a vacancy. Then coming down to the ixth article of the traty it is provided:

In deciding the matters submitted to the arbitrators they shall be governed by the following three rules, which are agreed upon by the high contracting parties as rules to be taken as applicable to the case, and by such principles of international law, not inconsistent therewith, as the arbitrators shall determine to have been applicable to the case.

The rules have been often referred to, and I need not say to the Senate that they concern the duties of government. This, therefore, was an international court, if ever there was one, created to determine a purely international question according to international law, and it was empowered to do so in accordance with these three rules and the laws of nations not inconsistent with them.

In the argument which has been stated to the Senate hitherto upon this subject, it has been gravely insisted that the rights of individuthis subject, it has been gravely insisted that the rights of individuals and of corporations were passed upon before the tribunal, and that we are bound in distributing the fund now in the public Treasury to pay regard to what was done at Geneva by that exalted tribunal which averted the calamity of war by its great international decision. Mr. President, I venture to assert that no lawyer who takes the pains to examine the eleven articles of the treaty bearing upon this important question can find in it a single syllable going to show that the rights of individuals or of corporations were regarded for one

"A neutral government is bound," says the first rule, to do what?
"To use due diligence to prevent the fitting-out, arming, or equipping" of hostile ships. Does it say that a corporation is bound? Does it say that an individual is bound? It says "a neutral government is bound" to do these things; and then the sixth article of the treaty goes on to provide that in the event that this great tribunal finds that the defendant in the case had not kept herself within these rules or within the principles of international law consistent with them, it was authorized to award against that defendant a sum in gross to compensate for the violation of international law. compensate for the violation of international law.

It was required on the part of the tribunal to examine into the case of each ship; I admit it; but for what purpose? Was that stipulation in the treaty put there for the purpose of governing the distribution of the fund that might be finally awarded? Or, was it not put there for the purpose of protecting, as far as it was possible to protect, the rights of one of the high contracting parties? It was put there at the instance of Great Britain for the purpose of securing her interest and to limit to the lowest sum possible the amount of the award. When the tribunal was required to take into consideration the case of each ship and to examine into all the circumstances at the case of each ship and to examine into all the circumstances attending her capture, that was not a provision for the purpose of regulating or governing in any way the final distribution of the money that might be given to the United States for the infraction of these three rules or of international law. It was done for the protection of one of the contracting parties, and for that alone; and still learned lawyers here undertake to give an interpretation to this provision which goes to the extent of saying that it must control this sovereign power years after the determination of the duty of the commission, and that we have no power to look beyond the losses occasioned by the inculpated cruisers in dealing out justice to the large class of the inculpated cruisers in dealing out justice to the large class of claimants who have suffered under these proceedings. I say it was put there in order to guard against an excessive award, to guard the rights of one of the contracting parties, to prevent inaccuracy, to prevent excessive damages. They were required to come down to that specific and particular examination with respect to each vessel which would enable the tribunal to deal with it in detail, and not to consider would enable the tribunal to deal with it in detail, and not to consider the whole testimony in a lump.

Mr. CONKLING. Will it be disagreeable to the Senator if I make an inquiry of him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. I am trying to understand the Senator from Florida, and I have tried to understand every Senator who has taken such a distinction. If anybody can make it plain, the Senator from Floridan.

Therefore I have to inquire of him what was the ebject in deal-Therefore I beg to inquire of him what was the object in dealing in detail, as he says, with vessel after vessel, unless the value of ing in detail, as he says, with vessel after vessel, unless the value of each vessel and its cargo was to be an item in the award of damages, and if it was, the sum total was to be made up of such items? Does not the honorable Senator give up the whole argument when he so admits because can it be that the value of a vessel and its cargo was to be the rule of recovery, and that the total of those items was to be the sum total of the award, and yet that the recovery did not take place in substance for the destruction of those vessels and the loss inflicted upon their owners? If the Senator will take the trouble to explain that distinction, I will listen with great respect, and indeed will listen with gratitude, because I have been seeking for days to ascertain what that distinction is and where it resides.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think in this case that the treaty is its own best expounder and I cannot find anything clearer than the language of the sixth article.

guage of the sixth article.

In deciding the matters submitted to the arbitrators they shall be governed by the following three rules, which are agreed upon by the high contracting parties as rules to be taken as applicable to the case, and by such principles of international law not inconsistent therewith as the arbitrators shall determine to have been applicable to the case.

Then in article VII:

The decision of the tribunal shall, if possible, be made within three months from the close of the argument on both sides.

It shall be made in writing and dated, and shall be signed by the arbitrators who may assent to it.

The said tribunal shall first determine as to each vessel separately whether Great Britain has, by any act or omission, failed to fulfill any of the duties set forth in the foregoing three rules—

Mr. CONKLING. Those were rebel cruisers, not the destroyed

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand-or recognized by the principles of international law not inconsistent with such rules, and shall certify such fact as to each of the said vessels. In case the tribunal find that Great Britain has failed to fulfill any duty or duties as aforesaid, it may, if it think proper, proceed to award a sum in gross to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for all the claims referred to it; and in such case the gross sum so awarded shall be paid in coin by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States, at Washington, within twelve months after the date of the award.

What does that mean? It prescribes for that tribunal the rules of its decision; it sets them out, and it says it shall enter upon the inquiry with respect to each confederate cruiser whether or not Great Britain violated these three rules or either of them on the interna-tional code; and if, mark you, it finds that any of these international rules were violated, then it was authorized by the seventh article of the treaty to award a sum in gross to the United States on account of such violation.

For what? For mere wounded honor? Mr. CONKLING.

Mr. CONKLING. For what? For mere wounded nonor?
Mr. JONES, of Florida. It does not say, and the honorable Senator from New York must know the great mystery up to this time, after all the investigation that has taken place, which hangs over the measure of damage adopted by this international tribunal. Their duty was plain certainly in inquiring into the case of each ship. The Government of the United States was the plaintiff; the crown of Great Britain was the defendant. Three august powers represented in the persons of imperial characters, so to speak, sat there as judges, and the little neutral ground of Geneva was selected as the proper place to hold this important proceeding. Once the tribunal found that Great Britain was in fault, the arbitrators had it in their power to assess any sum in gross that they thought proper against the defend-ant, and everything that was brought before them in the shape of private claims or private interests was nothing more than evidence to sustain the international claim of the American Government which was set up against the opposing nationality.

The United States set forth in their case their right to recovery for that class of claims, it does not matter how you denominate them, whether private or national; but this Government set forth its title on the record and claimed from Great Britain compensation in damon the record and claimed from Great Britain compensation in damages for the violation of these three rules, and a sum of money was awarded to it on account of such breach. It brought forward, it is true, evidence of ownership with respect to this property; it filed schedules going to show that ships bearing the American flag had been captured and destroyed; it did all that, and it said in effect, "This is my property for the purposes of this adjudication." It said, "This is not a contest between corporation and corporation, between Great Britain and insurance companies, or between A, B, or C, but it is a controversy between the national power, known as the United States, on the one side, and the nationality of Britain on the other, and I come forth here with evidence to sustain my case, first, to show that the rules were violated, and second, to claim that I am entitled to compensation for that violation." Was it not awarded on that principle? If it was not, on what principle was it awarded?

It has been said here that it was in effect a decision in favor of the underwriters. I read from the argument of the attorney-general of Great Britian, to show that the claims of underwriters never were considered—the claim of no individual. The property which was determed it was insisted was American property and with was destroyed, it was insisted, was American property; and with respect to the intervening rights of mortgagees and mortgageors, underwriters and insured, and all the various equities growing out of that property, that international tribunal had nothing to do with them. They did not meet there to adjudicate upon private rights. They met there to that international tribunal had nothing to do with them. They did not meet there to adjudicate upon private rights. They met there to settle a great international controversy which was about to bring this nation into the very jaws of war, and they made an award which is consistent with the treaty, and awarded to the United States $15,500,000 in satisfaction of the demand presented.

Was it recovered for the benefit of any particular class of individuals? I am not one of those who pretend to say that this fund ought to go into the public Treasury. In that respect I do not concur with my honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] in saying that we are under no obligation whatever to deal with this fund except to pay it into the public Treasury. I say, sir, that it did come into our hands coupled with a most sacred trust, not a trust in behalf of any of the insurance companies, not a trust in behalf of any distinct or special set of men. No, Mr. President, it came into our hands coupled with a special trust, to be paid to actual sufferers, a moral trust in contradistinction to a legal one, for I contend that the ordinary rules of law which have been set forth here as governing this case have no more application to it than the laws of the Medes and Persians; and I entertain this opinion honestly in opposition to the views of the distinguished Senators who have reported this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt my friend from Florida to ask a question for information?

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt my friend from Florida to ask a question for information?

question for information?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the Senator will wait a little I will answer any question. No, Mr. President, there is not one word in this treaty from beginning to end that does not go to show that this was a great international lawsuit. And here I would put a practical question. Who ever heard of evidence introduced in a court of justice to sustain the title and the right of a plaintiff in equity or at law to govern his action in the distribution of the money that might be awarded to him under the judgment? Mr. Cushing, himself an active participator in the proceedings at Geneva, speaks of it as a lawsuit. He says in his book:

In effect the United States were the plaintiffs and Great Britain the defendant in a suit at law to be tried, it is true, before a special tribunal and determined by conventional rules, but not the less a suit at law for the recovery of damages in reparation of alleged injuries.

reparation of alleged injuries.

The United States was the plaintiff; the Crown of Great Britain was the defendant. The cause was heard before five representatives of sovereign states, sitting as I said awhile ago in a spot peculiarly adapted for their sittings, the little weak power of Switzerland which lies on the threshold of the great military state of Europe, and from whose presence nothing could be dreaded, but where everything breathed the spirit of liberty such as we are accustomed to breath in this land. The circumstances, the character of the judges, the character of the parties, the character of the counsel, the character of the cause, the consequences likely to flow from it, all go to show that this was not the little petty controversy which we have been taught to believe it was over the rights of a few greedy corporations.

No, Mr. President, the destinies of millions were involved in that controversy; and had that scheme of settlement been broken up midway in troversy; and had that scheme of settlement been broken up midway in consequence of the attitude of Great Britain growing out of the bringing forth of indirect claims on the part of the United States, no man now living could have foreseen the direful effects and consequences of such a rupture. It was to prevent that that this tribunal sat. It was not to pass—and I say it with all respect to the learned Senators who reported this bill—upon private rights, but it was to pass upon the right of the United States to recover from Great Britain for a breach of international duty, no matter what the sum awarded in damages might be. Had it been but $10, the consequence would have been the same. It was not a question of money, as is clearly shown by the proceedings before the tribunal. We know very well as a matter of history that the indirect claims, as they were called, were put forth for the express purpose of having them ignored. Mr. Fish admitted that pecuniary compensation was not desired, and, said he, it is more important to the interests of this great neutral nation to have them rejected than affirmed, even at the price of a large sum of money. troversy; and had that scheme of settlement been broken up midway in them rejected than affirmed, even at the price of a large sum of money. They were put aside, and that principle of international law was affirmed in accordance with the ideas and the judgment of the statesmen of this country.

When it came to other matters, all coming under the same title, I respectfully submit, a money award was made to the United States of $15,500,000, which came into our hands uncoupled with any but a of $15,500,000, which came into our hands uncoupled with any but a general trust to give it to those who in our judgment are most deserving of it under the principles of justice and equity and according to their sufferings in the particulars complained of. But the tribunal at Geneva only inculpated three cruisers instead of ten or more; and having taken jurisdiction and gone into an examination of the evidence, they found that Great Britain had only violated her international duties with respect to three cruisers. That was part of the evidence in the case; the paramount title to recover lay behind it; but this was the evidence brought forth by the United States to sustain her cause, and instead of inculpating ten or fifteen vessels the tribunal only inculpated three, and awarded damages on account of that inculpation. But this was no part of the case, except what you find in the daily trial of a cause where a man brings forth a vast volind in the daily trial of a cause where a man brings forth a vast vol-ume of testimony to sustain his case, and he recovers upon a part. I need not appeal to the lawyers who are within the sound of my voice to ask them how disappointed have they been in their profes-sional lives in respect to testimony which their clients instructed them to bring forward to sustain their case, how often it has happened that instead of finding every witness swearing up to the full standard of expectation he has gone back on them, and in the end they were driven to the necessity of relying on a very partial testimony to re-cover when they had the expectation of being able to present a fuller quantity.

Here the recovery was had upon proof relating to three inculpated cruisers and the others were excluded; but the effect of the award was just the same as if all the cruisers had been inculpated instead of three. The power of the Government to deal with the fund is just the same unless you adopt the absurd notion that the testimony given in a cause brought forth by the plaintiff to sustain his case and presented to the jury is after its verdict is rendered to control the final disposition of the fund which the plaintiff receives.

That is just the case. The United States sued Great Britain in an international court before international judges. She presented her testimony; she presented the case, as I think, of thirteen or fifteen cruisers, and the court only found that her case was good with respect to three; but under the provision of the treaty authorizing the tribunal to give a sum in gross, a gross sum was given, and the title of the United States to that fund and to distribute it at her discretion stands upon the very same ground that it would stand on if every stands upon the very same ground that it would stand on if every single exculpated cruiser had been inculpated.

My friend from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] the other day, in discussing this question, called our attention to the tenth article, which provides for a board of assessors. The argument has been made very frequently that because that article provides in one alternative for a frequently that because that article provides in one alternative for a board of assessors, which never came into life, that concludes the question; that if that board of assessors had been created under the provision of the tenth article of the treaty there could be no question as to those cruisers; that the underwriters in that case would have their claims established and they would have received their money. There is no authority whatever for that. Had that board of assessors been brought into life they would have had power under the treaty to have disregarded every claim of every underwriter. There is not one word in the treaty, from beginning to end, which provides for any class of individual rights to be protected under it. It authorizes, it is true, the examination of claims, but what claims? It does not say, "such claims as may be presented to it by the Government of the United States." Under the treaty the Government of the United States had it in its power to put aside the claims of the underwriters altogether and never to have submitted one of them to underwriters altogether and never to have submitted one of them to that hoard

Mr. KERNAN. But did not the United States submit the claims of the underwriters to the board?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There was no board ever brought into existence.

Mr. KERNAN. No; to the tribunal.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes; everybody went. As is usually the case, everybody went; but, as Mr. Cushing says, all were not acted upon. All this talk that we have heard about the tribunal ignoring the claims of the war-premium men in my judgment is not well made. We have been told here that the claims of the war-premium men were put aside at Geneva. I deny it. I say that no individual's claim was put aside or recognized at Geneva. I say that the tribunal held that the claims for enhanced insurance set forth by the Government ought not to be received. But why? Because there were already claims there for the very property to which the insurance claims related. If Great Britain could have been called upon to give value for the ships and cargoes, and also for the cost of enhanced insurance, any man in his senses must see that she would have been liable to a any man in his senses must see that she would have been liable to a double claim. It was to guard against double claims, and not to decide against individual war-premium men, that the action was taken respecting enhanced insurance. They said: "Here are a hundred ships and their cargoes that have been confessedly destroyed by confederate cruisers. What is the value of that property? Beyond that we have nothing to de. we have nothing to do. We do not intend to submit to your getting the value of the property and also the claim for enhanced insurance on the part of the owner side by side with it." The logic of the tribunal was: "We will not submit to that, but we will give you the value of the ship and the cargo; take it for what it is worth; and then you must go to your domestic forum and settle the private equities but most your domestic forum and settle the private equities but most your domestic forum and settle the private equities between your own citizens in your own way, whether they relate to mortgages, to conditional bills of sale, to war premiums, to underwriters, or to anything else."

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator, as I understand him, says that the Geneva tribunal decided against war premiums for the purpose of preventing double claims.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think that was the logic of their action antivole.

Mr. THURMAN. They expressly said the contrary, that they did

mr. Interest she were said the contacty, that they do not exclude them upon that ground.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That they were indirect?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, that they were not a subject of recognition.

Mr. CONKLING. It said in so many words that they were not embraced within the treaty.

Mr. KERNAN. I will read that exact language from the record

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should rather the Senator would wait until I get through.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear that now.

Mr. KERNAN. I will not interrupt the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from New York will have plenty of time.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Florida is not talking merely to make a speech, but talking to make people understand the question. Let us hear it read for common instruction.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have no objection. [To Mr. KERNAN.] Go on and read it.

Mr. KERNAN. In the proceedings of the 19th of June, 1872— Mr. JONES, of Florida. What does the Senator read from? Mr. KERNAN. I read from volume 4 of Message and Documents, Department of State, part 2, 1872-773:

Record of the proceedings of the tribunal of arbitration at the fifth conference held at Geneva, in Switzerland, on the 19th of June, 1872.

Count Sclopis then, on behalf of all the arbitrators, made the following state-

The arbitrators wish it to be understood that in the observations which they are about to make they have in view solely the application of the agent of Her Britannie Majesty's government, which is now before them, for an adjournment, which might be prolonged till the month of February in next year; and the motives for that application, namely, the difference of opinion which exists between Her Britannic Majesty's government and the Government of the United States as to the competency of the tribunal, under the treaty of Washington, to deal with the claims advanced in the case of the United States in respect of losses under the several heads of: First, the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag; second, the enhanced payments of insurance; and, third, the prolongation of the war.

This being so, the arbitrators think it right to state that, after the most careful perusal of all that has been urged on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of these claims, they have arrived, individually and collectively, at the conclusion that these claims do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, good foundation for an award of compensation or computation of damages between nations, and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making its award, even if there were no disagreement between the two governments as to the competency of the tribunal to decide thereon.

That excluded them entirely, under international law, as not com-

That excluded them entirely, under international law, as not competent to be taken into consideration or computed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Whatever may have been their reasons for their action, I have not now the book at hand, but that is one of the questions open to controversy. Those claims were excluded, I suppose, because they were remote and not falling on that account within the terms of the treaty, although they retained another class of claims for damages for the pursuit of the confederate cruisers, which was not settled at that particular time, but afterward when they came to render their judgment. But, however that may be, the claims before the tribunal were for property actually destroyed. If I understand one thing better than another as resulting from the entire proceedings of that great council, it is that they never attempted to pass upon individual rights; they treated the one hundred and thirty-five ships destroyed just as if the title to them had been vested in this nation. I am not without authority in that, because when one nation deals with another in an international way everything that is put forward is grounded upon the right of the nation. What does Vattel say upon this subject?

Even the property of individuals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of midwiduals is, in the aggregate, to be con

Even the property of individuals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of nations with respect to other states. It, in some sort, really belongs to her, from the right she has over the property of her citizens, because it constitutes a part of the sum total of her riches and augments her power. She is interested in that property by her obligation to protect all her members. In short, it cannot be otherwise, since nations act and treat together as bodies in their quality of political societies, and are considered as so many moral persons. All those who form a society, a nation being considered by foreign nations as constituting only one whole, one single person—all their wealth together can only be considered as the wealth of that same person.

That is the law of nations as other when the United States went

That is the law of nations; so that when the United States went before this tribunal with these private claims, as they are called, she had a right to elevate them to the full standard of nationality, and say: "This property was my property, and it is before this tribunal for the purpose of decision, and I ask a verdict for it. If there is anything to be done with respect to the rights of my attitude that we for the purpose of decision, and I ask a verdict for it. If there is anything to be done with respect to the rights of my citizens, that you have nothing to do with; I deal with you so far as we are concerned. This is my property and I want recompense for its destruction. You have nothing to do with the corporations or the individual citizens of the United States. When this fund comes into my hands as their sovereign I will deal with them in my own way, because they are subject to my jurisdiction, and you cannot be permitted to treat with them at all."

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator understand that anybody has made an argument contrary to that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think I have heard it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think I have, I think I have heard it thin?

reiterated time and again that the decision rendered at Geneva by the international board ought to be observed in the distribution of the money that is now in the public Treasury. Unless I am greatly mistaken I have heard that reiterated time and again, and I say that that principle cannot be upheld before this tribunal at least.

In dealing with questions of law I bring to them as much profes-In dealing with questions of law I bring to them as much professional pride as any of my brethren of the profession who from time to time are called upon to debate the nice questions of jurisprudence which are constantly agitating this high body; but, sir, I cannot but confess that the discussion thus far with respect to this great question has been entirely too technical for me. I do not think that we sit here to administer the common law. I do not think that the Senate of the United States ever was brought into life to act the part of a nisi prius court. There are some things that a court of justice organized to enforce legal principles must do. It is bound down by the shackles of its own narrow life and existence, beyond which it cannot move, and it must take notice of legal niceties. Sometimes a court of equity is equally bound to take notice of equitable principles. But we are bound by neither.

Mr. CARPENTER. By neither law nor equity?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I refer now to equity in the technical sense. I say we are bound by principles of eternal and undefined justice, and that we have got no narrow legal standard to measure what we may do in dealing with a question of this kind. I have no doubt there are a great many Senators within the sound of my voice who have been interested in the discussion of the doctrine of subrogation, and a great many of the representatives of the people, no doubt, who were sent here to represent their great interests, never heard of subrogation until they heard it in connection with this question. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that. Still, we have had learned arguments from the distinguished jurist who usually sits before me [Mr. Davis, of Illinois] that would puzzle the mind of the ricest lawyer on the continent to comprehend.

I do not complain of this at all, but I say, lawyer as I am, and recognizing my duty to the profession, that I think when I am called upon in the Senate to deal with a great question like this, I am under no special obligation to apply to it the doctrines or the principles that are applicable in a court of law. I think I have authority here, sitting under this great Constitution of cours to take a breader with the are applicable in a court of law. I think I have authority here, sitting under this great Constitution of ours, to take a broader vision than even the Supreme Court would be permitted to take if the case was before it. I do not think that the oath which I have taken requires that I should get down on my knees to the little, narrow, legal doctrines which prevail in every little court in the land, but that in dealing with a question of this kind we must go to its justice, to its right, to its inherent court, and administer institute which a my front.

ing with a question of this kind we must go to its justice, to its right, to its inherent equity, and administer justice, which, as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] knows, is not always law.

The whole claim of the underwriters has been predicated upon the doctrine of subrogation. If we take away from them that doctrine and bring the case down to an ordinary legal standard, and convert ourselves into a regular court for the purpose of administering the law, there is not a lawyer in the Senate who can say that there can be any foundation to it often that doctring is taken away.

be any foundation to it after that doctrine is taken away.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator will allow me to correct him as to a matter of fact. At least ninety-nine out of one hundred of these claims that the insurance companies paid as for a total loss were assigned by the insured to the insurance companies.

Mr. CARPENTER. But the assignment is as immoral as subroga-

Mr. CARPENTER. But the assignment is as immoral as subrogations, according to this argument!

Mr. THURMAN. Subrogation was enough, but in addition to that a party perfectly competent to contract made a formal and regular assignment in at least ninety-nine out of every one hundred cases.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In consideration of what?

Mr. THURMAN. It does not matter; it was a sufficient consideration, between parties able to contract.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I disagree with the Senator about that. I do not regard those assignments as any more effectual than an assignment that would take place by operation of law.

Mr. THURMAN. Then, will the Senator allow me to ask him one question? Does he propose to pay those ship-owners who were paid by the insurance companies? If these assignments were void and there was no subrogation, why does he not pay the original owners?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not propose to pay anybody who has already made pocketfulls of money out of this business, I do not care whether they are war-premium men or underwriters or anybody else. If I vote intelligently I shall not vote to recompense any man If I vote intelligently I shall not vote to recompense any man who has made profits.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him right there, because I want to correct his mistake? Would he pay a warpremium man who upon his business in which he paid war premiums made lots of money? That is the point.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will support the McDonald amendment on that point. That is my answer to the Senator, and I think that covers if covers it.

Mr. THURMAN. But that amendment does not put any such test at all; it only applies it to insurance companies. I will ask my friend another question. A ship was captured and destroyed by one of the exculpated cruisers. The owner of that ship by running her made far more than the value of the ship, far more than what he lost, in the course of business during the war. Would the Senator exclude Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, I would not; I would pay him.
Mr. THURMAN. Then the Senator's rule will not apply at all.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think the Senator is getting too remote; that is an indirect case. I think he is getting off too far.
Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator from Florida will permit me a moment to interrupt him I wish to state that the Senator from Ohio has asked a question which has no basis in fact whatever in any point involved here.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is abstract.
Mr. BLAINE. It is not abstract even. He has stated a case that does not exist in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth.

Mr. THURMAN. That is a question upon which there is a differ-nce of opinion. Will the Senator leave that to the tribunal which ence of opinion.

ence of opinion. Will the Senator leave that to the tribunal which we are to establish?

Mr. BLAINE. Entirely.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is willing to do that?

Mr. BLAINE. Entirely. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Florida by taking his time, but I can demonstrate that the Senator from Ohio is on a tack which has not any existence at all, as a matter of fact, not the slightest; and I shall demonstrate it when I have the right to the floor.

have the right to the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The answer of the Senator from Ohio that there was a written assignment here of the rights of the assured under these policies, in my judgment, amounts to very little, because the parties at law had that right without it. I am not here to dispute the legal principle that when an underwriter pays for the value of the property insured, he becomes subrogated to the rights of the of the property insured, he becomes subrogated to the rights of the owner with respect to everything growing out of that property, but I did say a while ago that in my humble judgment the doctrine of subrogation, as it is called, is not applicable to this case. Will anybody pretend that an underwriter cannot waive his right of subrogation? May he not enhance his premium in special cases and abandon all right to the thing? From the very nature of the case there could be no subrogation. These were all special contracts growing out of a special class of cases. The ordinary commercial policy, as we know, carries with it the implication that if there is a partial loss the owner may abandon and the assured take what is left of the property, if the damage amounts to more than one-half, paying for a total erty, if the damage amounts to more than one-half, paying for a total loss and becoming subrogated to the rights of that party loss and becoming subrogated to the rights of that party.

I say that is implied in every ordinary commercial policy of insurance. Where a man goes to insure his ship and cargo he says to the underwriter, "I want an insurance against the perils of the sea; I pay you so much money for a policy; if my loss amounts to more than one-half you shall have a right to what is left; I shall abandon and claim for a total loss, and you can take the rest." I say that implication is as strongly embodied in every contract of ordinary marine insurance as if it was written upon the face of the contract itself, and that the possibility of partial loss arises out of every contract of that kind and goes to diminish proportionately the amount of the premium. But in these cases what was the contract? In every case it was a policy taken out against absolute destruction, out of which there could have been no subrogation, and the premium was charged accordingly. have been no subrogation, and the premium was charged accordingly. The insurer became his own insurer by the amount of premium that

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt my friend one moment? I wish to get his argument exactly right. Do I understand him to assert that there is no subrogation where the property has been utterly de-

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say that when there is nothing in fact to attach subrogation to, it cannot exist.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator say that the right of subrogation does not extend to all remedies that the owner of the property would have in his own right against any tort-feasor or person guilty of negligence?

of negligence?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is the Senator through?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes. The Supreme Court has so decided.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I know what the Supreme Court has decided about that. I will answer the Senator. Yes, he has all the rights of action that may grow out of the destruction of the thing. The Senator from Ohio has asked me the old question, have not the

The Senator from Ohio has asked me the old question, have not the underwriters a right to go to those who have been instrumental in destroying the property by tort or by illegal action of any kind.

Mr. THURMAN. Or by negligence.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Any shape of a tort. Let me say to the Senator that when the underwriters issued their policies they warranted the vessel insured against destruction by a belligerent power exercising all the authority of war, and that they charged proportionately. It was not a case of a collision on the high seas; it was not a case of barratry: it was not a case of the application of the not a case of barratry; it was not a case of the application of the torts by the master in fraud of the underwriter; it was not a fraudulent stranding or anything of that kind, but on the face of their policy they insured against capture by a belligerent power. Let me ask, in all seriousness, what claim did the owner have against the bel-

Mr. THURMAN. Great Britain was not a belligerent power?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I know that Great Britain was not. What did the underwriters become subrogated to under the doctrine of the honorable Senator from Ohio? They had no more claim in my opinion than the man whose property was destroyed by a land force of the confederacy with arms imported through the blockade from the Kingdom of Great Britain. There was no award ever made in their favor. There is where I and the Senator differ. No record shows any such award. No individual right was recognized by Great Britain. No subrogation could possibly exist. It was a public capture out of which the property was destroyed before even a treaty was in embryo. At the time the high commission sat in Washington every vestige of this property had been swept away by the hand of belligerent war. What right survived? The underwriter had pocketed his millions growing out of his enhanced premiums against the shipowner. The ship-owner suffered as all citizens suffer who happen to have their fates identified with a country at war. The Government have their fates identified with a country at war. The Government have their fates identified with a country at war. The Government stood behind both with a residuary power of reclamation which was only capable of being enforced by "the dogs of war." There was no tribunal to which the property-owner could appeal. There was no authority to which the ship-owner could go. Everything was swept away, not by a tort-feasor, not by barratry, not by any of those acts which are distinctly mentioned in every decision which was read by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] and the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.]

This is an exceptional case. There is nothing like it. I have yet

This is an exceptional case. There is nothing like it. I have yet to hear of a case or to hear it read which will meet it as a question of law; that is, when the property of the assured is destroyed by public war, upon the high seas or upon land, whether the owner of such property under any system of jurisprudence can come forth and make claim for it against any government or any power. If the property is destroyed by an illegal capture; if as in the case in I Peters, when the country is at peace the cruiser of a neutral power intrudes upon the rights of your citizen, then the action becomes illegal, absolutely so, and the right of reclamation ensues. But I need not tell the Senate, certainly not the lawyers in it, that from the very inception nearly of our great civil struggle both parties to the terrible contest through which we have passed recognized the principles of public law and public war as governing that contest. It is a credit to the American name that it was so; and I rejoice when I read of the humanity that emanated and sprung from that terrible civil struggle.

The captured vessels were destroyed on the high seas, not by tort, but as Judge Story said in one of his elaborate judgments in a prize case, the right to destroy goes hand in hand with the right to condemn. If by reason of blockade or otherwise the capturing power did not make his prize available and in an extreme case destruction did not make his prize available and in an extreme case destruction was resorted to, it grew out of the same hostile nature of belligerent right. Where can we find a case on record, I ask, where property was destroyed by a belligerent party in war that the owner thereof was heard before any tribunal asserting legal rights for compensation?

Independent of that question are the rights of the nation to which the citizen belongs. Behind this, therefore, as I said a while ago, rested the residuary power of reclamation on the part of the nation against Great Britain, and she exerted it in an international court. The Government got her award; she holds that money to-day by as good a title as any other that is in the Treasury. I say that it stands there coupled with a high moral trust, not a legal trust such as is set up here in behalf of the underwriters, growing out of subrogation, but a high moral trust to dispense it among actual sufferers, if they can be found. If they cannot be found, I have no hesitation in saying that the Government would be perfectly justifiable in covering every dollar of it into the Treasury and holding it, for under no circumstances can I ever be brought to believe that Great Britain would be lawfully entitled to a dollar of it again. lawfully entitled to a dollar of it again.

But we are asked here to enforce a special trust. We are asked here to confine ourselves to a certain class of claims and a certain class of losses. That argument will not do. The Government never intended to turn its back upon any of its own citizens. It never submitted to the tribunal at Geneva the question whether any of its citizens had a demand upon their own sovereignty. The question submitted was the right of this Government to reclamation from Great Britain, leaving all ulterior questions growing out of rights of property between this Government and its own people, and so intelligent are the British public that they realized that distinction.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes. Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. If it can be shown from the proceedings of the arbitrators at Geneva that the money which was paid to the United States was paid on account of a certain class of claimants and that the rights of other claimants were rejected and excluded by that court, would the Senator maintain that we should pay the money which we received on account of the claims allowed to those claimnots or should take it from them and new it to completely whose claimants or should take it from them and pay it to somebody whose claim ants or should take it from them and pay it to somebody whose claim was rejected, provided that can be shown from the record?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is that all?

Mr. CARPENTER. That is enough I guess for the present.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have no hesitation in answering that question. I say most emphatically that nothing that happened at Geneva previous to the rendition of the award, nothing in the way of production of evidence, no consideration of any particular class of claims, no interlocutory judgment of the tribunal, in my view, can affect in the least the power of this Government to deal absolutely with this fund. with this fund.

Mr. KERNAN. How as to the moral right, suppose we have the power, to put it into the Treasury?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When you come to moral right, that is a pretty hard thing to define. The human mind is so fearfully made that the moral standard of men is not the same, and I suppose it varies with governments.

Mr. CONKLING. I know the Senator will let me supplement the Senator from Wisconsin in his question. Suppose, as the treaty expressly provided it might, the tribunal had referred it to a board of pressly provided it might, the tribunal had referred it to a board of assessment to assess damages, and that board had gone on and counted up, one by one, these ships, so much each, and made a total, and on that made a report, would that restrain the Senator at all in doing what he pleased with this money?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It would not.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is logical; he is frank.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I stand on broad ground in regard to this

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is logical; he is Irank.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I stand on broad ground in regard to this fund. I said when I set out in my argument, that in no case within my knowledge was evidence adduced in a cause ever permitted after the judgment to control the disposition of the fund realized. I said that this was a great lawsuit beween two nations in which $15,500,000 was recovered by the United States; and that it has the power to deal with that fund at its own pleasure.

Mr. President, this proposed legislation is very remarkable. The bill undertakes to do what I do not remember ever knowing or hearing of having been done before. It may have happened, but my experience is very limited. The law of 1874, as I understand, expired by its own limitations. It is now dead for all legal purposes. It is as if it had never existed. The bill of the Judiciary Committee proposes to revive that law for the purpose of repealing one of its most essential provisions. I think it is well enough to let a dead lion alone. In 1874 the Congress of the United States in the exercise of its wisdom passed a statute, now upon the statute-book, regulating and controlling and defining the principle of distribution applicable to at least a part of this fund. That law was carried out honestly, faithfully, and I believe to the satisfaction of everybody so far as it went. Why should it be revived in order to be killed? If it was the purpose of the Judiciary Committee to establish a new principle of distribution when the statute is a revived and distribution when the statute is a revived and distribution applicable to at the state of the Judiciary Committee to establish a new principle of distribution when the statute is a revived and distribution when the statute is a revived and distribution when the statute is a revived and the states are the statute is a revived and the states are the statute is a revived and the states are the statute is a revived and the states are the statute is a revived and the states are the statute went. Why should it be revived in order to be killed? If it was the purpose of the Judiciary Committee to establish a new principle of distribution, why not do it? But here the statute is revived and made to live for a moment just for the privilege of killing it. "The twelfth section of the act of 1874," says this bill, "is hereby revived;" and the moment it comes into life the bill then says, "it is hereby repealed." Why is that? What is the logical and legal purpose of that proceeding? It might raise a very nice question for a court to pass upon, that this dead statute which put aside the claims of the underwriters in 1874 is suddenly revived with that principle of distribution limited, and when the Senate gets it up here, it knocks it in the head as if it were in the power of impotent man to annihilate the the head as if it were in the power of impotent man to annihilate the past. That is beyond the power of the Almighty. Why not leave the record as it is? The tribunal which decided on these claims no doubt will want in after ages to see the authority for their enactments. They do not want to see that the statute under which these underwriters were excluded was repealed by a subsequent Congress after all the judgments had been rendered and their duties fully completed. Mr. President, it does seem to me a most extraordinary proceeding, to be serious about it, that this learned committee should revive an old statute, or at least a section of an old statute, for nothing in the world but to turn around and repeal it the instant that it is brought into being.

Last evening's discussion was a little instructive; and when the Senator from Maine reminded the Senators from Ohio and Delaware that in one part at least of this bill they were departing from their own principle of distribution, I do not think he went far enough. I do not think he stated that that very provision of the act which was intended to bring in losses occasioned by exculpated cruisers was in effect a provision essentially intended, as I think, to give the whole fund to the underwriters.

Mr. BLAINE. That is very plain on the face of the bill. I concur with my friend from Florida that it is $2 to the insurance company and one possible dollar to the ship-owner.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. After providing for the first time that this fund shall go, at least $8,000,000 of it according to the lowest calculation, into the coffers of the underwriters on account of losses for which compensation was refused under the act of 1874, it then proceeds to give them a right to get $2,000,000 or more additional out of losses sustained by the exculpated cruisers, so that in effect the bill would give the whole of this fund to these corporations, notwithstanding a little equity might be supposed to be intended to come from the last provision in behalf of the poor fellows who suffered by the exculpated cruisers and who had no insurance.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator misunderstands the bill, if he will

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator misunderstands the bill, if he will allow me to correct him, when he supposes that in regard to vessels destroyed by the exculpated cruisers the bill gives the insurance companies any preference whatever.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It gives them no preference; I did not say "preference;" but it gives them a standing, after giving a preference to them to the amount of $8,000,000 in the first class, for they come in and get nearly the whole there. Then in regard to this little pool that is left, they are permitted to come in then, side by side with the poor, uninsured, exculpated losers—I do not know how else to call them.

Mr. ALLISON. How much would be left?
Mr. JONES, of Florida. Two or three million dollars. I think the first provision of the bill, or that part which recognizes the underwriters as the first class, would give them $8,000,000; and then I suppose $3,000,000 would be left, and they would get $2,000,000 of that, leaving $1,000,000 for the fellows on the outside. I supposed from the debate which occurred here yesterday evening that this residuary fund was intended to go altogether to the exculpated losers; but in that I was mistaken. but in that I was mistaken.

but in that I was mistaken.

Mr. President, I do not look for absolute consistency in anything in this life. I am one of the men who take a practical view of everything; and when so much is said about the terrible charges that have been paid in war premiums, I ask in all seriousness if these very underwriters have not received payment for war premiums under the act of 1874? They were permitted to come in under the act of 1874 and show that their losses exceeded their receipts from all sources. If they could show that their losses, even by the exculpated cruisers, exceeded their war premiums, they had a right to go before the commission and prove up the difference. They did go, many of them, but there are very few that could make the showing. I have got the record of one case here which they proved up under the act of 1874. The Commercial Mutual Insurance Company got a judgment for $45,247.12, the difference between the amount of their losses, including captures by all the cruisers, and the amount of the receipts on $40,247.12, the difference between the amount of their losses, including captures by all the cruisers, and the amount of the receipts on war premiums. The balance in their favor was $45,247.12. In this item they recovered $30,599.83 for war premiums on reinsurance. Of course lawyers all know what that means. After having taken risks on vessels subject to capture by confederate cruisers, they then went and reinsured their own risks, dividing them up, upon which they paid war premiums, and they included those premiums in their demands under the act of 1874, and got them paid out of this Geneva fund.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let us understand him there?

Does he mean anything more than that in making up a balance-sheet of profit and loss they took into the account those payments?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is enough for the purpose of my ar-

Mr. CONKLING. I submit to the honorable Senator that it was of course a necessity for them to do that unless they meant to make up a false account, on the single issue of whether they made profits or not, and if so how much. How could they make a trial balance without putting in the honest increment of cost and elements of profit?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That may all be true. I was arguing to show that the Government had dealt fairly with them in permitting them to do that.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood the Senator to say that they made a claim and recovered for that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It was included in their bill of losses. In

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It was included in their bill of losses. In making up their bill of losses they said, "we paid $30,000 or more for war premiums on reinsurance, and we want it back;" and they got it back. That is the whole of it.

Mr. THURMAN. What company was that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Commercial Mutual Insurance Company. There were several of them that did the same thing.

Mr. THURMAN. Some of them that lost money.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There were a few that lost money. I think there were $111,000 altogether paid out to the forty-five insurance companies engaged in this business. There were two or three that lost, and they were permitted to come in and show their losses and get the difference. I think that after this they ought not to be permitted to come in again. I think that if we recognize any law here, we ought to recognize the principle of res adjudicata, and that those claimants to recognize the principle of res adjudicata, and that those claimants who accepted the provisions of the law of 1874, proved up under it, received their balances, and gave their receipts in full, ought not now to be permitted to have a new law passed for their benefit and to set on foot a set of distinct claims against this fund to the exclusion of other parties.

Mr. President, this question, so far as it respects the duties and the powers of the Government over the fund, narrows itself down to a question of comparative equity between the claimants. I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion there is no equity, there is no law, under which the underwriter can maintain a claim to this fund. On the other hand, I do think that so far as the citizens who suffered losses by the exculpated cruisers are concerned, those who have not made money during the war, and those who have paid large war premiums, they are entitled to consideration. In dealing out this fund, which I think it is the duty of the Government to do, I would recognize the rights of those men who had no insurance upon their ships which were captured by confederate vessels of war and destroyed, and if there was enough left after that I would give it to that class of citizens who were compelled, as has been well said, to maintain themselves in competition with the commercial powers of the world at an enormous sacrifice in the way of war premiums.

I have some private papers in my possession now which I will not detain the Senate by reading, which go to show that during that period the ship-owner was not only required to pay heavy war premiums upon the shipper's goods, that he could not do his business in competition with Great Britain, with France, with any power on earth that had a commercial marine not subject to capture, unless he paid a high suffered losses by the exculpated cruisers are concerned, those who war premium upon his vessel, and in addition to that paid the insurance premium upon the goods that he carried, and then performed the service at a less rate. I say that a man who did that is entitled to consideration; he is an actual loser; he has an equity which the insurance companies have not; and I understand that they have made no concealment of their vast gains from this special business of ma-

The insurance during the war.

It has been intimated time and again that these poor ship-owners reaped a golden harvest. How was it possible for them to have done it? Seven-eighths of the commerce of the world was against them; it? Seven-eighths of the commerce of the world was against them; there was a bare one-eighth under the American flag; and is it possible that one-eighth of the commerce of the world could control seven-eighths of it under foreign flags and could dictate terms and make vast sums of money? That is the argument, that if they had not made money they could not have kept their ships afloat. I do not think there is much in that; and that class of claims from every view that I have given to this subject are entitled to equitable consideration before Congress; and where the family ship, as she has been called, built in coparenary by the sons and the father and the san in law and named after the family, was kept afloat at the sacson-in-law, and named after the family, was kept affoat at the sac-rifice of high premiums at a time like that, no matter how much we may have differed in the past about the war or the causes of the war, may have differed in the past about the war or the causes of the war, when it comes to equity and justice, the man who kept that ship afloat under his flag on the high seas by the payment of exorbitant premiums into the coffers of the insurance companies, out of which they grew rich—I say in competition with other claims that claim has a superior equity on this fund, and so far as I am concerned, so far as my vote goes, I will endeavor in the passage of any bill looking to an equitable disposition of this fund to carry relief home only to those quarters where actual suffering and actual loss occurred.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, the speech of the learned Senator from Florida, [Mr. Jones,] who has just taken his seat, is a fortunate contribution to this debate. He is a good lawyer, he is a good logician, and his speech is a frank confession that upon every principle of common honesty heretofore known and recognized among men, upon every mon honesty heretofore known and recognized among men, upon every principle of law and equity, as administered in the courts of all civilized countries, these insurance companies are entitled to the money this Government received on their claims. To escape that conclusion, which he has determined to do at all events, he is driven to say that the Senate of the United States in distributing this fund is bound neither by law nor equity. This reminds me of a letter I received during the war from Colonel Saunders, of the Nineteenth Wisconsin Regiment, who had been appointed a judge of some military court created by General Butler at Norfolk, in which he wrote me that he was the judge of a court with undefined jurisdiction and unlimited was the judge of a court with underned jurisdiction and unlimited power; that he rendered his judgments in the morning and his corporal and his guard enforced them in the afternoon.

This is substantially the jurisdiction the Senator from Florida deliberately and calmly declares the Senate should exercise in disposing of this fund.

The speech of the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,]

The speech of the honorable Senator from Himois, [Mr. DAVIS,] more like the opinion of a judicial tribunal than a campaign speech, (for it lacked all the clap-trap which the latter must always contain,) seems to have carried conviction to the Senator from Florida as a lawyer, that these insurance companies were entitled to the money which the Government had received on their account. He was therefore driven, in order to justify a vote against their right, to deny that we, in distributing this fund, are bound to consider whose money it is, or for whom we received it.

, without going over the same ground covered by the Senator Now, without going over the same ground covered by the Senator from Illinois, let me say that his speech upon the right of the insurance companies to be paid the money which we received for them, or, at all events, on their claims, I indorse fully; indeed it seems to me to be unanswerable. I am confirmed in this opinion from the fact that nobody has attempted to answer it.

The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] in two very able, ingenious, and scholarly speeches, has contested the right of insurance companies upon the ground, as I understand him, that the award was made to the United States as a nation, and that the claims of the insurance companies, and indeed all individual claims, were presented to the arbitrators in aggravation of damages, or as a measure of damage suffered by the United States as a nation at the hands of Great Britain during our late civil war. The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who always speaks like a lawyer, contests the right of the insurance companies to any part of this fund upon the ground, as I understand him, that Great Britain was a belligerent of the United States in regard of the inculpated cruisers, and consequently the award was made as indemnity to us in our national character, and not for or on behalf of private claimants. It will thus be seen that the real difference between the Senator from Illinois and these Senators is one of fact, the Senator from Illinois contending that the award was made upon individual claims; while they contend for

I shall endeavor to show that the theory of the Senator from Illinois is the correct one, and if this can be shown no lawyer will contend against the conclusions at which the Senator from Illinois arrived. I submit to the Senate that the speech of the Senator from Illinois was not only correct as to the facts of the case but is sound in law, as it certainly is perfect in style. This question ought not to be disposed of by main strength. We have the power—drawing the proper distinction between power and right—to do what we please with all the money in the Treasury. We may give it to a foreign nation, we may give it to the poor, we may pay it to pensioners, we may do anything we please with it so far as the mere question of power is concerned; but when we come to consider the principles of equity applicable to this case and the moral obligation that rests upon us in every act we perform, different questions are presented; and the speech of the Senator from Illinois was an appeal to the reason and the conscience of the Senate. It was not addressed to the galleries. I do not remember that it elicited any of that applause which so constantly attends the legal arguments of some Senators upon this question; but it did find a lodgment in the mind of every man who question; but it did find a lodgment in the mind of every man who thinks that the Senate ought to consider this question and dispose of it according to the recognized principles of common honesty.

Now, Mr. President, at the risk of being somewhat tedious I intend to show that the $15,500,000 awarded by the Geneva tribunal and paid by Great Britain to us was for and on account of the private and individual claims of citizens of the United States, and for nothing also, that these claims were specifically stated, were recognized. ing else; that these claims were specifically stated, were presented to the tribunal, and formed the basis of the award. The money was paid to us, and a large part of the money is now in our possession, on account of the claims of individual claimants.

In the first place, what was our claim against Great Britain? we making a claim against her as a belligerent power, and did she submit to that claim and go to arbitration, and pay us fifteen and a-half millions of dollars in her character as a belligerent, as a fine imposed by the court upon her in her belligerent character? Was Great Brit-ain a belligerent? Her minister was at our capital, our minister was ain a belligerent? Her minister was at our capital, our minister was at her court. The commerce between the two nations was uninterrupted. We were constantly appealing to her for redress upon the ground that we were at peace with her. When did Great Britain ever, in her character as a belligerent, submit to a fine imposed upon her without a fight? Great Britain, as a belligerent nation, coming to her knees without the loss of a man, or a blood spot upon the deek of her ships, will not be believed. Can anybody in his senses maintain that we were dealing with Great Britain as a belligerent? It would be hardly more disgraceful to her than it would be to us to assume that we dealt with her as a belligerent upon such principles and in such a manner. Why did we not sue the rebels of the South during those years, and ask them to appoint arbitrators to hear the issue between us, and determine how much they should pay? That was not the way we dealt with them. We recognized them as belligerents and went for them; we found them, and conquered them. ligerents and went for them; we found them, and conquered them. So we would have treated England if we had regarded her as a belligerent.

But passing from the general aspect of the question, which is sufficiently conclusive, let us look at the record of this case; and here I must apologize to the Senate for pursuing, perhaps, somewhat the methods of a lawyer. I know it is an offense to be a lawyer in the opinion of some Senators; and my friend from Maine [Mr. Blaine] opinion of some Senators; and my friend from Maine [Mr. Blaine] always has his opponent at a disadvantage when he can charge him with being a lawyer. He knows nobody can retaliate that charge upon him. He has two or three times in this debate singled me out for ridicule for being a lawyer. Mr. President, what is the law? What are the principles of law and equity as administered in the courts? And what are lawyers? The law and the principles of equity recognized among all civilized nations are the result of central control of the courts. turies of human experience in the earnest endeavor to arrive at those turies of human experience in the earnest endeavor to arrive at those principles which are indispensable to the enforcement of common honesty among men. The most upright and learned men of all civilized nations, especially of England and America, have long been devoting their best efforts to this subject, and the law is the result of their labors. And what is a lawyer? I do not speak of a pettifogger, a shyster, or a rogue, but of one who may point to his past record, and without blush or shame say, "I am a lawyer." What is he? He is one who has devoted his best abilities, whatever they are, to the investigation of those principles which will insure honesty in the dealings of men, the best methods of ascertaining the truth in regard to a particular transaction, and the application of the general rules of law to the facts when ascertained. of law to the facts when ascertained.

Now, is not that what we want to do here? Do we not wish to ascertain what are the facts of this case? Do we not want to know what common honesty requires us to do? If we do not propose to fold our arms like the Senator from Florida and say that by main strength, without regard to justice or equity, we will do what we please, then the method which I propose to pursue will not be condemned by the Senator. the Senate.

Turning now to the record in this case, how does it stand? Here let me refer to a letter of December 30, 1862, from Mr. Adams, our minister to England, to Earl Russell, found in volume 3 of the Claims of the United States, at pages 94 and 95:

Having, for particular reasons, forborne to use all the means in our power for the restitution of the three vessels mentioned in my letter of August 7, the President thought it incumbent on the United States to make compensation for them; and though nothing was said in that letter of other vessels taken under like circumstances and brought in after the 5th of June, and before the date of that letter, yet, where the same forbearance had taken place, it was and is his opinion that compensation would be equally due.

To explain this letter I should have stated in advance that Mr.

Adams bases our claim upon the principles declared by Great Britain in regard to depredations upon her commerce from our shores in 1794:

in regard to depredations upon her commerce from our shores in 1794:

From these words the deduction appears to be inevitable that the principle of compensation in the case derived its only force from the omission by the United States to prevent a wrong done to the commerce of a nation with which they were at peace. So, likewise, may be it reasonably urged in the present case, that the omission of Her Majesty's government, upon full and seasonable notice, to carry into effect the provisions of its own law designed to prevent its subjects from inflicting injuries upon the commerce of nations with which it is at peace, renders it justly liable to make compensation to them for the damage that may ensue.

That the British government of that day did consider itself equitably entitled to full indemnity, not simply for the hostile acts of Frenchmen in American ports, but for the loss and damage suffered on the high seas by reason of assistance rendered to them by citizens of the United States, will clearly appear by reference to the fourth article of the project of a treaty proposed by Lord Grenville to Mr. Jay, on the 30th of August, 1794. The words are these:

"And it is further agreed, that if it shall appear that, in the course of the war, loss and damage has been sustained by His Majesty's subjects by reason of the capture of their vessels and merchandise, such capture having been made either within the limits of the jurisdiction of the said States, or by vessels commanded or owned by the citizens of the said States, the United States will make full satisfaction for such loss or damage, the same being to be ascertained by commissioners in the manner already mentioned in this article."

If, by the preceding representation, I have succeeded in making myself clearly understood by warm lordwhat the present in the proceding representation.

being to be ascertained by commissioners in the manner already mentioned in this article."

If, by the preceding representation, I have succeeded in making myself clearly understood by your lordship, then will it, I flatter myself, be made to appear that in both these cases, that in 1794 as well as that in 1862, the claim made rests on one and the same basis, to wit, the reparation by a neutral nation of a wrong done to another nation with which it is at peace, by reason of a neglect to prevent the cause of it originating among its own citizens in its own ports.

The high character of Lord Grenville is a sufficient guarantee to all posterity that he never could have presented a proposition like that already quoted, except under a full conviction that it was founded on the best recognized principles of international law. Indeed, it is most apparent, in the face of the preamble, that even the statute law of both nations on this subject is but an attempt to give extraordinary efficacy to the performance of mutual obligations between States which rest on a higher and more durable basis of justice and of right. It was on this ground, and on this alone, that Lord Grenville obtained the concessions then made of compensation for damage done to her commerce on the high seas by belligerent cruisers fitted out in the ports of the United States. I shall never permit myself to believe that Her Majesty's government will be the more disposed to question the validity of the principle thus formally laid down, merely from the fact that in some cases it may happen to operate against itself.

So, Mr. President, it will be seen that in this letter from Mr. Adams, our

So, Mr. President, it will be seen that in this letter from Mr. Adams, our minister in England, to Earl Russell, the very ground upon which we based our claim against Great Britain was, not that she was a belligerent, but that she was a neutral power, and had not performed her duties as a neutral power, and we enforced our argument by showing that in the time of the French revolution England made preing that in the time of the French revolution England made precisely the same claim upon us, and we yielded to that claim and indemnified England for the damage to her commerce committed by ships that were fitted out on our shores. Regarding the letter of Mr. Adams to Earl Russell, Mr. Seward wrote to Mr. Adams, in the same volume, page 113, fully indorsing the doctrine which Mr. Adams laid down in the letter to Earl Russell.

You have properly replied to Earl Russell's note, and cleared up the argument of the case by a paper which seems to the President as convincing as it is calm and truthful.

The next thing entitled to consideration in the record of this case is the treaty itself. The treaty contains three principles which the parties stipulated should be taken to be the rules upon which Great Britain should stand or fall in the controversy before the arbitrators. Great Britain claimed that it was not an exact statement of the law of nations as previously recognized, but she agreed to be bound by those rules in this case.

These rules were:

These rules were:

A neutral government is bound—
First, to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping, within its jurisdiction, of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or to carry on war against a power with which it is at peace; and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted, in whole or in part, within such jurisdiction, to warlike use.

Secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men.

Thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and, as to all persons within its jurisdiction, to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties.

These were the principles which the treaty itself eater blicked for

These were the principles which the treaty itself established for the government of the tribunal, and they all relate to the duties of a neutral nation. We were proceeding in that arbitration against Great Britain as a neutral nation, not as a belligerent, and for that reason all the argument based upon belligerency goes for nothing.

Again, it should be remembered that if we had been treating Great Britain and proceeding against her as a belligerent at that arbitration, the claims which were finally decided to be indirect claims, that is the enhanced war premiums, the cost of carrying on the war, the cost of destroying these cruisers, &c., would have been the direct claims. We have an illustration of this in the late war between Gerclaims. We have an illustration of this in the late war between Germany and France. Germany having got the advantage of France made her demand for the expenses of the war. She decided the question as a belligerent, against France as a belligerent, and enforced it with gunpowder, not by argument. She did not call for an arbitration; she declared how much would compensate her for the cost of the war and demanded it of France, and with her guns trained on Paris the treaty was concluded and the money was subsequently paid.

Before the Alabama treaty was made, immediately after the termination of our civil war, the State Department issued a circular to all claimants for injuries committed by foreign nations; and as it is an important document, I will ask the Clerk to read it

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 2, 1865.

Department of State,

Washington, September 2, 1865.

Citizens of the United States having claims against foreign governments, not founded on contract, which may have originated since the 5th of February, 1853, will, without any delay which can be avoided, forward to this Department statements of the same, under outh, accompanied by the proper proof.

The following rules, which are substantially those which have been adopted by commissions organized under conventions between the United States and foreign governments for the adjustment of claims, are published for the information of citizens of the United States having claims against foreign governments, of the character indicated in the above notification; and they are advised to conform as nearly as possible to these rules in preparing and forwarding their papers to the Department of State.

Each claimant should file a memorial, setting forth minutely and particularly the facts and circumstances from which the right to prefer such claims is denied by the claimant; and it should be verified by his or her oath or affirmation.

The memorial and all the accompanying papers should be written upon foolscap paper, with a margin, of at least one inch in width on each side of the page, as in this circular, so as to admit of their being bound in volumes for preservation and convenient reference; and the pages should succeed each other like those of a book, and be readable without inverting them.

When any of the papers mentioned in Rule II are known to have been already furnished to the Department by other claimants, it will be unnecessary to repeat them in a subsequent memorial. Nor is it necessary, where several vessels have been captured by the same cruiser, to repeat in each memorial the circumstances in respect to the equipment, arming, manning, flag, dc., of such cruiser, which are relied upon as the evidence of the responsibility of a foreign government for her tortious acts. 3. Whether the claimant is now a citizen of the United States, and, if so, whether he is a native or naturalized citizen, and where is now his domicile; and if he claims in his own right, then whether he was a citizen when the claim had its origin, and where was then his domicile; and if he claims in the right of another, then whether he was a citizen when the claim had its origin, and where was then his domicile; and if he claims in the right of another, then whether have a subject of the government of such country, or had taken any oath of allegiance thereto.

Mr. CARPENTER. Immediately after the treaty was concluded.

Mr. CARPENTER. Immediately after the treaty was concluded the Department issued another circular, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Department of State,
Washington, September —, 1871.

Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the — instant and its Signary of the second of the s

Mr. CARPENTER. The object of issuing these circulars was to inform claimants of the steps they must take to secure the intervention of our Government on their behalf. The proof was to be taken by the claimants at their own expense and furnished to the Department that the complement was the second control of the complement of the compl ment. Is it not a cruel sarcasm upon these claimants now to declare that this expense was to be borne by them, not for their benefit but for the benefit of the nation at large? Is not this adding insult by us to the injury they have suffered from foreign nations? The laws of Congress authorize our citizens to enter into negotiations with for-eign nations for indemnity against injury suffered at their hands. (Revised Statutes, section 5335.) It is certain that no individual claim-ant would hereafter be listened to by Great Britain in regard to a claim presented by our Government, adjudicated by the tribunal at Geneva, and paid by Great Britain. And yet it is claimed that, although they are estopped by the award and its payment, still they are not entitled to the money awarded and paid to our Government in full satisfaction of their claims, and that our Government is under no obligation to pay them. A more flagrant scheme for confiscation could not be suggested.

Suggested.

After these circulars were issued and the claimants had presented their claims and proof to the Department our Government made up and submitted to the arbitrators a statement of our case against Great Britain. That case embodied—and I read from the condensation made by the Senator from Illinois in his speech, which will not be disputed by anybody—the following claims:

First. Claims on behalf of the Government of the United States itself, to wit: A. Claims for the destruction of vessels and property belonging to the Government.

B. The national expenditures in the pursuit of the cruisers.

C. The loss in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British fiag.

D. The prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion.

Second. Claims on behalf of individuals, namely:

A. Claims for the destruction of vessels and property belonging to individuals.

B. Claims for damages or injuries to persons growing out of the destructions of

C. The enhanced payments of insurance, or war premiums.

The claims on behalf of the Government and the claims on behalf of individuals were separately presented to that arbitration. In volume 7 of the appendix to the case of the Geneva arbitration, on page 117, is a detailed statement of the claims on behalf of the United States as a nation, which were submitted as part of our case to that tribunal. Then on page 149 is another detailed statement of the claims of individual citizens of the United States presented to the tribunal, and this statement is prefaced from the State Department with the following note:

In presenting the following list of claims, interest has not been calculated or stated. The United States will ask the tribunal to award them interest on all claims which may be allowed, to be calculated from the date of damage done to each claimant to the date of final payment.

When a paper is herein referred to as a protest, invoice, bill of lading, assignment, &c., the original paper so referred to is on file in the Department of State at Washington. When a paper is referred to as a sworn memorial or affidavit the original is on file in the Department, with a notarial certificate or other proper proof that the person signing the same has made oath that the same is true; and where the words "certified copy" are used, they imply that a copy of the original is on file in the Department, duly certified before a notary public, or other public officer qualified to give such certificate under his hand and seal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Washington, October 4, 1871.

The claims presented in the name of the United States as a nation amounted to $3,400,887, as will be found in volume 7 of this appendix, at page 147. The claims of the citizens of the United States presented in a separate list amounted to $19,021,428.61, as will be found at page 247 of the same volume. Great Britain objected to the indirect claims and asked for an adjournment before the arbitration for the purpose of attempting by negotiation to obtain a modification of the treaty. This negotiation was begun before the third meeting of the abitrators at Geneva, and while progressing Mr. Fish wrote Mr. Schenck as follows, and this letter may be found in volume 2 of papers, pages 475, 476:

APRIL 23, 1872.

Neither the Government of the United States, nor, so far as I can judge, any considerable number of the American people have attached much importance to the so-called "indirect claims," or have ever expected or desired any award of damages on their account.

The United States now desire no pecuniary award on their account. You will not fail to have noticed that through the whole of my correspondence we ask no damages on their account; we only desire a judgment which will remove them for all future time as a cause of difference between the two governments. In our opinion they have not been disposed of, and unless disposed of in some way they will remain to be brought up at some future time to the disturbance of the harmony of the two governments.

of the two governments.

The United States are sincere in desiring a "tabula rasa" on this Alabama question, and therefore they desire a judgment upon them by the Geneva tribunal.

This letter was written while negotiations were pending between Great Britain and this Government for a modification of the treaty so as to exclude them. Mr. Fish here distinctly declared that neither our Government nor any considerable portion of our people make any claim on that account. That is the Government demands nothing on the indirect claims, but wishes to have them disposed of by the judgment of the arbitrators, so as to remove them as a disturbing element in the relations between the two nations. The arbitrators on the 19th of June, 1872, made their decision excluding these claims; and now Lock the Search representations or not a 19th of June, 1872, made their decision excluding these claims; and now I ask the Secretary to read, commencing on page 19, the decision made by the arbitrators upon these indirect claims which our Government said we were simply anxious to have disposed of so that they would be no longer a bone of contention between the two na-before the arbitrators, the president of the tribunal (Count Solopis) proposes to make the following communication on the part of the arbitrators to the parties interested:

The arbitrators wish it to be understood that in the observations which they are about to make they have in view solely the application of the agent of Her Britannic Majesty's government, which is now before them, for an adjournment, which might be prolonged till the month of February in next year; and the motives for that application, namely, the difference of opinion which exists between Her Britannic Majesty's government and the Government of the United States as to the competency of the tribunal, under the treaty of Washington, to deal with the claims advanced in the case of the United States in respect of losses under the several heads of, first, "the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag;" second, "the enhanced payments of insurance;" and third, "the prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion;" and the hope which Her Britannic Majesty's government does not abandon, that if sufficient time were given for that purpose, a solution of the difficulty which has thus arisen, by the negotiation of a supplementary convention between the two governments, might be found practicable. The arbitrators do not propose to express or imply any opinion upon the point thus in difference between the two governments as to the interpretation or effect of the treaty; but it seems to them obvious that the substantial object of the adjournment must be to give the two governments an opportunity of determining whether the claims in question shall or shall not be submitted to the decision of the arbitrators, and that any difference between the two governments an opportunity of determining whether the claims in question shall or shall not be submitted to the decision of the arbitrators, and that any difference between the two governments and provide of to decide thereon.

With a view to the settlement of the other claims to the consideration of which by the tribunal no exception has been taken on the part of Her Britannic Majesty's government, the arbitrators have thought it desirable to lay before the parties this expression of the views they have formed upon the question of public law involved, in order that after this declaration by the tribunal it may be considered by the Government of the United States whether any course can be adopted respecting the first-mentioned claims which would relieve the tribunal from the necessity of deciding upon the present application of Her Britannic Majesty's government. Count Sclopis added that it was the intention of the tribunal that this statement should be considered for the present to be confidential.

Mr. CARPENTER. Bear in mind that Mr. Fish writes to Mr. Schenck that we do not expect any damages for these indirect claims, but we merely want them disposed of; then the solemn decision of the arbitrators themselves that they were not claims that could be considered, but must be rejected by them; then that the United States submit to that as a definite and final determination of all those claims, including the enhanced war premiums. Now read what Mr. Bancroft Davis said to the arbitrators on page 21.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk Fead as follows:

The declaration made by the tribunal, individually and collectively, respecting the claims presented by the United States for the award of the tribunal for: first, "the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag;" second, "the enhanced payments of insurance;" and third, "the prolongation of the war and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion," is accepted by the President of the United States as determinative of their judgment upon the important question of public law involved.

The agent of the United States is authorized to say that, consequently, the abovementioned claims will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal by the United States, and may be excluded from all consideration in any award that may be made.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now the Senate will see distinctly the decis-Mr. CARPENTER. Now the Senate will see distinctly the decision of the arbitrators that these enhanced war premiums were not a proper claim against Great Britain and must be excluded; then the statement made by our Government through its agent, Mr. Davis, that they would not further be pressed upon the arbitrators, that the President accepted the decision as a final determination of our right to make claim on their account. All Senators will see that that ended all laking for indirect decrease including the claim for rephanced war are claim for indirect damages including the claim for enhanced war premiums, and eliminated them from the case before the arbitrators. So if nothing else had occurred it would be perfectly clear that the award which was made was not intended to include war premiums. They were excluded; and whatever doubts there may be as to what was included in the award, there can be no doubt that war premiums were expressly excluded and that our Government made no further claim on their account.

At the next meeting of the arbitrators-and this is found in volume

Count Sclopis, on behalf of all the arbitrators, then declared that the said several claims for indirect losses mentioned in the statement made by the agent of the United States on the 25th instant and referred to in the statement just made by the agent of Her Britannic Majesty, are, and from henceforth shall be, wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal and directed the Secretary to embody this declaration in the protocol of this day's proceedings.

That certainly ends with intelligent and honest men all pretense that these enhanced war premiums entered into that award. They were expressly excluded by the preliminary decision of the arbitrators, then expressly waived by our Government, and then again authoritatively declared by the arbitrators to be no longer before them. So, as I said, whatever difference of opinion there may be about what is included, there can be no difference of opinion as to what was excluded, and this war-premium business was excluded from the consideration of the arbitrators, and forms no part of or basis for the award. That much is too plain for controversy.

Quotations have sometimes been made from the argument made on behalf of the United States before the arbitrators to show that we did claim payment for these indirect damages. That argument was and claim payment for these indirect damages. That argument was submitted to the arbitrators on the 15th of June and after they had considered it for five days they made their decision on the 19th of June saying they had carefully considered everything that had been urged on behalf of the United States and then proceeded to decide that the indirect claims were invalid. After that we withdrew the claims, and subsequently the arbitrators themselves formally declared that those claims were no longer before them. So that whatever may be said upon the question of our right to pursue Great Britain for these indirect claims, the answer to it all is that the argument was made, was considered by the tribunal to whom we had given juris-diction to settle it, was decided against us, we submitted to the decis-ion, withdrew the claims, and the arbitrators thereupon declared that those claims were no longer before them, expressly including in their rejection these enhanced war premiums. Nothing can be more certain than that the war premiums were no longer before the board of arbitrators and form no part of the award of fifteen and a half millions which was subsequently made.

The decision of the 19th of June, as the Senate will see, rejected

First, the losses in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag; second, the enhanced payments of insurance; and third, the prolongation of the war and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion.

On the 19th of August, 1872, the arbitrators having suggested that the United States should present a statement of figures relating to the claims which were still before them, such statement was presented. The entry in the protocol is as follows:

In compliance with a request of the tribunal, Mr. J. C. Bancroft Davis, as agent of the United States, and Lord Tenterden, as agent of Her Britannic Majesty, respectively, presented to the tribunal tables of figures relating to the losses for which compensation is claimed by the United States, with explanatory statements and observations.—Papers, vol. 4, p. 35.

This statement will be found in what is called the third volume of Papers at page 579, and I will ask the Secretary to read the introductory remarks made by our counsel in the statement itself, which was submitted to the tribunal at their request.

submitted to the tribunal at their request.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In accordance with the instructions of the tribunal, the agent and counsel of the United States have caused tables to be prepared, showing the differences which exist between the statements of claims and losses submitted to the tribunal on the part of the United States, for the estimates based on these statements which have been presented on the part of Great Britain.

The claims presented by the United States are supported by sworn statements presented by those who possess the necessary information, and they exhibit in detail the items which go to form the sum total, and the names of all who have made reclamation, whatever may be the sum which the tribunal may see fit to award. The claims on the part of private individuals thus computed, verified, and submitted are supported by all the guarantees of their good faith and their validity, as well for their general amount as for the other facts concerning them which governments are in the habit of requiring, in such cases, from their own citizens. It thus appears that these computations show the entire extent of all private losses which the result of the adjudications of this tribunal ought to enable the United States to make compensation for.

Mr. CARPENTER. It should be stated in this connection that this a single reference to anything but individual claims, including the claims of these insurance companies. That statement was objected to by Lord Tenterden on the part of Great Britain. Mr. Davis, in reply to the objection, in the fourth volume of the Papers, page 39, spoke in French, and I have had a Frenchman translate it, and I will

(a) The treaty comprehends all the claims of the United States which are designated under the generic title of "Alabama claims."
(b) The tribunal by its preliminary opinion, has limited the generality of the expression, in striking out certain claims for national losses made by the United States.

But, according to that opinion, the tribunal retains jurisdiction of the question of all the claims made by the United States in the interest of individual losers, and comprised under the generic title of "Alabama claims."

The losses of the officers, and in general of the crews, of captured ships are no less valid than those of the owners and insurers. Doubt is impossible in that re-

The United States make claim for all the individual shares of ships, whether the owner of the share, however small, makes claim or not, because the United States will be obliged to indemnify all the owners—

Mark the language-

Because the United States will be obliged to indemnify all the owners in case the tri-bunal shall award a gross sum to the United States. If this were not done there would be an evident injustice. The object of the treaty is to indemnify the United States for all losses suffered by their citizens, and not to impose a part of that in-demnification upon the United States themselves.

Our statement of the amount due our citizens, the individual claims, was $14,437,000, as is found in the fourth volume of Papers, so called, page 44. The English statement, criticising this, claimed that the amount to be allowed upon that statement for individual losses should be $7,074,000. That was the issue finally made up between Great Britain and the United States, and related solely to the amount which ought to be allowed on the statement of individual losses which Mr.

Britain and the United States, and related solely to the amount which ought to be allowed on the statement of individual losses which Mr. Davis had presented to the arbitrators, at their request; Great Britain claiming that it should be reduced to seven million and over, and we insisting upon the fourteen and a half million. Thereupon these statements were taken into consideration by the arbitrators, and constituted the only remaining subject for their determination.

I will not criticise the language of some Senators in regard to what subsequently took place. Here were these arbitrators, men of distinction and character from different nations sitting under a treaty which was intended to be the harbinger of peace to all nations and the prediction of better times to come to all the world, acting on their honor and their conscience. The Senator from Maine says that they did not know anything about it. They took the two statements of the claims, varying seven millions in amount, they went up into a mountain and chalked on a barn-door, and split the difference, and brought in an award of fifteen and a half millions against Great Britain. Why, Mr. President, if this was done, the arbitrators ought to be impeached, if they were the subjects of impeachment. They are disgraced and condemned in the opinion and by the voice of all honest men, if that is a fair statement of what they did. They were perpetrating a gross fraud. They were pretending to two independent nations that they were acting carefully and conscientiously in arriving at the precise amount that should be allowed for these individual claims presented by the United States against Great Britain and after ing at the precise amount that should be allowed for these individual claims presented by the United States against Great Britain, and after three months' examination of the claims, aided by experts, they fixed on the sum of fifteen and a half million dollars as the proper allow-But it is said this amount was arrived at not by careful consideration of the case, but by blundering, guessing, chalking on a barn-door, and splitting the difference.

The best opinion I can form from the statements furnished and the award is that the arbitrators allowed 6 per cent. interest. We pay but 4 per cent. either under the act of 1874 or as proposed in this bill. The difference between the 4 and the 6 per cent, will reduce the surplus probably to $100,000, showing with what accuracy the arbitrators made their calculation, and scanned the exact merits of the claim which we presented against Great Britain.

In this connection let me refer to the remarks of Mr. Pierce in the House of Representatives, made on the 29th of June, 1876. It is a short paragraph, and I will read it. Mr. Pierce was a member of the other House from Boston, a man whose integrity will cheerfully be vouched for by every Massachusetts Senator. He said, speaking of this capitation. this subject:

And in this connection I may be permitted to state that I have the word of one of the arbitrators at Geneva that the claims of the underwriters formed the basis of the award paid to this Government by Great Britain, and that the records of the court clearly show that fact.

Then as far as I have gone, Mr. President, I claim to have shown that the claim for enhanced war premiums was first declared by Mr. Fish to be of no consequence, and that it was pressed before the arbitrators only for the purpose of having it removed as a bone of contention between the two nations, and that we never expected any damages in consequence of it; then that the arbitrators themselves solemnly decided it to be invalid; next that Mr. Davis before the arbitrators withdrew them, or at all events submitted to the decision and said they would not be further insisted upon; then the public announcement of the arbitrators themselves that these claims would no longer be considered; and then, on the authority of Mr. Pierce, the declaration of Mr. Adams—I have no doubt he referred to Mr. Adams—that the claim of the underwriters formed the basis of the award and that the records of the court would show it.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will yield, I wish to move for an executive session.

Mr. CARPENTER. I give way.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for action at this time Senate bill No. 1489, to remove the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor, of New York.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The accompanying petition will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

KIMBERLY BROTHERS.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3290) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Kimberly Brothers, of Norfolk, Virginia, made a contract with the Secretary of the Navy for supplying the Marine Corps with rations for eight stations, to wit: Portsmouth, New Hampshire; Boston, Massachusetts; New York, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Annapolis, Maryland; Washington, District of Columbia; Norfolk, Virginia, and Mare Island, California, said contract bearing date the 11th day of June, 1879, and being for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1879; and

Whereas since making the said contract there has been an advance of the price of all articles entering into the rations thus to be supplied of about 50 per cent, so that the said Kimberly Brothers are now filling the said contract at a loss to them of about $50 per day: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine the accounts and vouchers of said Kimberly Brothers, and to make an allowance to the said contractors, above the contract price, as he may, under the circumstances, deem just and equitable.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to reserve a point of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brewer] objects.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Hence the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan would be equivalent to an objection.

SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4227) for the relief of settlers on public lands, that it may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. ATKINS. Let us hear it read.

The SPEAKER. The right of objection will be reserved.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That when a pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture claimant shall file a written relinquishment of his claim in the local land office, the land covered by such claim shall be held as open to settlement and entry without further action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancellation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of $1 for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the words, "and not to be reported."

Mr. ATKINS. Does this bill come from the Committee on the Public

Mr. VALENTINE. Yes, sir; it is a unanimous report from that committee.

Mr. DUNNELL. It is a very important bill.
Mr. PAGE. Let the report be read.
The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 4227, make the following report thereon, recommending certain amendments to be adopted, and that the bill do then pass:

Under the law and rulings of the General Land Office now in force, if a claimant holding an entry under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture act relinquishes his claim to said entry, in writing, to the Government, it must be first submitted to the local land office in which the land is situated, and by the register transmitted to the General Land Office, where such relinquishment is noted on the records of said office, and the entry of said tract is then canceled, and the register and receiver of the local land office notified of such cancellation, and the first legal applicant is entitled to enter the same. The first section of this bill proposes to make the land covered by said relinquishment immediately subject to entry upon the filing of such relinquishment at the local land office. In almost every instance where a claimant relinquishmes his claim it is for the reason that he has disposed of his improvements to some person who desires to re-enter the same. It now takes from three to six months to procure the cancellation of a voluntary relinquishment. This bill proposes to make it immediate. Under the present system, in very many instances, a party after buying the improvements and paying several hundred dollars therefor, is unable to enter the land by reason of the fact that some other party desiring to enter same procures the assistance of an attorney in Washington City, who telegraphs him information when cancellation is made. The passage of this bill will save great trouble and be of great practical benefit, both to the claimant and the Government, and in no case can work an injury to either. Under the present system a party who desires to contest and procure the cancellation of an entry is compelled to pay all expenses for same, made by himself or the claimant, and after doing so is often defeated in securing the land by reason of not being the first legal applicant. This bill proposes to secure to such contestant a reasonable time in which to make such entry.

The committee propose to amend this bill will require additional work upon the part of registers without addition

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to hear some explanation of the effect of this bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would be very glad to explain it, if the House

The SPEAKER. The report has been read. If the gentleman from Illinois desires further explanation, the Chair will submit to the House the question of consideration.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not want to object to the bill; but it is very evident that the House must take it entirely on faith. If other memevident that the House must take it entirely on faith. If other members of the House do not know anything more about it than I do, they know nothing about it.

Mr. SAPP. The bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on the Public Lands. Certainly it is a very judicious and important bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. Under the present law and the practice of the Land Office, when a party who has entered land under the pre-emp-tion, homestead, or timber-culture act desires to relinquish his claim the relinquishment must be submitted in the first instance to the register of the land office, by whom it is transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It takes three, six, or nine months to get a cancellation and to have the news of that cancellation sent back to the local land office. In a majority of cases where there is a voluntary relinquishment by a party holding a homestead or preemption entry it is by reason of the fact that he has sold out the imemption entry it is by reason or the fact that he has sold out the improvements on his land to some person coming in from the East, often getting as high as $500 or $1,000 for those improvements. Now, under the present system, while these papers are in Washington undergoing this long and tedious process of cancellation, some party near the land, finding that it has been relinquished, employs an attorney in the city of Washington, who visits the Land Office daily, who enters his name there as an attorney in the case. He receives notice when his name there as an attorney in the case. He receives notice when the entry is canceled, and immediately telegraphs to his man in the Western State or Territory, who watches the land office at its open-ing day after day; and in my own personal experience while regis-ter of a land office, I have known one man to be there thirty consecter of a land office, I have known one man to be there thirty consecutive days when the office was opened. This person, being the first legal applicant, makes entry and defeats the title of the man who has paid for the improvements on the land. Thus these attorneys or "land sharks" in this city have made hundreds and thousands of dollars out of the poor homestead settlers throughout the West.

I say to this House now some of those gentlemen have been to me and asked that I should not push the bill. It is a bill simply for the protection of settlers on the public lands, and every gentleman who has multic lands in his State or Territory will indorse it.

has public lands in his State or Territory will indorse it.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us pass it, then.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do the Committee on the Public Lands recommend it?

Mr. VALENTINE. Unanimously.
Mr. DUNNELL. A more beneficent bill was never presented to

Mr. SPARKS. Then let us pass it; and do not talk about it

The amendment of the committee was adopted; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engressed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

PRESERVATION OF PICTURE OF LA FAYETTE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized to ask unanimous consent for the introduction of a resolution looking to the preservation of the picture of La Fayette to the left of the Speaker's

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, if the House will listen to me a single moment I think there will be no objection. The venerable single moment I think there will be no objection. The venerable gentleman who was formerly Speaker of this House, and who was in the Hall but a few minutes ago, [Hon. Robert C. Winthrop,] called my attention to what I had not previously observed, that the picture of La Fayette which hangs on the walls of this House is in imminent danger of being destroyed. Gentlemen will notice it is blistering all over its surface. He tells me it is the only picture in the world of La Fayette by Ary Scheffer, painted from life at the time General La Fayette visited this country in 1824. It is the precious memorial by that great artist of that great subject, and is in the ownership and possession of this Government; whether owned by the House I do not know; but in a short time at the present rate of deterioration it will be ruined. I have therefore, Mr. Speaker, introduced a resolution directing the Joint Committee on the Library to report what steps are necessary to be taken in order to preserve it and the amount it will cost to put it in repair. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on the Library be directed to inquire what steps are necessary to cause the portrait of General La Fayette, now in the Hall of the House, to be renovated and protected from injury, and report what sum may be necessary for that purpos

Mr. CONGER. In reference to this portrait, Mr. Speaker, I understand that when General Cass was minister to France he procured this picture of General La Fayette and a duplicate of it. One of these is in possession of the Government here, and another was given by is in possession of the Government here, and another was given by General Cass to the State of Michigan, and now hangs in the hall of the house of representatives of that State. Whether the picture which is now here was a gift to the Government, or how it came into its possession, I do not know. COMMITTEE ON EXCISE REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House a communication from the Senate in reference to the appointment of a committee in regard to alleged losses of revenue.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States, April 13, 1880.

The President pro tempore appointed Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Kernan members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tay on cigars and other articles subject to excise duties.

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House the Chair announces the following appointments on said committee: Mr. Carlisle, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. Garfield.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the following petition of citizens of San Luis Obispo County, California, for amendment of patent laws so as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement, be printed in the RECORD, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Patents.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled :

of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas innocent users of patented articles are frequently threatened with prosecution as infringers; and

Whereas the existing patent laws are ineffectual in protecting such parties from the threats of the patentees, or owners of patents, or from the speculations of imposters: Therefore,

We, the citizens of San Luis Obispo County, State of California, do respectfully petition your honorable bodies so to amend these patent laws as to make the manufacturer or vendor of all such articles alone responsible for the infringement, and further so to amend them as to protect from penalty any person manufacturing for his own use any article previously patented; provided such manufacturer was not cognizant of the existence of the letters-patent.

And your petitioners would ever pray.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. PAGE. I ask also that the petition of citizens of San Luis Obispo County, California, for the enactment of such laws as will alleviate the oppressions of transportation monopolies now controlling the interstate commerce of our country be printed in the RECORD, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection it was ordered accordingly. The petition is as follows:

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the citizens of San Luis Obispo County, State of California, do most earnestly and persistently insist that the Congress of the United States enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon us by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of our country. Railroads, or railways, as they are severally styled, exact fluctuating and excessive rates of transportation both for freights and passengers, and in all such arbitrary exactions are a law unto themselves, being beyond the reach of State legislation, and heretofore unrestrained by congressional enactments.

While general prosperity pervades the land, agriculture, the corner-stone of our national progress, is depressed. The surplus of our farms is wrenched from us to enrich these giant monopolies. A buoyant market instantly enhances the freight rates of transportation, robbing the producer of well-earned profits, and levying upon the consumer unjust taxation. A depressed market maintains the previously enhanced freight rates, and in neither case do these common carriers attempt to promote the public weal.

The patience of an industrious, law-abiding people is sorely tried, and with anxiety they look for relief to your honorable bodies, from whom alone relief can come. That it will come in the near future we have every reason to hope. To hasten its coming, we respectfully urge upon your bodies the enactment of such laws as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges.

And your petitioners would ever pray.

MACHINISTS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. WELLS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill coming over from last evening's session, on which the previous question is prevailing. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5528) relating to machinists in the Navy.

Be it enacted, &c., That all men now serving in the Navy who may be discharged as machinists, with continuous-service certificates entitling them to honorable discharge, and those discharged in the said rating with such certificates since the 20th day of November, 1579, shall receive one-third of one year's pay as a machinist for each good-conduct badge they have received, or may receive, not exceeding three in number under the said certificates, the said gratuity to be received in lieu of re-enlistment as a machinist under such certificate, and to be in full and in lieu of all claims against the United States in connection therewith, for extra pay for re-enlisting or for continuous service, or for enlistment as a petty-officer; and the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment is as follows:

The amendment is as follows:

Add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the centistment of machinists in the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment. The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 31. Mr. McMILLIN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McMillin and Mr. Whitthorne were appointed.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It seems idle to cause the amendment to be again read, as there is so much confusion in the House. The Chair hopes there will be order while the amendment is being read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the House does not understand this bill.

Mr. BREWER. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The House is dividing. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 51.

Mr. McMILLIN. There ought to be a quorum to pass such an amendment, but I will not make the point of order now upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman waives the point of order. The amendment is agreed to.

The question recurred on the engrossment and third reading of the bill

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the chairman of the committee be permitted to state to the House exactly the nature of this bill. I do not think the House is sufficiently posted in reference to it as to be able to vote understandingly on it.

The SPEAKER. The bill was considered and fully debated last evening.

The question is now on the engrossment and third reading, and debate is not in order. Mr. McMILLIN. Upon that, if it is not subject to debate, I want the yeas and nays. Thirty thousand dollars is to be taken out of the the yeas and nays. Thirty thousand dollars is to be taken out of the Treasury as a gratuity.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the gentleman will not call the yeas and nays on the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. McMILLIN. No, sir; I will demand the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 158, nays 51, not voting 83; as follows:

On motion of Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, the papers in the case of William S. Grant were ordered to be taken from the Committee on War Claims and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLS. I now demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order will be the morning hour.
Mr. WELLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour to go on with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the consideration of private business to-day be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Whitthorne in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has notified the Chair that he desires to modify the amendment which he offered vesterday.

fied the Chair that he desires to modify the amendment which he offered yesterday.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I wish to modify the amendment by adding these words: "but this shall only apply to the regular annual lettings." I do that so as not to interfere with any special lettings that may be necessary. There may be an exigency requiring a special letting, and I do not wish this provision to interfere with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to modify his amendment. The Clerk will now read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1077 of the bill insert:

Provided, That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn flour, feed, cats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley, but this shall only apply to the regular annual lettings.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to two or three sections of the Revised Statutes. Section 3709 provides that

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the Clerk read the sections, so that all can

Mr. SCALES. I would inquire if the gentleman from Georgia pro-

Mr. SCALES. I would inquire it the gentleman from Georgia proposes to discuss the point, of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do propose to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order is the question now before the committee, and is the one to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is or should be addressing himself.

Mr. SCALES. I understood the gentleman to be discussing the marks of the amountment.

merits of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. I have not discussed anything yet. I desire to have the Clerk read some sections of the Revised Statutes bearing upon the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3709. All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, in any of the Departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles, or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract, at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged, between individuals.

SEC. 161. The head of each Department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his Department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the oustody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is evident from the first section read by the Clerk that there is legislation now on the statute-books looking toward the purchase of supplies under certain general requirements, such as advertising, &c. Then section 161, which has been read, gives the heads of Departments authority to make regulations for the execution of the duties of their Departments, not only in relation to purchases, but such other duties as may devolve upon them under operation of law.

Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is that in regard to the opening of bids for supplies of different kinds is that in regard to the opening of bids for supplies of different sinds the Department shall open those bids either in the Missouri River Valley or in the Mississippi Valley. It is to be made a matter of law that he shall open the bids and award the contracts either in the Missouri Valley or the Mississippi Valley. As the law now stands there is no restriction upon his discretion; he may, as he does, open the bids in New York City, in the Mississippi Valley, or in the Missouri Valley, or wherever in his judgment the good of the service

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. DUNNELL. Admitting the argument of the gentleman that the Secretary has the discretion now, I would ask him whether, when the star-route service bill was before the House, he did not claim that it was the duty of Congress to limit the exercise of the discretion of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did, for the reason that there were outrages and abuses which were well calculated to alarm this House. There were violations of law and misappropriations of the public money, which made it right and proper in that instance that we should regulate the discretion of that Department.

But in the present instance I undertake to say that these very requirements.

But in the present instance I undertake to say that these very regulations of the Departments, so far from being objectionable, are a matter of benefit to the Government, of economy and of advantage in any respect in which they can be considered. Therefore the observation of the gentleman has no application.

Now upon the question of economy. If I may be allowed the same latitude that has been allowed to others I will send two letters to the desk to be read upon the question of retrenchment. The first relates to a statement made by my friend from Kansas [Mr. Ryan] that these supplies are furnished by eastern men under the present regulations.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I do not want the gentleman to misrepresent me. I never stated that these contractors were eastern men; I never stated anything of the kind. My criticism upon the present system is that the contracts are awarded far from the fields of supplies, and therefore competition is prevented. Admit if you please that the contractors are western men; that is of no consequence in the consideration of this matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the five-minute rule obtain upon discussions

Mr. ATKINS. It is not usual to enforce the five-minute rule upon points of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I understand the rule, all debate upon points of order is within the discretion of the Chair. Mr. BLOUNT.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair, since he has been in the chair, has prescribed as a law to himself the five-minute rule upon points of order. The question being raised, the present chairman would say that he believes it to be a bad practice for any occupant of the chair to allow debate upon points of order. The Chair ought to decide points of order promptly and for himself, and only seek light from members of the House when he feels that he

The Chair will further remark that under a strict construction of parliamentary law he does not believe that it is in order to discuss a point of order at all. And if the committee will permit the present occupant of the chair arbitrarily to take the matter in hand now, he will say that he is himself satisfied with the discussion that has been had, and has obtained all the information that he is likely to get.

Mr. BLOUNT. With deference to the Chair, I would like to make a single statement—not in regard to the point of order. I stated yesterday that if the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Indian Department would recommend this legislation, I would withdraw the point of order. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. Scales] concurs entirely in the impropriety of this proposed legislation, and the committee refuses to recommend it.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. We were aware of that yesterday by the attitude which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Scales] took. It was not necessary for the gentleman from Georgia to inform us on the point.

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman is mistaken. Yesterday I was for the amendment. It was not until after consideration that I determined this morning to oppose it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say just one word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] unless the Chair decides not to hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Georgia, it seems to me, is wholly at fault in his idea that it is not competent for the House to regulate the manner in which an appropriation shall be disposed of or bids entertained and opened. Congress may have committed to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the power to make certain regulations, but it is at all times competent for Congress to modify those regulations or to declare that any particular regulation is not in the interest of the Government. The gentleman does not undertake to answer the main facts that are presented in connection with this proposition. The advantages to the Government have been demonstrated, and they have not been denied.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says that I have declined to reply. I remind him that I have not had an opportunity to do so. I was seeking to do so at the time I was cut off.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will not, then, answer the argument which the gentleman has not been allowed to make. But, as I said yesterday, I am unable to see why Congress may not direct the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to follow, in reference to advertising for bids and the letting of contracts, the same course that is pursued by the War Department. I am clear in the belief that a great many of the frauds which have arisen heretofore in the Indian Department have grown out of the fact that these contracts are in the grasp of a few; that they are not open to the entire people of the country. I think this amendment is so eminently proper that the Chair might justly give a liberal construction in order to entertain it.

The CHAIRMAN. Responding to the last remark of the gentleman, the Chair will say that he would like to be liberal, because he sympathizes with the object of the amendment; but in his view of the rule he is inhibited from entertaining it, and therefore sustains

the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL INCIDENTAL EXPENSES OF THE INDIAN SERVICE.

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Arizona: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, support and civilization of Indians at the Colorado River, Pima and Maricopa, and Moquis Pueblo agencies, $20,000, and pay of employés at same agencies, $16,000; in all, $36,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] who has charge of this bill a question as to the necessity of wells] who has charge of this bill a question as to the necessity of making appropriations in this way for the "general incidental expenses of the Indian service." The same objection applies here as in the case already brought to the attention of the Committee of the Whole. This appropriation is general in its character; and I think that the discretion of the officers of this Department—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman the propriety of offering an amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph, because I cannot see why we should make so indefinite an appropriation as this for "general incidental expenses." I see several succeeding paragraphs are in the same language. In my view these appropriations ought to be specific. I am very well aware that there is a necessity for giving considerable discretion to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But to appropriate these large same of money, amounting under the former head to some these large sums of money, amounting under the former head to some $300,000 or $400,000, and probably to the same amount under this, is giving to these officers a discretion in the expenditure of this money for which I do not see any necessity.

I think it ought to be specifically stated what these "incidental expenses" are, for what agencies they are to be paid out and how they are to be paid. The authority given to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under this provision is unlimited the secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under this provision is unlimited. ited. I cannot see any necessity for such vast discretion in the mode of expenditures. If money is necessary for the support and civiliza-tion of Indians at the Colorado River, Pima and Maricopa, and Moquis Pueblo agencies, let it be specified what amount is required for each; but do not make this indefinite appropriation for incidental expenses. The expenditures necessary for the support and maintenance of these particular agencies ought long since to have been ascertained with at least approximate accuracy. The Department instead of furnishing to the Appropriations Committee an estimate in bulk, should specify as far as possible what is required for each agency.

The amendment of Mr. Hooker was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies: To contract for the Indian service, advertising at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $25,000.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to amend by striking out $25,000 and inserting $35,000 as the amount of this appropriation. I will briefly state why I offer the amendment, leaving the committee to vote upon it as it may deem best. Last year $25,000 was appropriated for this it as it may deem best. Last year $25,000 was appropriated for this item, and there was a deficiency, subsequently provided for, of $15,000. This money is to be expended in telegraphing, advertising for bids, and other expenses connected with procuring supplies. The Indian Bureau tells the committee that as much will be needed during the coming year as was required for this year. Certainly the bureau cannot get along with less than $35,000. I hope the amendment will

Mr. WELLS. Last year the regular appropriation for this purpose was $25,000. The Department asked for a deficiency appropriation, but the committee considered that $25,000 ought to have been sufficient. If, however, my colleague on the committee will modify his amendment so as to propose an expenditure of only $30,000, I will not object.

Mr. BAKER. While that is not enough, and there will be a defi-ciency, still there will be a less deficiency than under the appropriation provided for in the bill.

Mr. HUBBELL. I am just as anxious as the gentleman from Misouri to carry on the Department cheaply, and I will accept the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement is to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of Indian commissioners: For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $7,500.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike that out. Now, Mr. Chairman, these Indian commissioners were created originally by the act of April 10, 1869; and, by the very terms of that act, evidently it was contemplated they should not exist longer than the amount of money lasted, appropriated in that act, the expenditure of which they were to supervise. I send to the Clerk's desk, for the purpose of being read, the fourth clause of the act of April 10, 1869.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Suc. 4. And be it further enacted. That there be appropriated the further sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to maintain the peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their efforts at self-support; a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next; and for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriations made by this act or any part thereof that the President may designate: and to pay the necessary expenses of transportation, subsistence, and clerk-hir of said commissioners while actually engaged in said service, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed by the reading of that section of the act of 1869 that the appropriation made under it was $2,000,000, of the act of 1869 that the appropriation made under it was $2,000,000, for the purpose of being expended in the maintenance of peace on the Indian border. I believe that the specific commission which is intrusted with this expenditure had for its head General Sherman, the General of the Army. These ten persons were provided for by this act, and if the committee will notice it is all the time contemplated their sole function, as defined by the act creating them, is to over-look the expenditure of this $2,000,000, which long since has been ex-hausted. They are, then, by the terms of that act, functus officio, and they would have had no further duties to perform after that fund was expended but for the fact that by the act of 1874, section 2, an appropriation act, by the by, they were continued in existence long after they had performed all the duties imposed upon them by the act of April 10, 1869. That section reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869.—

It is the act I have just caused to be read-is hereby appropriated; and said board of Indian commissioners is hereby continued with all the powers and duties conferred and imposed by existing laws. But nothing herein provided shall be construed to supersede or interfere with the duty heretofore imposed upon said board of commissioners to visit Indian agencies and inspect the vouchers, books, and papers thereof.

It will be seen by looking at the original act that the sole function to be performed by this board of Indian commissioners was the proper expenditure of $2,000,000 appropriated by the act of 1869. That mission has been continued ever since. In the appropriation bill of last year and the appropriation bills for the last four years, the Committee on Appropriations, following along in the line of precedents, have appropriated each year $15,000 for defraying the expenses of that commission. I say, sir, that commission is a character of government in reference to Indian affairs which ought not to be recognized. Not that they may not be the best, and probably are among the best citizens of the country, but I am opposed to having anybody exercising control over this Indian Department who is not a bonded and salaried officer of the Government, and responsible to the Government for the manner in which he discharges his duties.

This, sir, is a tribunal created originally by the act of 1869 for a specific purpose, and which has been continued ever since, vested with full authority to visit every Indian agency, to prosecute every Indian agent, and only a few months ago they sat in this city and held an investigation in reference to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Mr. FINLEY. I will take the floor, Mr. Chairman, and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi to conclude his remarks.

Mr. HOOKER. I thank the gentleman. I say therefore, sir, there is no necessity for this commission. There might have been and probably was a reason for its creation originally, because by the act of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the contract of the 10th of April, 1869, the Government made a very large appropriate that the 10th of April, 1869, the 1869 priation for a specific purpose, an appropriation of $2,000,000, and they wanted to be sure the expenditure of that appropriation was made judiciously. They were appointed for the purpose of carrying out the act of 1869. It is evident from the terms of that act as read from the Clerk's desk that this commission never was desgined or intended to have any other existence than that of supervising that specific expenditure. When that duty was performed, they ceased to exist, and but for the fact that by the act of 1874 they were continued by an appropriation of $15,000, they would not be in existence

And further, Mr. Chairman, if it required $15,000 for the support of that commission last year, why does it not require $15,000 now?

The Appropriations Committee itself must have been impressed with the conviction that they had made expenditures in former appropriations which were unauthorized and unjustifiable, because by their own action in this bill they have voluntarily cut down the amount to $7,500. I say, Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty in the management of this business is that we have too many men controlling matters. There are too many agents, too many people, too much of an army connected with the service who have a voice whenever there is a question in reference to the expending of the money appropriated by Congress.

If I possess the power to do so, sir, and if I can get the attention of the committee and of the Committee on Appropriations, I will propose at some stage of this proceeding an amendment by which we will dispense with all of these supernumerary officers, Indian commissioners, and this vast army who are living at the expense of the Government and of the Indians. There is no necessity for this commission specified in the section now under consideration. If there is a necessity for it let it be sanctioned by law, created by law, its duties defined by law, and let each one be a salaried officer of the Government, appointed under the law and required to give bond as is required of the most insignificant Indian agent. There was no more necessity for the existence of this board of commissioners than for that other wrong and mistaken policy or operation of law which enabled these Indian tribes to be told off and parceled out to some one or other of the different to be told off and parceled out to some one or other of the different denominations of Christians in order that they may be Christianized and brought to a civilized condition. And while I have nothing to say as to the question of advancing their moral condition, I hold that before we undertake to improve the head and heart, we had better carry out in good faith and discharge toward them the duties of the Government Government.

I hold, sir, it is our duty to pay the Indians what we owe them under treaties, and put them under the control of honest agents; and when you accomplish this you will have performed the duty of the Government to them. That is our first duty, to perform the obligations which we owe to them. We find even in that prayer of the Great Master of the universe, the words: "Give us this day our daily bread;" thus showing that poor, weak, frail humanity demanded first that the sustenance of life should be honestly given. Do that before you talk of improving their mental and their moral condition. I say, therefore, that I would do away with every supernumerary office. I say, therefore, that I would do away with every supernumerary offi-cer connected with this vast army of Indian agents and in the In-dian Department. Sweep them all out of existence and if there is a dian Department. Sweep them all out of existence and if there is a necessity for them let them be salaried officers of the Government, created by the law, their duties defined by law, bonded, and who can be made responsible for the discharge of their duties under the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POEHLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words upon this proposition, and I do so because I think there are too many divisions in his Department, too many divisions and sphediciples. In ions in this Department—too many divisions and sub-divisions. In the first place we have the Secretary of the Interior, who has general charge of this business. Then we have a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has special charge of all the Indians in this country. Next we have an agent at every agency to take charge of the different tribes and individuals. Then we have three inspectors, whose duty it is to inspect the agents and the agencies. Then we have two special agents, who are to assist somebody in doing their duty.

A MEMBER. And the preachers.

Mr. POEHLER. Yes, Mr. Chairman, then we have all the religious sects in this country, who recommend the agents and traders, and control their appointments, and between these various religious denominations the religious and spiritual welfare of these poor heathens is divided. They must go to heaven as may have been agreed upon for them by somebody, I do not know who, but not by themselves.

[Laughter.] Mr. ELAM.

Mr. ELAM. They do not want to go there.
Mr. POEHLER. Well, we send them to the happy hunting-grounds.
[Laughter.] And last, but not least, as claimed by some, we have a commission of ten citizens to superintend and inspect and advise everybody. [Laughter.]

Now, if this does not make a good government for these Indians, all we should do is to appoint a military commission to look after them all. [Laughter.] That seems to be the only thing that is wanting to complete it. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we have complicated this matter so much that it is hard to find who runs the machine and who is responsible for its running; and I think we had better leave it to some one whom we may look to to do the business and who is responsible. As has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi, who just preceded me, this commission in the first place was appointed for a special purpose, and I think when that purpose was ended their usefulness ended with it to a large extent. I trust, therefore, the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FINLEY. I move

Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

I want to add a word to what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. POEHLER] has said on this subject; and that is as to the expense attending the care, nurture, and protection afforded by this great and beneficent Government of ours to the savage. It is a costly piece of business, Mr. Chairman. I have just been looking over the Blue Book. I find there is a board of commissioners, with a secretary, assistant secretary, clerks, and messengers, to begin with. Then we come to the office of Indian Affairs. We have there a Commissioner with a salary of $3,000 a year; a chief clerk at $2,000 a year; 36 clerks at $1,000 to $1,800; 21 copyists at $600 to $900; 2 messengers at $720; 2 laborers at $600; 3 inspectors at $3,000; 2 special agents at $2,000; 1 special agent at $1,800; 1 warehouse superintendent at $200 per month, and 1 clerk at $125 per month. That is the office of Indian Affairs.

Then we have seventy-one agencies, and at every one of those seventy-one agencies there is an agent at a salary of from $1,000 to $2,200 a year. And I find in looking over this Blue Book that the paid employes at the various agencies range from thirty to sixty at each agency. There are washwomen, blacksmiths, assistant blacksmiths; agency. There are washwomen, blacksmiths, assistant blacksmiths, nurses for the papooses. There are millers and assistant-millers, and apprentices to millers.

Take just one agency that I happen to have before me and look at the expense. I am in favor of the amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department; and one reason why I am in favor of it is because I think I can satisfy this House that we can by so doing reduce the expense of taking care of the Indian tribes at least $1,000,000 a year. Let us take this agency, the Rosebud or Spotted-Tail agency. There are eighty employés there, at salaries ranging from $2,200 per annum, the highest, down to $20 and $25 a month. Let us see who they are. An agent; a physician; a watchman; a chief herder; a storekeeper; two laborers; a special interpreter; six more laborers; a trainmaster; a clerk; an assistant butcher; two watchmen; an engineer; a carpenter; another butcher; a team-ster; a farmer; an assistant farmer; a painter; three laborers; a fore-man; a carpenter; a wagon-maker; a harness-maker; four more car-penters; a laborer; a night-herder; five ox-teamsters; a blacksmith; six more carpenters; a master laborer; a helper; another helper; a laborer; and then another laborer; and then another laborer; three ox-teamsters; eight herders; then a night-herder; a chief of police and a sergeant of police and ten private policemen; all paid out of the Federal Treasury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have about got my own consent so far as I am concerned to support this amendment. As I understand, it is as desirable to have somebody chargeable with the administration of as desirable to have somebody chargeable with the administration of Indian affairs as it is to have some one chargeable with the administration of any other bureau or Department of the Government. Now, sir, the Secretary of the Interior is chargeable, or was chargeable at one time, with the conducting of the Indian Department. These commissioners, however, under the law creating the board, appointed to serve without compensation, not exceeding ten in number, men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, are not responsible to the Secretary of the Interior, as I understand it, but divide the responsibility with him. In other words they have the power and as much power as the Secretary of the Interior has to make contracts; and as the service has grown up under this board of commissioners I understand they do exercise as much power and authority as the Secretary of the Interior. Here you have a division of responsibility.

I am not going to abuse the board of commissioners for any action I am not going to abuse the board of commissioners for any action they may have taken or for anything they may have done. I am not sufficiently well acquainted with what their action has been to be warranted in making an attack upon the board. But I do say where you divide responsibility in this way you give a premium for maladministration. And you have had good Indian commissioners and a very good Secretary of the Interior if there has not been maladministration in this cardinal divided account of the second the second control of the second co a very good Secretary of the Interior if there has not been malad-ministration in this condition of divided responsibility, and the shift-ing of responsibility back and forth from the shoulders of the Secre-tary of the Interior to the board of Indian commissioners.

If the Secretary of the Interior, executing the law and disbursing this fund upon his own motion, desires to consult anybody and take anybody's opinion he should have the right to do it and has the right anybody's opinion he should have the right to do it and has the right to do it although you may adopt this amendment. But all the time I would keep that officer of the Government or some other directly responsible for every action that is taken in the Department, and not place it in his power or the power of any other person or persons to divide the responsibility so that you cannot fix it.

Now, one word about the civilization and the improvement of the

Now, one word about the civilization and the improvement of the Indians generally. I want them civilized. I want them educated. I will go as far as anybody else in that direction. But as the years have rolled around and I have seen these appropriations made year after year, I have become somewhat skeptical as to whether or no you will ever very materially improve the condition of the Indians. The necessity rests upon them that by the sweat of their faces they must earn bread if they are to be improved. The condition of the white man is not imthey are to be improved. The condition of the white man is not improved except under those circumstances and conditions. We all understand in our different neighborhoods the son of a wealthy man in nine cases out of ten grows up worthless while the boy who has to work for his bread makes his way under the spur of necessity. This is the case with white people, with yellow people, and I apprehend it is the case with the red men and will always so continue. I will vote for this amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is ex-

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] to withdraw it, and I will renew it.
Mr. FINLEY. I will withdraw it for that purpose.
Mr. BLOUNT. I will renew it.

Mr. SIMONTON. I would like to have the amendment reported. We are unable to obtain copies of this bill, and labor under a great deal of difficulty to understand what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to strike out certain lines of Mr. SIMONTON. Let those lines be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of Indian commissioners: For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] has taken occasion to charge that the continued existence of this commission has been owing to the errors of the Committee on Appropriations in preparing appropriation bills. Now I must dissent from that; such was not the view entertained by the Committee on Appropriations. That commission exists by virtue of certain provisions of the Revised Statutes describing their duties, &c., and without any limitation as to time. So far as the propriety of continuing this commission is concerned, I shall be guided in my vote by what I understand to be the views of the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs after considering the same. As stated, the amount proposed is less than has heretofore been appropriated for this purpose. The Committee on Appropriations felt that the commission was expending more money than should be expended and was enlarging its sphere. And with a view of retarding that we reduced the amount of the appropriation. So far as I know the Committee on Appropriations have no objection to this amendment; certainly the majority of that committee have not. such was not the view entertained by the Committee on Appropriamittee have not.

Mr. HAYES. I do not want to make a speech; but I want to call the attention of the Chair to the many vacant seats here at this time, and to ask him if it is not possible to send out some officer of the House and call in the absentees and compel them to listen to the talk of certain gentlemen who so delight in hearing themselves talk on of certain gentlemen who so delight in hearing themselves talk on this floor, although members generally do not seem to care to listen to them. It is time we had some voting done and stopped talking. We ought to get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. HASKELL. I think we will have a little more talk. I desire to say that as regards the Indian Committee, the injunction of secreey was removed this morning; and this amendment which has been reported from the committee was directed to be so reported by a majority of one, seven members of the committee being present. One vote of that majority was cast by a man who said that he would give the the sanction which the Indian Committee has given to the amendment which has been brought in here.

Now, this Indian commission—I am not very particular whether it is retained or not—is charged with the duty of inspecting goods purchased under these contracts. As a republican, representing perhaps in a political way this side of the House, I do not suppose there would be a particle of political objection to removing this commission, because they exercise a sort of surveillance over all the supplies purchased by the Government for the use of the Indians. But I shall expect hereafter that the honorable gentlemen on my left, who come here day after day whenever the Indian bill is under consideration, and talk about the swindled Indians, and fraudulent contracts, and wormy meal, and bad cloth, and trades and dickers and transactions that meal, and bad cloth, and trades and dickers and transactions that existed ten, fifteen, or twenty years ago—I shall expect these gentlemen to keep still, if by their act they remove a board which is charged with the duty of examining into the details of this matter.

The Secretary of the Interior is charged with a multiplicity of duties. He must be in his seat in his office all the time. And any man familiar with the history of this Indian business knows that until within a few years that office has been besieged by contractors and manufacturers and dealers in every sort of Indian goods on earth. Heretofore every patent-medicine man has besieged the Department of the Interior to buy his patent medicines for the Indians. And the corridors of that Department have swarmed with men who wanted by some means or other to obtain a share in the contracts to be let.

This commission of ten men, selected from the best men that could This commission of ten men, selected from the best men that could be found, serving without pay, exercise with the Secretary of the Interior a joint power over these contracts, examining into their details, questioning as to whether they are needed or not, and inquiring whether the supplies are of the right quality, and whether the prices charged and specified are just and right. They exercise a healthy surveillance over that portion of the Indian business, and they serve without part and with the court of the Convention. without pay and without cost to the Government.

without pay and without cost to the Government.

Now, I do not believe that it is wise to dispense with their services because of the item of $7,500 needed for their expenses. There has been no complaint of the quality of Indian supplies that I know of since this board has been in existence, and while they have been charged with the responsibility of examining into this matter.

Mr. FINLEY. How long has the board been in existence?

Mr. HASKELL. Since 1869.

Mr. FINLEY. Did not the report which I referred to last night show that some of these goods were defective?

Mr. HASKELL. Nothing that this commission inspected.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not desire to debate this question at all. I simply want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SCALES] his views and the views of his committee on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I renew it, and yield to the gentleman from North

Mr. ATKINS. I renew it, and yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Scales.]
Mr. Scales. Mr. Chairman, twelve months ago, as the record of this House will show, I attempted for the first time to strike down this commission. The motion was met with a great deal of opposition and was defeated. I felt certain that, the attention of the House and the country having thus been called to the question, the time would come, and come very speedily, when the work would be accomplished. I believed it because after having been on this Committee on Indian Affairs for the last five years I thought there was no necessity what. Affairs for the last five years I thought there was no necessity what-Affairs for the last five years I thought there was no necessity whatever for this commission; that it did not serve any useful purpose. I did not believe the agents were made any better, or that better goods were supplied to the Indians, and I did not believe there was in any respect more faithfulness in the service. For this reason I thought the Government ought not to throw away $15,000 to pay the expenses of gentlemen who, though honorable and worthy in every respect, gave no bond for the faithful discharge of duty, and were in no way responsible to any one for its non-performance, and who served to divide the jurisdiction and responsibility with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCALES. Certainly.
Mr. BLOUNT. The pending amendment proposes simply to strike out the appropriation for this commission. Now the Revised Statutes provide for the existence of the commission and the performance of its duties. Does not the gentleman think it would be much better to provide for the repeal of those provisions instead of merely striking out this appropriation?

Mr. SCALES. It is suggested to me we cannot on this bill repeal the law on the subject; but by striking out the appropriation we can, I know, strike down the commission. I would prefer a repeal, however, of the entire law.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I understand, the proposition to abolish this commission and thereby reduce expenditures would be entirely in order under the rules.

Mr. SCALES. Then I hope my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will add to the amendment a provision abolishing the commission. The gentleman, I understand, accepts my suggestion and modifies his amendment so as to repeal the provisions of law to which the gentleman from Georgia refers. I greatly prefer the amendment in that

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi had better reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I have been absent on leave for several days, and in my absence the Committee on Indian Affairs took up this matter, and, as I understand, decided that this commission was unnecessary, and authorized the acting chairman to report to the House a proposition to strike out this appropriation. In their action I fully concur.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman will allow me one word. I think that if we strike out the appropriations provided for in this bill we virtually dispose of this commission. By refusing to make this appropriation, I think the Committee of the Whole will do all that is

Mr. ATKINS. I believe the commission has only been provided for heretofore in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOOKER. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there can be any objection to adding to the amendment these words, "and the commission is hereby abolished." I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will accept that.

Mr. HASKELL. I raise a point of order on that amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] is now occupying the floor in making a speech.
Mr. HASKELL. I reserve all points of order on the amendment.
Mr. STEELE. Has the time of my colleague [Mr. SCALES] expired?
The CHAIRMAN. He has one minute remaining.
Mr. STEELE. I was about violating to bim my time.

Mr. STEELE. I was about yielding to him my time.
Mr. SCALES. I thank my colleague for his courtesy.
Mr. Chairman, this commission, as I understand, was created for the purpose of supervising and purifying the service. The corruption in the Indian service had grown so great that it became absolutely necessary to do something to check it. In 1868 this commission, composed so far as I know of good men, was established and entered upon their work. As I have said, they divided jurisdiction with the Sec-their work. As I have said, they divided jurisdiction with the Secretary of the Interior, and under the law were the advisers in the purchase of all goods, and to that extent relieved him of the proper responsibilities that should have attached to him.

They are empowered to supervise the expenditure of money, to investigate contracts, and are authorized to travel all over the Indian country in palace cars to visit the agencies free of expense. They are honorable gentlemen, are always in their places in Washington, and no doubt feel an interest in this question. But, Mr. Chairman, they are useless, and so far as I am informed have neither reformed the service or suggested an improvement in the service. In order to still service or suggested an improvement in the service. In order to still further purify the service the appointment of Indian agents was given to the different religious denominations of the country. It was thought that if we could have these good men to co-operate with the Secretary of the Interior and to advise with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and if the religious denominations would give us faithful, pious agents, selected by themselves and from among themselves, much good would be accomplished in the way of reformation.

The service would be purified. What has been the result? Need I stop to tell the House what the result has been? From 1868 down to 1874 the service has been more corrupt than ever before, I believe, in the history of this question.

Mr. BELFORD. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. SCALES. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BELFORD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that during the last three months this board of Indian commissioners rendered an incalculable service to the country by getting rid of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SCALES. I will not go into a discussion of that question now; but I will say in behalf of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs that while he may have been properly condemned and certainly should have, if guilty as charged, been driven from his office, nevertheless in his disgrace it is proper that I should say that while in that office he was ever a prompt, active, and zealous co-operator with the Indian Committee in striking down frauds and defeating unjust and fraudulent claims. This much I can say for him, and this much is due him. I regret his fall, and I give the commission credit for the part they acted in it; but, Mr. Chairman, it would have been found out. Without its action charges had come to the committee, and had been reported to the Secretary before the commission had completed their action.

I will say further, Mr. Chairman, that I have never known an instance except that single one in which this commission has been instrumental in bringing to light any fraud or any unfaithfulness. Much of it existed, but they did not take the time necessary for this work. I am also prepared to show upon any proper occasion that the reports furnished by this board are not reliable, not that they meant to do wrong or make a wrong statement but they copied reports of agents without investigation and these reports were often false. agents without investigation and these reports were often false, nearly always highly colored. Had the facts as embodied in their report been presented as they really existed and a comparison instituted with prior years as to the advancement of the Indians in agriculture and the arts of civilization it would be found that the Indians were retrograding rather than advancing in civilization.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy the attention of the House only a moment for the purpose of having read a communication which I have received from one of these commissioners, who is also acting as secretary of the board.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Missouri proceeds the Chair would like to know from the gentleman from Mississippi whether he has modified his original motion; and, if so, in what

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir. I move to strike out and in lieu of the paragraph to insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

All laws and parts of laws creating and authorizing said commission be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to reserve the point of order on that amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the point of order after the gentleman from Missouri, who has the floor, has concluded what he

Mr. WELLS. The committee which prepared this bill was governed by precedent in legislation for the last ten years. They found appropriation had been made for this commission ranging from $15,000 appropriation had been made for this commission tanging from $15,000 to $25,000 annually. The commission was created by the law of 1869 which has been read to-day at the Clerk's desk. The committee felt it was not in their province to recommend a repeal of the law. We believed, under a judicious management of Indian affairs the Government could dispense with the further service of this commission and thereby save expense. We called on the secretary of the board for a list of the expenditures. That list I hold in my hand. We found the secretary, who is a member of the board, received a salary of $3,000 a year, and that there is a clerk at $2,000, and a messenger at $1,200 a year, making in all $6,200 for clerical services for that commission. Their duties, as I understand, are simply to supervise the opening of bids advertised for by the Department and occasionally to visit the different tribes which are accessible by railroad. I believe the time has come when we can dispense with the further service of this commission. I ask to have read, as a part of my remarks, this communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1880.

Sir: In compliance with your request to be furnished with the items of expenditure by this board during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, I have the honor to submit the following:

The appropriation is $15,000. During the period above named we have disbursed for—

In addition to this sum, there have been charges against our appropriation for traveling expenses on subsidized railroads not reported, estimated at $500. I hand you herewith a copy of our last annual report, which will inform you more particularly of the duties imposed on us by law, and the manner in which they have been performed. We would be pleased to have a visit from you that you might by personal inspection form a correct judgment of the labor performed by this board, and its methods of work.

Very respectfully,

WM. STICKNEY, Secretary.

Hon. ERASTUS WELLS.

Mr. HOOKER. It appears from the statement of the secretary of the board of Indian commissioners that the function of the commission to visit the respective agencies was performed by its secretary, who was paid $3,000 per annum. It occurs to me it would be just as cheap to employ the clerk in place of the commission. However, I hope the entire services of this commission will be dispensed with, as these duties are already performed by inspectors, who are salaried and bonded officers of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas insist on his point of order ?

Mr. HASKELL. No; I withdraw it.
Mr. HOOKER'S amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of Indian police: For the services of not exceeding eight hundred privates at $5 per month each, and not exceeding one hundred officers at $8 per month each, of Indian police, and for equipments, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, $60,000: Provided, That teachers and Indians employed at agencies in any capacity shall not be construed as part of agency employes named in section 5 of the act making appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. SCALES. I move to strike out the whole of that paragraph down to the word "provided." I hope, Mr. Chairman, I will not be misunderstood by the House in this action. As is known, I was in favor of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department; but having failed in that I have to the utmost of my ability endeav-ored to sustain the policy of the administration, in order it might as far as possible be perfected so as to give it a fair trial.

But, sir, this proposition is to me so monstrous, so out of precedent, so contrary to all law, that I feel bound to oppose it. Twelve months ago the Committee on Appropriations brought this proposition here in the words and figures in which it is now presented. It had been adopted but one year before, and when adopted it provided for only four hundred men. At the instance of the Department it was increased in the next appropriation bill to eight hundred. I made the point of order—which was sustained—that it did not retrench expenditures, and it passed with only four hundred men. It then went to the Senate, but by some means unknown to me the eight hundred men were restored, and the bill thus amended became the law.

Now, sir, who has control of these men? What restriction is there on their power? None whatever. This clause says that they must keep order and prevent the liquor traffic. But how is this to be done? Who appoints the officers, and to whom do they report? What law defines their duties? Who issues their orders, and who is responsible for their conduct? They are to do what is necessary to preserve order, but what is necessary and who is the judge? They control the citizen and Indian alike, and there is no appeal from their action and no law to protect from their oppression. In all these matters of so much importance to the citizen as well as the Indian this provision is absolutely silent. At present, the Indian in his relation to Indians on the reservation are At present, the Indian in his relation to Indians on the reservation are without law. This provision turns him over, bound hand and foot, to the agents. These men had authority before almost without restriction, except as they are restricted by the want of physical force. Now we give them eight hundred men armed and equipped, and thus the fullest authority is allowed with fearful power to execute, not known laws, but the will of the agent. This force need no warrant or other precept. They can arrest men at pleasure, treat them as they will, and for any and all imaginable (not defined) offenses. Who will stay their hands? Who will protect the rights of persons and property? The law is silent, and no one can.

Ay, sir, that is not all. Under this simple provision agents in your own land, where murder under the law is punished with death, have authorized and commanded these men to shoot down Indians escaping own land, where murder thee law is punished with death, have authorized and commanded these men to shoot down Indians escaping from the reservation. By what law? Where is the authority? None under Heaven, save the irresponsible power this House has given to the Indian agent by giving him the control of a hundred officers and eight hundred armed men, equipped and ready to do his bidding. Let me read what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has said here:

At the Pine Ridge agency, on the 5th of September last, a runner was dispatched from the camp of Young-Man-Afraid-of-his-Horses to notify the agent of the escape during the night of eleven Cheyennes, who had taken with them twenty-two head of horses and ponies belonging to the Sioux. Police Captain Sword, with nine of his men, was sent in pursuit, and the next day overtook the Cheyennes, who had twelve hours the start of the police, on Osage Creek, west of the Black Hills, about one hundred and twenty-five miles distant from the agency. Sword and his party immediately surrounded the fugitives and demanded their surrender.

Now, sir, they were surrounded, hunted down like wild beasts, by men without authority of law. They warned them to surrender:

Spotted Wolf, the leader of the runaways, refused, and threw off his blanket, which among Indians signifies a challenge to mortal combat.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WADDILL obtained the floor and yielded to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Scales.]

Mr. SCALES. I thank my friend for his kindness. What then did the police do?

The police immediately opened fire on the party, killing Spotted Wolf.

This man was murdered and was the first victim of this power which you put into the hands of an irresponsible and lawless mob without the shadow of law. Where did such a system come from? What precedent can be found for it? None whatever? It was copied from the Canada law. They have a mounted police force there. But in that country, sir, where there is respect yet left for the rights and liberties of the citizen and not only of the citizen but of the red man as well—in that country they have this police force with all the laws which are necessary to render it effective and efficient, but it is used to enforce law and is responsible to the law. They have magistrates appointed to issue precepts. They have a commissioner of police and he is an officer of such dignity as to command a salary of $3,000. They have constables and other necessary officers provided for by law. All the powers of the magistrate and commissioner and all the duties of the constable are clearly defined. A regular code of laws is provided filling many pages of their statutes. It is in fact a government of law and every step is taken in accordance with law, and the police force are but the servants of the law and are never above or beyond it. How different is the police force of this bill! Without law and without restraint, responsible to no one save the agent, and not necessarily even to him.

There they have all the officers necessary to good and effective government; but here, sir, we have no government and no law, save such as the agent, the officers, and the police will afford, and this rests and rests alone in their own heart. I do hope, sir, that a question of this importance will attract the attention of this House and the country, and that it will receive that consideration which its importance demands. I do hope, sir, that it will be carefully looked into in every particular and in all of its details; and that this House will passe long before it energies of great an injurity. This has been will pause long before it enacts so great an iniquity. This has been in operation years. Grant that it has done some good. It will do a great deal of harm. It has cost one life already and I know not how many others contrary to the laws of God and man, and I appeal to the Hause to stop it here and now.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina will not obtain. The provision that is continued in the present law for a police force among the Indians was first enacted about two years ago. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs in speaking on that general subject sums up the evidence in its favor in the words which I will now read:

favor in the words which I will now read:

It is about two years since the general establishment of an Indian police force, which has proved to be exceedingly beneficial to the service. The policemen have shown the utmost fidelity to the Government, and, when necessary, have arrested even friends and relatives with absolute impartiality. At the Pine Ridge agency, on the 8th of September last, a runner was dispatched from the camp of Young-Man-Afraid-of-liis-Horses to notify the agent of the escape during the night of eleven Cheyennes, who had taken with them twenty-two head of horses and ponies belonging to the Sioux. Police Captain Sword, with nine of his men, was sent in pursuit, and the next day overtook the Cheyennes—who had twelve hours the start of the police—on Osage Creek west of the Black Hills, about one hundred and twenty-five miles distant from the agency. Sword and his party immediately surrounded the fugitives and demanded their surrender. Spotted Wolf, the leader of the runaways, refused, and threw off his blanket, which among Indians signifies a challenge to mortal combat. The police immediately opened fire on the party, killing Spotted Wolf. The remainder then surrendered, and after a two days's march were brought back to the agency. Many other equally noteworthy instances of fidelity have occurred, and as a whole, where agents have entered into the spirit of the system, the results have been of the best possible character.

Mr. Chairman, there are about 200,000 Indians in the West, and

Mr. Chairman, there are about 200,000 Indians in the West, and among those, for the arrest and detention of the criminal classes, the law provides for the organization of a police force of eight hundred The Indian Department believes a much larger force could be used to advantage.

They believe it is an instrumentality, and I concur in that belief, that is largely used in the interest of peace and security among the Indians themselves. It saves, Mr. Chairman, the service of soldiers in many instances, and as a means of restraint is of incalculable value. At each of the agencies there are men who are employed as policemen, under the law, sworn in, dressed as our policemen are, invested with the insignia of power, and their services in preserving peace and good order is really as essential as is the presence and agency of policemen in any large city in preserving peace and good order. The idea that it is possible among two hundred thousand of these savages to get along without a police force, having full power to preserve the peace, is absurd. If you do not employ in this service the Indians, you must employ white men, and I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is far better to employ these men, who belong to the same race, who are of the same blood, and who have proven faithful and honest in the execution of their duties, than it would be to employ white men to perform the same duties. I fear, sir, we should do a great and irreparain many instances, and as a means of restraint is of incalculable value. form the same duties. I fear, sir, we should do a great and irreparable injury to the cause of peace, good order, and security among the Indians if we were to take a backward step in this direction; and I hope on the mere suggestion, with the experience of this Department, and the importance of this police force recognized by the Secretary of the Interior and the head of the Indian Bureau, that the members of this House will not wholly disregard it. I have said all I desire to say upon the point.

of this House will not wholly disregard it. I have to say upon the point.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last line. In my judgment this section, which the gentleman from North Carolina has moved to strike out, and which provides a police regulation and "a police force to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations," is the most important and valuable provision in this Indian appropriation bill. The need of sufficient police force to arrest and keep under control disturbers of the peace and violators of the law in the Indian agencies has been one of the great sources of difficulty. The illegal traffic in liquor, too, has constantly proved one of the most prolific causes not only of disturbance and violence but of outrage and war. This is abundantly attested in the reports of the Commissioner as well as of the agents. Allusion has reports of the Commissioner as well as of the agents. Allusion has been frequently made during this discussion to the outbreak of the Utes at the White River agency. I desire to have read in this connection the testimony of the lamented Meeker himself, in a letter to the Department only six weeks before his death. He foresaw the coming outbreak, and attributes its causes to the fact that he had no force sufficient to punish the violation of law and to prevent the unlawful selling of ammunition and liquor by the traders surrounding the agency. I ask the Clerk to read so much as I have marked from his letter bearing date of August 11, 1879. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Another trouble lies in the stores on Snake and Bear Rivers, or even nearer by, which sell ammunition for goods, playing-cards being in large supply. Let me ask you what is the use of my warning these traders when they know I have no power to back me? It is only a farce. I once wrote to the governor of this State about the violation of the law, and he told me if I could apply to the deputy United States marshal for the district he would move. I did not apply to him, because said deputy kept an Indian store himself.

The things to be done are three: Have the military break up the selling of ammunition and liquor, and the buying of annuity goods at these stores. Then, as the Indians could not hunt they would work to get money, perhaps trap some, and a store would be established here. Of course the military must keep them on their reservation, and white men off. When these things shall be done the Indians will begin to consider the question of sending their children to school, and they will open farms. Now they will not. Already they are making their plans for going north, after they get their annuity goods, to hunt buffalo. If anything can be done I would like to bave a hand in it.

Respectfully,

N. C. MEEKER, Indian Agent.

By our treaty with these as well as other Indians we have bound ourselves to enforce the law against the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Indian reservations. The constant failure to fully comply with our obligations in this regard has cost us millions of dollars by outbreaks and Indian wars. The law on our statute-book is clear and full, but is constantly violated.

Section 2139 of our Revised Statutes provides that—

No ardent spirits shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country. Every person, except an Indian, in the Indian country, who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, or disposes of any spirituous liquors or wine to any Indian under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years, and by a fine of not more than $300. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce liquor into the Indian country, that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department, or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department.

I regret that even the War Department has no authority to introduce it into the reservations under any circumstance

Mr. Chairman, from these causes and from violated treaties on our part has arisen in the main the outrages, the wars, and the frightful massacres of which we have heard so much for the last three days. Ninety years ago General Washington declared that in that day the causes of Indian wars and the violation of treaties was almost wholly by the whites. It is not different now. General Crook says in his report of last year:

During the twenty-seven years of my experience with the Indian question I have never known a band of Indians to make peace with our Government and then break it or leave their reservation without some ground of complaint; but until their complaints are examined and adjusted they will constantly give annoyance and trouble.

Secretary Stanton said:

This Government is guilty of gross crimes in its dealings with the Indians. The United States never redresses any wrong till the people demand it; and when you reach the hearts of the people these wrongs will end.

In his last report the Commissioner says:

Intruders have been equally troublesome on other Indian lands. In fact, there is hardly an Indian reservation within the limits of the United States which has not been subject to their encroachments.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, as my eloquent friend from Kansas said yesterday, much of the wrong lies in this very House. We have been day after day whittling down the appropriations for the Indian Departarter day whitting down the appropriations for the indian Department, until they will be, as they have often been before, starved into the war-path. It is the history of our wars with this people that it costs $1,000,000 to kill each Indian who has been killed in war. It is not only more humane and Christian, but it is cheaper to fulfill our treaty obligations by educating them and supplying their necessities. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. Uppersure of Objections.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio.
Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am under obligations for the courtesy of my colleague. Yes, Mr. Chairman, fearful barbarities have been committed by these savages. Have our own measures and examples been guided always by the laws of civilization, not to speak of Christian justice? There have been passages of this debate that seemed more a war-whoop than the deliberations of statesmen. Hate and revenge are dangerous and blinding elements in legislation or polity.

In 1864 the massacre of nearly five hundred men, women, and children of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, when under the pledge of protection, brought on an Indian war which lasted through 1865, and cost the Government $30,000,000. It would cost less to keep them all even in the best Washington hotels.

even in the best Washington hotels.

In 1868 an "Indian peace commission" was organized. It was composed of such eminent men as N. G. Taylor, General Sherman, General Harney, General Terry, and General Augur. They gave the whole question wise and careful investigation. They heard all sides. They met in council with the Indians. They bear testimony that treaty-breaking and unredressed wrongs are the prolific source of our Indian wars. They say:

Here civilization made its contract and guaranteed the rights of the weaker party. It did not stand by the guarantee. The treaty was broken, but not by the savage. If the savage resist, civilization, with the Ten Commandments in one hand and the sword in the other, demands his immediate extermination.

Again, with fearful directness and force, they say:

Is it to be wondered at that Indians are no better than we? Let us go into our best cities, where churches and school houses adorn every square; yet unfortunately we keep a policeman on every corner, and scarcely a night passes, but in spite of refinement, religion, and law, crime is committed. How often, too, is it found impossible to discover the criminal! If, in consequence of these things, war should be waged against these cities, they, too, would have to share the fate of Indian villages.

Again, we have not kept our treaty as to furnishing them with schools. It was said to-day by a gentleman who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations that we had furnished ample facilities for education. This statement is not attested by the facts as given to us by the official reports.

There are outside of the Indian Territory 33,000 Indian children of school age according to our treaties. Of these we have, by the report of last year, furnished school facilities for 7,671 in all. Where they have had opportunities for education a large part of them have proved have had opportunities for education a large part of them have proved to be neither incapable nor unwilling to be educated. The appropriation for this branch of the Department, as well as others, has been reduced far below the necessities as well as the economy of the case. The Indians have some qualities not unlike the Anglo-Saxon, and it is cheaper to civilize and educate than to subdue or exterminate them. But our obligations of justice and humanity should make this wise policy sacredly binding.

The progress already made in this work is full of encouragement.

We have now, of the 250,000 Indians in this country, 59,000 in the Indian Territory who are self-supporting and nearly 14,000 outside, of the same class

On the eastern side of Dakota there is a small agency of 1,500 Indians. Last season they raised 12,000 bushels of wheat, several thousands of oats and other grain. Ten of these Indian farmers bought last year and this ten reaping-machines.

For the last three years the Dakota Sioux have done their own transportation of goods and supplies with great success from the Missouri to their distant homes. The Commissioner says that the loss and waste, which was great, by the white contractors, has been entirely saved by the Indian transportation.

My found from Illinia [My Carnoval ages it is only by recession.]

My friend from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] says it is only by necessity-they will advance. Within the past few years the Indians of this country who have had advantages for civilization have made such progress as to amply warrant this work. Much remains to be done. But justice, civilization, and humanity demand a peaceful solution of this long-neglected problem. It will be a new glory to American polity and American statesmanship when these savage foes shall have been algorited by peace and progress into civilization, and Christians. been elevated, by peace and progress, into civilization and Christi-

[Here the hammer fell.]
The formal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. VALENTINE. I renew the formal amendment.

I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. I hope the House will not sustain him in that amendment. There are, under the law as it now stands, but eight hundred Indian police in the United States for about two hundred and fifty. thousand Indians that are upon the different reservations. I know from personal experience, living, as I have done for many years, among and near these agencies, having served there in the Army against the Indians, and now for a number of years living adjoining one of the agencies, that since the establishment of this police we have had better order among the Indians on the reservations; that they have been most efficient.

These Indians from the reservations very frequently find their way These Indians from the reservations very frequently find their way out on the farms, where they steal pigs, chickens, geese, turkeys, and other small things they can lay their hands upon and carry away; that is a matter of frequent occurrence. When they are on one of these marauding expeditions, if the agent is notified of the fact he sends out some of these Indian police, and they invariably capture them and carry them back to the reservation. I know personally that they have been of great value, that they have saved to the people of the West a great deal of property and a great deal of trouble and expense. I think they should be continued.

Mr. WARNER. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VALENTINE. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to know how these Indian police are chosen and under whose orders they act.

Mr. VALENTINE. They are selected on account of their fidelity, are officered by one of their own number, and act under the order of the agent.

Mr. WARNER. Are they mounted?

Mr. VALENTINE. They are mounted on their own ponies, and furnish their own uniforms and their own rations. They arrest no one except one of their own tribe, or Indians with whom they have difficulty. They arrest no white man, they have no orders to arrest white men, and I have never known an instance of their doing so. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. Scales to inform this House, if they do away with these Indian police, how they expect the law to be enforced among the Indians on the reservations? There is no other way to enforce the law

Mr. BAYNE. How are they tried?
Mr. VALENTINE. If it is a crime against the United States law they are sent before a United States commissioner and tried. There is but a small number of these police at each agency, and they are very valuable indeed.

Mr. SCALES. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like the gentleman to inform this House, if these Indian police are done away with, how he expects law and order to be maintained at these agencies among the Indians themselves? There is no law to-day that will permit the trial of an Indian for any crime committed against one of his own tribe.

Mr. SCALES. I would leave these reservations as they have been left from the foundation of the Government down to within two years. I would leave them so until through the Indian Committee, or some other committee of this House, such a government and code of laws could be prepared as will make the officers who execute them responsible to the law.

Mr. VALENTINE. There is no objection to the gentleman's getting.

up a code.

Mr. SCALES. In order to control the Indians, I would not clothe any man with supreme power over them.
[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr.

VALENTINE] has expired.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not understand this amendment. I do not understand the animus of it from the chairman of the Indian Committee. The honorable gentleman who stands at the head of that committee has joined with me and every other member of the comcommittee has joined with me and every other member of the committee in a desire to extend law all over these Indian reservations. He has admitted, as I have, and as every man must who has examined this question, that the great need of all these reservations is law; and he comes in here now with an amendment to strike down the only executive power there is to enforce what little law they have on these reservations. I defy the honorable chairman of the Indian Committee to indicate one source of authority or power for the execution of United States law on these reservations if these Indian police are taken away from the Indian agents.

He says he would remand these reservations back to their old condition. What was the old condition of an Indian reservation? It was an asylum for every horse-thief, every murderer, and every robber in that portion of the country; and there was no power to take them from the reservation, because there was no police, no executive authority anywhere to be used for that purpose.

Under the operation of this law, the Indian agent charged with the enforcement of the United States laws has a force at his command to compel obedience. He has a power in his hands to capture these marauders against the peace of the reservation and the rights of the Indians, and he has a force immediately at hand to use for that pur-

The Army has been reduced. We have been practically unable to secure any portion of it for the protection of our frontier. This Indian police was put there to supplement a weak army, and for no other purpose.

The gentleman refers to the Cheyennes who were removed from the reservation, and deems the shooting of one of them to have been a great outrage. What are the facts? Those Cheyennes were a remnant of some who had escaped from their reservation, and who ranged the whole State from one side to the other. If we had had at that the whole State from one side to the other. If we had had at that time a sufficient police force at that agency that massacre would never have occurred; as it was, the first information brought to the agency of the escape of these Cheyennes from their reservation was brought by this Indian police. If they had not by hard riding carried information to the nearest military post, the troops would never have been on their trail in time to capture them.

This is simply a scheme to give over the whole frontier to the scalping-knife of the Indian. Is that the intention of the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES?] Will you first starve the Indian and then remove all force to control him?

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. VALENTINE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WELLS. I renew it for the purpose of occupying the floor for a moment. I will state that when I first looked over the Book of Estimates and came to this item, I felt a great deal as my friend from North Carolina [Mr. Scales] feels, that this appropriation was not one that was needed at all. But after consulting with the Department and examining the matter most thoroughly, I have become satisfied that no money is appropriated by this bill for a more useful purpose than this $60,000. These Indian police receive no rations from the Government, but are supported entirely from the $5 a month which they receive. They are very efficient in every respect. In Nebraska, where there are many of these wild tribes, the people depend entirely upon the police, without any military organization at all. Yet order prevails there. There is no question in my mind, after thorough investigation, that this appropriation, instead of being stricken out, ought if anything to be increased. But the committee stricken out, ought if anything to be increased. But the committee did not feel justified in going beyond the amount appropriated last year—$60,000. This organization has been in existence only about two years, and has proved very efficient.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Montana,

[Mr. MAGINNIS.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] will weigh with the committee. I do not care to dwell on this matter. But as to the reservation of which I have most actual knowledge, I can say that the money which has been expended under this provision has had a most valuable result. Of course the Indians have no government to any great extent, the authority of their chiefs being in many instances merely nominal; and the only possible way to prevent robbery, murder, and smaller crimes is by means of this Indian police.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas asks the animus that prompts me to offer this amendment. He says that I have united with him in endeavoring to extend law over the Indians. I have done so; and I shall continue to exert all my abilities toward that end. When I have succeeded in giving them a proper code of laws I will join the gentleman in providing a police force properly restricted by law to enforce order and protect rights among the Indians. But never while I have a place on this floor will I vote a solitary man or a solitary dollar to a force of this kind without providing in the bill creating them a law to regulate and govern them. It is said, give the force and make the law afterward, but I say without the law we must not have this force. They should be intended as a posse to sustain and enforce laws which have been enacted by the supreme power in the land and not to execute the law of their own motion. If such a proposition were made for any of the States it would consign the mover to infamy or the lunatic asylum.

I say to the gentleman from Kansas that I am anxious to establish a code of laws over the Indian country. I have now upon the table a bill to extend our criminal law over all the tribes save the five civilized tribes who have laws of their own. When such a measure has been adopted, and courts and fair trial provided for, and men shall be arrested, tried, and convicted under the law, then we will want this force, and then I shall be too glad to aid in the work; until then I will stand, though I stand alone, opposing with all my power this monstrous proposition.

My friend says I am opposed to protecting the white man on the frontier. Not at all. I would prevent such crimes as I have called attention to to-day. I would provide that men, savage men, if you please, should not be shot down in cold blood at the mercy of a lawplease, should not be shot down in cold blood at the mercy of a law-less mob. I would hold this mob responsible, with its aiders and abet-tors, and I would have them pay the penalty of their crimes. I would protect both the Indians and the white men alike against such power in such hands, and I wish this House and the country to hear me in their behalf. I pray them to put a limitation upon arbitrary exercise of power and strike out this provision until we can make necessary provisions for governing and controlling it.

Mr. VALENTINE. Was not the gentleman chairman of the Com-mittee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-fifth Congress?

mittee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-fifth Congress?

Mr. SCALES. I was. Mr. VALENTINE. Then why was not the bill to which he refers introduced long ago?

Mr. SCALES. This proposition was only brought here two years ago. I fought it then. I tried to strike it down. I did succeed in ago. I fought it then. I tried to strike it down. I did succeed in part, but it was afterward restored. I know not how or when. But the gentleman asks me why I did not introduce my bill giving the Indians law in the Forty-fifth Congress. I believed that the first great step was to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and the Indian Committee made every effort to accomplish this. It passed the House several times but failed in the Senate. When this failed me I then united with the Department in the desire and effort to give them law.

I speak in behalf of the Indians, in behalf of the emigrant, in behalf of the pioneer. I am here to ask you to strike down this irresponsible power. I beg gentlemen to reflect upon what they do. I leave the responsibility of this act with them. May they never have cause to regret it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WELLS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Scales, there were—ayes 47, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Wells and Mr. Scales were apointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 36, noes not

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To refund to the appropriation for Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, the proceeds of the sale of sheep and wool made in June last and covered into the Treasury, being $2,592.90, are hereby reappropriated, to be expended for the Yankton Sioux.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For this amount, to pay the following-named persons the sums annexed to their

To J. D. Abbott, of Cherokee County, North Carolina $175 00
To M. C. King, of Cherokee County, North Carolina 212 03
To M. L. Brittain, of Cherokee County, North Carolina 233 00
To Scroop Enlee, of Jackson County, North Carolina 125 35

Provided, That the amounts due as above set forth be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees; and the proper accounting officer of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sums to the above-named persons.

Mr. BAKER. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.
Mr. VANCE. I desire to explain the amendment briefly. In the Forty-fourth Congress provision was made for the payment of this Forty-fourth Congress provision was made for the payment of this amount of money to the persons named, but the wording of the statute was not mandatory, and the amount has not been paid. Several committees of the House have reported favorably on the matter, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended payment. I hope there will be no objection to including this provision in the pending Indian appropriation bill. There is a fund in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose, and the Eastern North Carolina Cherokees have directed in council the payment of these several amounts. The expense occurred on account of a visit of the agent of the Government, Silas Sweatland, in making payment to the Cherokees. The amounts ought to be paid, as they are due, and the Indians are in favor of the payment.

Mr. BAKER. What is the amount?

What is the amount? Mr. BAKER.

Mr. VANCE. Seven hundred and forty-four dollars.

Mr. BAKER. I do not propose to press the point of order. It more properly belongs to the sundry civil bill, as the bill we are now considering is for the current expenses of the Indan service, and this is for a past item. But I will not insist on my point of order.

Mr. Vance's amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. No purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time shall be made without advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall state the exigency in his order, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market to an amount not exceeding $3,000.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move in the third line, after the word "without," to insert the words "first giving at least six weeks public notice by;" so it will read:

SEC. 3. No purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time shall be made without first giving at least six weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall state the exigency in his order, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market to an amount not exceeding $3,000.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Before the gentleman from Kansas insists on that amendment I wish to call his attention to one effect it may have. One cause of a great many of our Indian troubles is that every year when there is a long session of Congress this Indian appropriation bill does not pass in time to get annuities to the remote Indian tribes bill does not pass in time to get annuities to the remote Indian tribes during that year. It is a common occurrence every second year the Indian bill passes so late and the water has become so low in the rivers that the Commissioner cannot buy the supplies so as to ship them in time to the Indian agencies. If you put an iron-clad provision of this kind in here and this Congress does not adjourn until the 1st of July, and the Indian appropriation bill does not pass before then, the result will be that one-half of the Indian agencies will not be able to get their supplies this year.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. That is an argument simply in favor of letting these contracts after inadequate notice.

Mr. MAGINNIS. No, sir.

Mr. PYAN of Kansas. The difficulty now is that the western year.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The difficulty now is that the western peo-ple who produce these supplies do not get notice in time to bid. That is one of the great difficulties. Another is one I alluded to yesterday, and which I sought to have corrected by amendment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is an argument in favor of passing the Indian

mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Pass it early in the session then, and do not let these important contracts, disposing of such large sums of money, without first giving adequate notice to the public, so there may be proper competition in bidding.

roper competition in bidding.

There is a class of professional contractors who do not require much notice. They have their agents in Washington and are ready at all times. Ten days' notice will do them, and, indeed, no notice at all would answer their purpose; but what we want is adequate notice shall be given so that the producers of the West may have an opportunity to bid for the sale of these supplies to the Government.

As it is now, if you give but three weeks' notice, it does not reach thorough circulation among the western people until two weeks after that time. If it does a week after that time and it comes to the roc that time. If it does a week after that time, and it comes to the no-Washington for a schedule to know the terms and conditions on which he is to bid, and to know to what agency supplies are to go for which he may bid. After he gets that return he has to go to some bank designated by the Department to make a deposit, and that takes another week. Then he has to send his bid clear to the Atlantic coast, to the city of New York, and in that way he is shut out entirely. Six weeks' city of New York, and in that way he is shut out entirely. Six weeks' time is short enough if we want fair play in this matter of bidding.

Mr. HUBBELL. I hope this amendment will fail. Suppose this amendment should carry and it should become necessary to furnish supplies amounting to $2,000 to some Indian agency—that an exigency should arise whereby they should be furnished at once. Before you could supply that $2,000 you would have to give six weeks' notice; and in that time the necessity for furnishing the supplies would have gone by. By that time an Indian war may come.

Mr. SIMONTON. Does not the bill provide for an exception in certain contingencies?

certain contingencies?

Mr. HUBBELL. It says in cases of emergency; but the limit is fixed at $500. Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. There is an exception in cases of emer-

Mr. HUBBELL. Where the amount does not exceed $500 in value.

But suppose you needed supplies to the amount of $2,000?

Mr. SIMONTON. The "exigency" would apply to all cases above $500.

$500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Sec. 4. Thatso much of the appropriations herein made as may be required to pay for goods and supplies, and for transportation of the same, for the year ending June 30, 1881, shall be immediately available; but no such goods or supplies shall be distributed or delivered to any of said Indians prior to July 1, 1880, and the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any surplus that may remain in any of the said appropriations herein made for the purchase of subsistence for the several Indian tribes, to an amount not exceeding $50,000 in the aggregate, to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur: Provided, however. That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used: And provided further, That any diversions which shall be made under authority of this section shall be reported in detail, and the reasons therefor, to Congress, at the session of Congress next succeeding such diversion.

Mr. WELLBORN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to propose the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by adding after the word "diversion," in the eighteenth line, on page 51, the following:

And provided further. That all officers and agents of the Army or Indian Bureau are prohibited, except in a case specially directed by the President, from granting permission in writing or otherwise to any Indian or Indians on any reservation to go into the State of Texas on any pretext whatever; and any officer of the Army or agent of the Indian Bureau who shall violate this provision shall be dismissed from the public service; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed and required to take at once such other reasonable measures as may be necessary in connection with said prohibition to prevent said Indians from entering said State.

Mr. BAKER. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.
Mr. WELLBORN. If the gentleman insists upon the point of order concede that the amendment is obnoxious to it.

I concede that the amendment is obnoxious to it.

Mr. BAKER. I simply stated that I reserve the point of order, and will hear what the gentleman has to say upon the amendment.

Mr. WELLBORN. The subject-matter of this amendment was investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs several weeks ago. After that investigation the committee unanimously directed me to report a bill substantially embodying, perhaps literally embodying, the provisions of this amendment. The report which accompanied that bill is brief, and will explain, I think, to the entire satisfaction of the committee the reasons and the necessity for the legislation proposed. I send the report to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read posed. I send the report to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For many years Indians on the reservations have been in the habit of going into the State of Texas, for hunting and other purposes, at times, under permits from the authorities having them in immediate charge, and at other times without per-the authorities having them in immediate charge, and at other times without permits.

While on these expeditions they have not unfrequently fired upon unoffending citizens, stolen and driven away their horses, killed their eattle, and forced from them supplies of food. In consequence of these injuries and depredations a feeling of uneasiness pervades the minds of all settlers in the localities visited by these roving bands. These settlers are in constant dread, as they know not at what hour they may become victims to the cruelty of these unfriendly maranders, their homes be burned, and their wives and children outraged and murdered.

To protect her citizens against these dangers, not merely threatened but always imminent, the State of Texas, at large expense, has kept for years and now keeps a military force in active service. While this force gives partial security, it is not large enough to afford full protection to the exposed localities, nor can it be made adequate to complete protection so long as these Indians are allowed to go or are not prevented from going into the State.

To remedy the evils above indicated, we believe,
First. That all officers and agents of the Army and Indian Bureau should be prohibited, under severe penalties, from granting written or verbal permission to Indians to go into the State of Texas; and Second. That the Secretary of the Interior should be directed and required to adopt at once such other reasonable measures as will, in connection with this prohibition, prevent said Indians from entering the State.

The accompanying substitute for bill H. R. No. 3161, which embodies these provisions, is herewith submitted, and its passage recommended.

Mr. BAKER. I will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BAKER. I will not insist upon the point of order.
Mr. MILLS. I understand the Committee on Appropriations have no objection to the amendment.
Mr. WELLS. The committee are willing that the amendment shall be incorporated in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I propose the following as section 5 of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, the fund herein provided for the pay of specified employes at any agency may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the pay of other employés at such agency; but no deficiency shall be thereby created; and, when necessary, specified employés may be detailed for other services when not required for the duty for which they

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know if that amendment comes from the committee !

Mr. HASKELL. I was directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the original section of last year's bill, but on consultation with members of the Appropriations Committee, I struck out the provision relating to clerks, and simply allowed an interchange of em-Where, for instance, one blacksmith is needed, and at the end of six months they want to put him at something else, if he was not needed in the original capacity, they might continue him in the service in such other employment. It does not touch the clerical feature. I understand the Committee on Appropriations will not object to it.
Mr. WELLS. There is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS. I now move to amend section 5 in the bill as reported by striking out "5" and inserting "6."
The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section as amended.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill as follows:

The Clerk resulted the reading of the bill as follows:

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to invest in the bonds of the United States bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 4 per cent. per annum, the unexpected balance, of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewas of Lake Superior, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874, the said bonds and interest thereon to be applied as provided in said act.

Mr. DOWNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DUWNET. 1 offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as a new section:
Sec. 7. Whereas the experience of centuries shows the impossibility of civilizing the Indians when free from the restraints of law and uneducated to labor; and Whereas they are and will remain under the present system of management a dangerous class of people within our national boundaries, retarding the advancement of our frontier settlements, causing by their frequent hostilities great loss of life and destruction of property and entailing heavy expenses on the General Government in the military operations against them: Now, therefore,

For the purpose of absorbing the Indians into the population of the United States and advancing them in civilization, as also causing a vast saving in public expenditures, therefore after the 30th of June, A. D. 1881, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered to apportion and locate the different tribes of Indians within the United States, excluding the Territory of Alaska, among the various States and Territories in due proportion to the area of land that each State and Territory bears to the whole area of the United States.

That the title of the Indians to the reservations now occupied by them after the 30th of June, 1891, shall be extinguished, and the lands shall thereafter be subject to the pre-emption, homestead, mining, and other laws relating to the public lands of the United States.

That under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior a proper valuation shall be made of the reservation lands, and the amount thus determined upon shall be placed to the credit of the said Secretary and held by him in trust for the benefit of the different tribes to which the reservations belong, and he may draw on such fund until the same is exhausted for the transportation of the Indians to their designated places of abode, providing them with homes, schools, and such other means of civilization as he may deem necessary to aid toward their becoming porting.

That after the passage of this act, and the enforcement of the provisions herein contained, the Indians shall be deemed citizens of the United States, and shall be subject to all laws of the State or Territory in which they are severally located, and also to the laws of the United States, in the same manner as citizens of the United States

Mr. BAKER. I make the point of order on that amendment. Mr. BLOUNT. I would inquire if it comes recommended by a committee?

Mr. BAKER. Even if it is from a committee I do not think it retrenches expenditures

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not understand from whom the amendment

Mr. DOWNEY. I offer the amendment myself. It does not come from a committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am told the amendment does not come from a committee; it comes from an individual. It changes existing law, and is not in order under the third clause of the twenty-first rule.

Mr. BAKER. I am willing the gentleman from Wyoming should explain his amendment, the point of order being reserved.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on the point of order now. It is important to get this bill through the House without delay so that the Senate

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the Chairman will not be too hasty in ruling on the amendment. It certainly has the effect of directly decreasing expenditures by the reduction of salaries, the abolition of the Indian Bureau, and the transfer of the Indians to the Eastern States, where they can be more cheaply maintained.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby aboliahed and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, agents and special agents, interpreters and inspectors, and all other employes of the Indian Bureau, are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers, respectively, shall cease, and the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employes of the Army, under the direction of the Secretaryof War. And they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed thus transferred to them other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army. And the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs, under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs, and of matters arising out of Indian relations, is hereby transferred to, and placed under the control of the Secretary of War, who is hereby empowered to and shall exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior. And all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That said transfer shall take effect at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

Mr. HASKELL and Mr. CONGER raised the point of order on the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to state on the point of order: first, the amendment is not offered by a committee; second, it is not germane to the bill; third, it does not retrench expenditures; fourth, it contains the substance of two other bills pending before this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi five minutes on the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill wishes the committee to rise at this time and to proceed with the bill

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope we will go on till the point of order is decided.

Mr. HOOKER. This is a very important proposition for the consideration of the committee and the House; and the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas and by some other gentleman on the other side of the House is a very important one-one on which I desire to be heard, and probably other gentlemen of the committee desire to be heard on it also.

I think I am prepared to show that the amendment I have offered is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, is in the line of retrenchment, and is not subject to the point of order. I think I can show such has been the ruling in prior Congresses on this same amendment. This is a very important proposition affecting the conduct of Indian affairs for all time to come if the House should act upon it. It will be observed by the committee it is not proposed this shall go into effect immediately. It is only proposed that it shall go into effect after the expiration of the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. I suggest to the gentleman having this bill in charge that it being now four o'clock, and there being an evening session for other business, it will be better to let the committee rise and leave this matter to be disposed of to-morrow. I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invited the gentleman from Mississippi to address the Chair upon the question of order; and in doing so he desires to direct the gentleman's attention to the statement of facts as made by the gentleman from Kansas who raised the point of Mr. HASKELL. I desire to substantiate the four points I made.

The CHAIRMAN. Prior, then, to hearing the gentleman from Mississippi, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the question of fact.

Mr. HASKELL. The first point of order I make is that this amendment is not reported from any committee, but is offered on the motion of an individual member of this House.

My second point of order is that it is not germane to this bill. The very provision of the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is that it shall not become a part of this bill at all. This bill is one for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian service for the coming fiscal year. amendment provides that the law which the amendment proposes shall not go into operation until after the expiration of the time to which this bill relates, until a year from the 1st of next July.

Third. I hold in my hand copies of two bills now before the Committee on Indian Affairs, both of which contain the substance of this amendment. They are bills of the House No. 2848 and No. 3849, and both bear the title "A bill to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department."

Fourth I wake the rount of order that this amendment will not Fourth. I make the point of order that this amendment will not retrench expenditures, even if it were germane. It provides that in place of every man now employed in the Indian service, there shall be taken an officer of the Army with the rank at least of first lieutenant. A thousand-dollar clerk, or a twelve-hundred-dollar or fifteen-hundred-dollar clerk, such as are provided in this bill, will be displaced by a man who will cost the Government more than $2,000 per annum for his salary per annum for his salary.

These four points of order are absolute and fatal to the amendment, and are substantiated by the bills to which I have referred, and which I now send to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Hooker.]

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in response to the point of order which has been made, that I do not think that the two bills to which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has referred contain provisions similar to the amendment which I have here offered. It is very true that an amendment cannot be moved to a pending bill, whether it be an appropriation bill or any other, which is the same as another bill pending before the House. To be amenable to the point of order the amendment must be precisely the same as a bill pending before the House, in substance if not in totidem verbis.

I will say, therefore, that neither of the bills which the gentleman from Kansas has sent to the Chair are at all identical, either in letter and language or in substance, with the amendment I have offered.

This amendment is taken from one which was offered in the Forty fourth Congress, when this question was presented for the first time fourth Congress, when this question was presented for the first time for the consideration of the House, and when the late Mr. Kerr, of Indiana, was Speaker. The question was then presented in precisely the language in which I now present it, and it was proposed to attach the provision to an appropriation bill. It was offered, also, in a subsequent Congress, when the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] occupied the chair as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and, as I understand it, the amendment was then held to be in order. Therefore, so far as the points of order are concerned—that is, whether this amendment is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, whether it is in the line of retrenchment, or whether it is in substance the same as another bill now pending before the House—I beg leave to say that neither of those three points taken by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] are well taken.

This amendment is germane to the subject-matter of the pending bill, because it proposes to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs from one Department of this Government to another. It is in the line of retrenchment, because it proposes to do away with the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs and offices under him; and it proposes at the expiration of the coming fiscal year to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs to the War Department, with power on the part of the Secretary of War to designate from the Army men who shall constitute the agents for the management and control of Indian affairs from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs down.

Mr. SCALES. And they are to receive no additional compensation.
Mr. HOOKER. And they are to receive, by the very terms of the amendment which I have offered, no additional compensation. I say, therefore, that neither of the points presented by the gentleman from Kansas is correctly taken. And I will also say that all those points have virtually been overruled in the decisions heretofore made in regard to amendments precisely the same as this, because I have copied this amendment from the one to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] the decision of Mr. Speaker Kerr, to which he refers?

Mr. HOOKER. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman read it?

Mr. HOOKER. The amendment was offered in the Forty-fourth Congress, in June, 1876; and I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. HOOKER. Certainly.
Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to ask my colleague what answer he makes to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that this amendment does not come from any committee? I would also ask him whether the decision he asks to have read was not made under the old rule, and whether the new rule is not different from that? I ask the gentleman what statement he has to make in reply

Mr. HOOKER. I have this to say: this amendment does not come from a committee. I offer it as an individual member of this Committee of the Whole, and not as coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will say further in reply to the inquiry of my colleague [Mr. CHALMERS] that I do not understand that the new rule takes it out of the power of any individual member on this floor to offer any amendment, provided it is not subject to the objection that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill, or is not in the line of re-

I do understand that a change has been made by the new rule to this extent and no further: that whenever a committee has charge of the subject-matter of the bill it may come in here and propose an amendment by authority of that committee, even though the amendment may require an increase of appropriation. But this amendment does not propose any increase; it proposes to diminish expenditures. Numerous instances have occurred while this bill has been under consideration in which individual members have offered amendments.

Many amendments of this description and character have been offered, and they have not been objected to. They could not be objected to, because if no amendment could be offered to the bill except those coming from some committee, then the very object of the House in going into Committee of the Whole would be defeated. It will hardly be contended by any gentleman on this floor that the intent of the rule under which the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole—to give greater latitude for discussion and amendment—should be defeated by holding that under the new rule no amendment can be enterfeated by holding that under the new rule no amendment can be entertained unless it comes from a committee. On the contrary, every individual member has the right in Committee of the Whole to offer any amendment to the pending bill, unless the amendment be not germane to the subject-matter or not in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair for one moment to the third paragraph of Rule XXI, which in effect provides that it shall be in order to offer an amendment changing existing law, provided in the first place that the amendment is germane to the subject-matter, and secondly that it retrenches expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of officers of the United States. This applies to amendments offered by individual members. Now, the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Mississippi comes fairly within the requirements of the rule. It proposes to reduce the number and salaries of the officers of the United States by abolishing the office of Indian Commissioner and other offices in the Indian Bureau.

The proviso of the third paragraph of Rule XXI, in regard to amend-The provise of the third paragraph of Kule XXI, in regard to amendments reported from committees, has no application here, because the gentleman offers this amendment in his own right. It is presented under the first part of the rule to which I have alluded. The only inquiry to be made in regard to it is: first, whether it is germane; secondly, whether it reduces the number and salaries of officers of the United States. If it meets both these requirements it is in order.

It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment is certainly in order unless it comes within the prohibition of the fourth clause of the rule, which provides that it shall not be in order to amend any bill "by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any bill or resolution pending before the House." Now, the gentleman has stated that this amendment does not contain the substance of any bill pending before the House. I have not examined the bills referred to, but according to my recollection this amendment does not embody the substance of any such bill.

Before taking my seat I would remind the Chair that in the Fortyfifth Congress this same amendment was offered, when either the fifth Congress this same amendment was offered, when either the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] was in the chair; and the same point of order now presented was then raised under Rule 120, (which was substantially identical with the third clause of our present Rule XXI,) and the Chairman, after full debate, overruled the point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I send to the desk to be read the decision to which I have adverted—the decision of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole (Mr. Springer) on the 6th of June, 1876, upon a provision identical with that I now offer.

identical with that I now offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

the Whole (Mr. SPRINGER) on the 6th of June, 1876, upon a provision identical with that I now offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHARMAN. At the sitting of the committee for the consideration of this bill on Saturday last a point of order was raised by the honorable gentleman from Iowa (Mr. McCrary) on section 2 of the original bill, which section transfers the management and control of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The point of order was stated by the gentleman raising it to be this: that the section proposes new legislation, and that it does not appear on the face of the record that it will retrench expenditures. The decision of the Chair upon this question of order was reserved until the committee should again resume the consideration of the bill. The Chair will now submit his decision.

Since the amendment to Rule 130 of this House, which was adopted January 17 of this session, there has been considerable discussion as to its interpretation, and several rulings have been made upon it. In view of the exhaustive arguments which have been made upon it. In view of the exhaustive arguments which have been made upon it is not appropriate that it is earcely relatively and the properties of the control of the bill of the control of the bill of the control of the bill of the control of the cont

Centive, and judicial appropriation bill, which section the Speaker ruled out of that bill, the Chair would have but one course to pursue, and his decision would be simply are affirmation of that of the Speaker. But there is a material difference in the sections. The objectionable section of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is as follows:

"Sec. 4. That the management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations, be, and the same are hereby, transferred from the Departions." The Secakers of War and Provided further, That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby and the security of the penditures, in consequence of the large reduction thereof by the second section of the bill.

But it has been argued with much plausibility that the Chair cannot foresee what increased appropriations may be necessary in the future in order to support and pay the Army, on account of the increased duties imposed upon its officers, soldiers, and employés by this section. And that, in consequence of war or other unforeseen emergency, or of the alleged impossibility of the present military force to perform the increased duties imposed upon them, it may be necessary hereafter to make much larger appropriations for the Indian service than are now necessary under the present management. Such arguments may with propriety be addressed to the committee or the House, but the Chair cannot speculate thus upon the uncertainties of human events. He has only to consider whether this section, by its own force, in connection with the other provisions of the bill, in view of existing law, does retrench expenditures, and whether the bill is so perfect and complete in itself as not to depend upon other or further legislation to give it effect.

That the section under consideration is new legislation, changing existing law, is admitted. But the rule as amended at this session expressly provides that such new legislation may be in order, in a general appropriation bill, provided it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and shall retrench expenditures. The section under consideration, in the opinion of the Chair, meets both these requirements, and is therefore in order as a part of this bill, so far as the rule is concerned.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the committee rise, so that the House may take a recess in accordance with the order already made.

The motion of Mr. Conger was agreed to; there being-ayes 93,

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Springer having taken the committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Springer having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WHITTHORNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, leave will not be granted in that case. The Chair hears no objection in the other cases, and leave is granted as requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Mr. COFFORTH. I move that the House take a recess until half ast seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MILLS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Did the gentleman vote on the right side?

Mr. FINLEY. There has been no record made.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas who makes the motion to reconsider did not vote on the side that was successful, and therefore cannot move to reconsider, whether a record be made of it or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no means of knowing the record.

Aldrich, N. W. Ballou, Berry, Blake, Blount, Bouck, Bragg, Brewer, Brigham, Buckner,

Mr. REED. Ask the gentleman from Texas. I never saw a Speaker who could not ascertain that, or anybody else. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that motions of this kind are always entertained when there is no record of the vote. Such is the indisputable practice of the House.

Mr. CONGER. The House is dividing, the yeas and nays have been ordered, the call has been proceeded with, and the motion should not be entertained.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Texas cannot make that motion. Mr. REED. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

Mr. Starin with Mr. Robertson, for the week.

Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, with Mr. Dunn.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the House the necessity of setting apart a day for the purpose of considering the bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the establishment of a commission for the purpose of hearing all of these claims. If the House will consent to fix one day for this purpose, and this bill is passed, it will relieve us of a great deal of trouble and the necessity during the remainder of this session of having any further night sessions. I suggest that to-morrow be set apart for that purpose.

Several members objected.

Mr. COFFROTH. I hope the House will agree to set apart the two nights next week—Tuesday and Wednesday—for the purpose which I have stated

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that Wednesday evening next has already been fixed for the District of Columbia.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then fix it for Tuesday and Thursday.
Mr. WARNER. I suggest to the gentleman that he fix upon one night, Tuesday. If that be done, I think there will be no objection.

Several Members. Say Tuesday evening.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will accept the suggestion of gentlemen, and suggest that the House take a recess at half past four o'clock on Tuesday next until half past seven, and that the evening session be devoted to the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in lieu of the session already fixed for to-night.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is proposed by the gentleman from

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

And then, on motion of Mr. FINLEY, (at five o'clock and nineteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 17, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., Mr. SPRINGER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the following letter received from the Speaker of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1880.

Sir: I expect to be absent from the House of Representatives during to morrow's (Saturday's) session, and, in consequence, herewith name and appoint you, under power given me by the rules of the House, to act as Speaker in my stead for that day.

Your obedient servant,

SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, Representative from Illinois.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATURES OF MONTANA, IDAHO AND WYOMING.

Mr. BOUCK. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Territories for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5203) providing for the reapportionment of the members of the Legislatures in the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the governor, and the speaker of the house of representatives, and the president of the council during the last session of the Legislatures, in the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to act as a board of apportionment in their respective Territories; and when assembled at the capitals of their respective Territories, they, or a majority of them, shall reapportion the members of the council and house of representatives in their respective Territories upon the basis of the population as shown by the returns of the census for the year 1830, excluding Indians, and shall make such apportionment strictly in accordance with said census returns, allotting members of each house of the Legislative Assembly to the different sections of their respective Territories, pro rata, as nearly as practicable, according to the population, and to that end may apportion, when necessary, in joint council districts.

Sec. 2. That the reapportionment so made by said boards shall be forthwith certified to by the members, or a majority thereof, making the same, and filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory; and within ten days thereafter the governor shall issue his proclamation for an election of such members of the Legislature so apportioned as aforesaid, specifying in such proclamation the apportionment so made to the different sections, and which election shall be held at the time and places as provided by law, and the returns to be canvassed as provided by the laws of said Territories respectively.

Sec. 3. That the persons elected under such apportionment shall, when assembled at their respective capitals, at the time provided by law, and when duly qualified and organized, constitute the next Legislative Assembly in each of said Territories, and shall be empowered to alter or amend the reapportionment for members of the Legislature so made, and at any time

Mr. BOUCK. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Territories. Unless the bill is now passed there cannot be a lawful election of members of the Legislatures in the three Territories named

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I should like the gentleman from

Mr. TOWNSHEAD, of Illinois. I should like the gentieman from Wisconsin to give some further explanation.

Mr. BOUCK. In 1879 Congress reduced the number of members of the Legislatures of the Territories and required that the Legislatures should redistrict their Territories at the next session. Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming failed so to do. Unless this bill is passed there cannot be in those Territories a lawful election next fall or a lawful Legislature. The bill provides that the governor and the speaker of the house of representatives and the president of the council during the last session of the Legislatures shall constitute a board in these several Territories to redistrict them.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That board represents the Government and the people.

Mr. BOUCK. The bill meets the approval of the Delegates from each of these Territories.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' REUNION AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask by unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers and sailors' reunion at Columbus, Ohio, to be held on August 10, 11, 12, 1880, such artillery, tents, muskets, and blank cartridges as can be conveniently spared, such cannon, tents, and muskets to be returned after the reunion in as like good condition as when received.

Mr. MONROE. That is all right.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish for use at the soldiers and sailors' reunion at Columbus, Ohio, to be held in August, 1880, certain artillery, tents, muskets, and blank cartridges, was read three times, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIFTEENTH AND SIXTEENTH MISSOURI CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. WADDILL. I ask unanimous consent to move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 952) for the relief of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, and that the same be put upon its passage. The bill is favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; indeed has been twice reported by that committee. If any gentleman desires an explanation I shall be glad to give it give it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they hereby are, directed to pay bounty to the enlisted men of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers who served during the late rebellion, as follows, to wit: To those who served the full period of one year, or more, the sum of $100; to those who served the full period of six months, but less than one year, the sum of $66.66; to those who served a less period than six months the sum of $33.33.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death of the soldier, who if living would be entitled under the first section of this act, then the said sum or sums that would be due to said soldier if living shall be paid to his widow; and if there be no widow, then to his child or children; and if there be none, then to his mother, if she be a widow. And so much money as may be necessary to carry this law into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was dis-charged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADDILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ILLINOIS SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of the State of Illinois, for a period of six months from June 1, 1880.

Mr. STEVENSON. The necessity for the adoption of this joint resolution will appear from the following letter I have just received from General Bloomfield, one of the trustees of the institution:

BLOOMINGTON, ILLINOIS, April 14, 1880.

DEAR SIR: We are in very great need of a couple of hospital tents at the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, for the purpose of separating those afflicted with sore eyes from the other children, so as, if possible, to eradicate the disease from the institution. The board met this week, and it was thought best to write you and ask you to get a joint resolution through Congress authorizing the Secretary of War to loan us two hospital tents for the period of six months.

Respectfully,

IRA J. BLOOMFIELD.

Hon. A. E. Stevenson,

House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of the State of Illinois was read three times,

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON ZOOLOGY.

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, with the necessary illustrations, 5,000 copies of the report on zoology, volume 14 of the final reports of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories, by F. V. Hayden; 2,800 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,200 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of the Interior.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. HAYES moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to ask the Chair whether it is arranged that an opportunity is to be given to each member to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of some bill and put it upon its passage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no such understanding. The Chair has been requested by a number of gentlemen to recognize them for the purpose of asking unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well I hope opportunity will be given to as many as it can conveniently be given to.

STEAMBOAT MINNIE R. CHILD.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3803) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York, and that it be now passed by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York, owned by James W. Fellows, of the city of New York, to Saint Nicholas, and to grant said steamboat proper marine papers in that name. This act to take effect imme-

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3803) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York, to that of Saint Nicholas, submit the following re-

The owner of the Minnie R. Child, Mr. James W. Fellows, makes a sworn statement, which is attached, that he became the owner of the boat in November, 1879, and that it had been condemned on account of unsoundness of her hull. That since he has owned her he has caused her to be rebuilt by J. M. Rutan & Sons, master builders, of Tottenville, New York, That she has been widened four feet; built a new hull and deck, almost entirely of new material; and that she has been made practically a new boat, strong and seaworthy in every respect.

The affidavits of Messrs. Rutan, builders, and the statement of Messrs. Austin Jayne and John Mathews, local inspectors, are also attacked, the latter concluding by saying that "we are satisfied that the boat is as good as new."

The affidavit of the owner also states that for purposes of insurance the steamboat now rates "first class," and that she is free and clear of debt or other incumbrance.

Drance.

Under these circumstances, and relying upon the affidavits and official statements of the local inspectors, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Oity and County of New York, ss:

James W. Fellows, being duly sworn, says that he resides in the city of New York; that in the month of November, 1879, he became the owner of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, which had previously been plying as an excursion steamer in the waters about the city of New York, but had been condemned on account of the unsoundness of her hull; that since he has owned her he has caused her to be rebuilt by J. M. Rutan & Sons, master builders, of Tottenville, in this State, who widened her four feet, built a new hull and deck almost entirely of new material, and made her practically a new boat, strong and seaworthy in every particular, as appears from the affidavit of the said J. M. Rutan, hereto annexed, and also from the statement of Messrs. Martin Jayne and John K. Mathews, United States in spectors of steamboats, which statement is hereto annexed.

That for purposes of insurance said steamboat now rates "first class."

That said steamboat is free and clear of all debt or claim, and that deponent is abundantly able pecuniarily to meet any and all demand which can arise upon said boat.

abundantly able pecuniarily to meet any and all demand which can arise upon sate boat.

That said boat is well fitted for an excursion boat, and deponent intends to charter or use her to ply in and about the harbor of New York, but that on account of her previous unsound condition, and of her having been condemned therefor, she has a bad reputation with the traveling public, which she, in her presentsound and seaworthy condition, does not deserve, but which would undoubtedly follow her if she should continue under the name of Minnie R. Child. In order therefore to enable said boat to sustain a character to which her present condition entitles her, and to avoid the injury which her former bad reputation would inflict, deponent makes application to Congress to change her name to the Saint Nicholas.

That deponent has made diligent inquiry and has ascertained that there is no boat of the name of Saint Nicholas belonging in this district, and has been able to learn of none of that name in any place, and he believes that the name is unappropriated by any boat at the present time.

Deponent further says that this application is made in good faith and with no other object than that above set forth.

JAMES W. FELLOWS.

Sworn to before me this 22d day of March, 1880. [SEAL] JOHN C. HICKIE, Notary Public, New York County.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Village of Tottenville, Staten Island, ss:

J. M. Rutan, being duly sworn, says that he is a member of the firm of J. M. Rutan & Son, carrying on the business of master builders at Tottenville, in this State; that he has been engaged in said business for forty-five years, and thoroughly understands the same.

That his said firm was employed by James W. Fellows, of New York, the owner of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, to alter and rebuild her hull.

That said boat has been widened four feet, her hull entirely rebuilt, a new deckframe constructed, and a new deck laid. That with the exception of her keel, keelsons, stern-post, and five streaks of planking, which are in a perfectly sound condition, she has been constructed entirely of the best of new materials and in a workmanlike manner, and said boat is now substantially a new boat, sound and perfectly seaworthy.

Sworn to before me this 18th day of March, 1880.

RINALDER FISHER, Notary Public, Richmond County.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES LOCAL INSPECTORS OF STEAM-VASSELS, New York, March 12, 1880.

New York, March 12, 1880.

Six: A thorough examination of the hull of steamer Minnie R. Child has been made by G. W. Wilmurt, assistant inspector of hulls, by direction of this board. He stated: "I find the hull is 4 feet 1 inch wider, being 29 feet 7 inches: the old width being 25 feet 6 inches. Has all new frame except floor timbers. Deck frame, guards, and ceiling all new. Stem and dead-wood forward new; outside planking three-fourths new. About all that is left of the original hull is the floor-timbers, keel, keelsons, after dead-wood, and stern-post, all these being in a good state of preservation."

He further states that the material weed is all first the contract of the preservation."

He further states that the material used is all first-class, and the work done in a proper manner, and we are satisfied that the boat is as good as when new.

Very respectfully,

JOHN K. MATHEWS,

United States Local Inspectors, New York.

J. W. FELLOWS, Esq.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrosed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5807) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGGS. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state to the House that several members have asked to be recognized for the purpose of obtaining unanimous consent for propositions which they deem of such importance that they should have immediate consideration.

Mr. O'NEILL. The country can now see how much better it is for us to meet here as a band of brothers in the day-time and pass some of these bills which are so important to individuals; whereas when we meet here in night sessions there is little or nothing done. I hope the House will permit us to pass some few bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the Chair recognizing gentlemen whose names he has here on the list for the purpose?

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to any such general leave as that.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. WELLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WELLS. I have no objection, if others do not object.

REPORT OF CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WILSON. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Printing Senate joint resolution No. 56, authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind, for the use of the Signal Office, 5,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for the year 1879; and the Public Printer is authorized to contract for the illustrations with the person now furnishing the illustrations for the congressional edition.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was received, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:
An act (H. R. No. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] that the morning hour for to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] to yield for the consideration of a bill recommended by the Engineer Department for the control of a harbor of refuge on Lake Huron. It is very necessary that the bill should be passed now to aid the engineers in the construction of that harbor. It is a bill which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WELLS. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman, but I am pressed on all sides to give way, and if I yield to one I will have to yield to others.

yield to others.

Mr. CONGER. Permit me to say that during the last year there were seven lives lost at this port and probably one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of property destroyed, because there was no person authorized to compel vessels coming into the harbor to come so far in that other vessels coming in out of the storm could get in. The object of this bill is to appoint a harbor-master or a custodian of the harbor while it is being built, who will have authority to compel vessels to anchor so that other vessels can come in from the storm. I desire very much that this bill be passed now. During the last week there has been a storm there, and the safety of vessels and the lives of men were very much endangered from the same cause that existed last fall. existed last fall.

existed last fall.

Mr. WELLS. If there is no objection from any other quarter I will not object to the bill being considered at this time.

Mr. SIMONTON. I object.

Mr. BRIGGS. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] that the morning hour of toward with gentleman from Missouri [2017, 177200] day be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to; upon a division—ayes 101, noes 6; twothirds voting in the affirmative.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,

The House accordingly resolved user into Committee of the Whole, Mr. WHITHORNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. The pending amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from Missiesium; Mr. HOUNDEL sissippi, [Mr. Hooker.]

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 7. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, and inspectors and all other employes of the Indian Burean are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers of every kind and description shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employes of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed, thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employes of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs, and of matters arising out of Indian relations, is hereby transferred to and shall exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That said transfer shall take effect at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose vesterday the questions of the secretary of the control of the committee rose vesterday the question of the control of the committee rose vesterday the question of the control of the committee rose vesterday the question of the control of the control of the committee rose vesterday the question of the control of the control

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday the question pending was a point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.] The Chair is now ready to decide that point of order.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a single word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear a brief statement from the

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons urged in favor of the point of order raised against the amendment, was that it could not under the rules come from an individual member of the Committee of the Whole, but could only emanate from the action of a committee authorizing the chairman or some member of the committee mittee authorizing the chairman or some member of the committee to present it. I presume that the Chair, looking at the third clause of Rule XXI, will find no difficulty in determining this point, because while by the proviso of the third clause of Rule XXI it is declared that "it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures," yet it certainly was not the purpose of the Committee on Rules in reporting, or of the House in adopting, this provision to restrict the powers and duties of the Committee of the Whole in the consideration of a bill under the five-minute rule. If the construction insisted upon by the gentleman raising ute rule. If the construction insisted upon by the gentleman raising this point of order should be maintained by the Chair, the function and object of the House in going into Committee of the Whole for the discussion and amendment of a bill would be defeated. While the power is given to a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter to offer amendments germane to the bill and in the line of retrenchment, surely it will not be held that this provision deprives an individual member of the Committee of the Whole of the power to submit amendments when he desires to do so. I pass therefore from the consideration of that point.

In the next place it is urged that under the fourth clause of Rule XXI it is not in order to offer an amendment "the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House." But it will be observed that both the bills referred to as sustaining this point contemplate precisely what is not contemplated by my amendment. Those bills propose that the transfer from the Indian Bureau to the War Department shall be made at once; under my amendment the transfer will take effect at the end of the present fiscal year. One of these bills is embraced in very few words; the other is somewhat more extended; but neither of these bills, either in the expressions used, the modus operandi of effecting the transfer, or the period when the transfer is to take effect, corresponds with the amendment either in letter or substance, inasmuch as the amendment is expressed in entirely different language, accomplishes entirely different results, and goes into effect at an entirely different period.

In selecting the terms of this amendment I took into consideration the decision which was read yesterday at my instance. In that decision it was very properly held by the gentleman at that time occupying the chair in Committee of the Whole that the provision then bying the chair in Committee of the whole the content of the visiting rule (similar in its essential points to the present rule) the amendment was germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and was in the line of retrenchment. In rendering that decision the gentleman occupying the chair referred to the difference between the pro-vision in section 2 of that bill (which is the same as the amendment I have offered) and the fourth section of the legislative appropriation bill which the permanent Speaker of the House at that time, Mr. Kerr, of Indiana, had decided to be out of order—why? Because that fourth section purported to do what these separate and independent bills now cited propose to do. It undertook to accomplish the object by a system of legislation incomplete in itself and looking forward to other and subsequent legislation in order to make the measure to other and subsequent legislation in order to make the measure efficient. Hence it was ruled by Mr. Speaker Kerr that the fourth section of the legislative appropriation bill was out of order; but the amendment I have offered here (which is identical with the second section of the Indian appropriation bill) is entirely different. It is not subject to the point of order on the ground that other bills in substance precisely the same are pending in the House. When you come to construe that portion of the rule which says that an amendment shall not be offered which is in substance the same as any bill pending before the House, you will find that according to the interpretation of the word "substance," as given by Mr. Cushing in his work on parliamentary law, the bill must be to all intents and purposes, in its object and effect, substantially the amendment which is offered. In no respect can it be said that the two bills now pending offered. In no respect can it be said that the two bills now pending in this House are at all like this amendment.

The ruling which was made in the case to which I have referred in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress has stood as the recognized ruling of this House from that day to this. It was reaffirmed in the Forty-fifth Congress when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] occupied the chair in Committee of the Whole, and I do not know that it has ever been dissented from at any time. Surely there can be no virtue in the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill, inasmuch as it treats of the very same subject-matter as the bill does, and proposes what is regarded by a number of gentlemen on this floor as a judicious administration of Indian affairs by transferring them to the War Department. The amendment is certainly in the line of retrenchment, because it provides that the officers of the Army who are to perform these functions in connection with Indian affairs shall perform them without any additional pay.

I might go on further, but I am not disposed to weary either the Chair or the Committee of the Whole. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if you are to be governed by the former rulings of this House upon if you are to be governed by the former rulings of this House upon questions precisely similar, you will be bound to say, whatever may be your opinion of the merits of the question, that the amendment, in the form now presented to test the legislative sense of the country upon this transfer, is not subject to the objection which has been made by the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kansas the Chair may be mistaken; but he has no difficulty in coming to a quick conclusion on the merits of the proposition.

The Chair recognizes in the new and amended rules the right of any individual member of the committee to move an amendment which, being germane, retrenches expenditures by the reduction of the number or salaries of officers of the United States, or by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill. On that point the Chair has no difficulty.

On the second point, that is, whether the proposition is germane, but for the precedents to which the attention of the Chair has been called he would upon this question have no doubt; but in view of those precedents he would, if the question before the House depended on them alone, hold it to be germane.

Nor has the Chair any difficulty on the third point: that is, whether it retrenches expenditures. He would hold that the pending proposition does retrench expenditures, in his opinion. any individual member of the committee to move an amendment

On the remaining point, that is to say, that it is in substance the ame proposition contained in one or more bills pending before the same proposition contained in one or more bills pending before the House, the Chair is of the opinion that this pending proposition is in substance covered by the two bills to which his attention was called yesterday evening, House bill No. 2484 and House bill No. 3439. It will be observed by the gentlemen of the committee, on turning to Rule 48 of the rules of the prior Congress, that it provided only that no bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith any other bill or resolution pending before the House. The new rules amend that provision, so to speak, by saying that no bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House. "The substance of any bill." Now turn to these two bills referred to. What is the substance of either one of them? What is its function? And what is its object? Clearly, manifestly, and without any doubt, the transfer of the control of the Indian service from the Interior Department to the War Department. What is the office, the function, the substance of the pending amendment? It is to transfer the control of the Indian service from the Interior Department to the War Department. ment. Believing this, the Chair thinks the point of order to be well taken, and therefore rules the amendment out.

Mr. HOOKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, then, on one point only, and that is, that it is in substance the same as bills already pending before the House.

Mr. WELLS moved that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTHORNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. WELLS demanded the previous question on the bill and amend-

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be read in their order.

Mr. WELLS. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for a separate vote on the amendment on pages 34 and 35.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Missouri in charge of the bill asks for a separate vote on one of the amendments of the committee, and after that has been disposed of, if there be no objection, the Chair will put the question to the House on the remaining amendments in gross.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In line 829, strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so it will read as follows:

"Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska:

"For eleventh of thirty installments, to purchase clothing for males over four-teen years of age, for flannel, hose, and calico, and domestics required for females over twelve years of age, and for such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls, per tenth article of treaty of April 29, 1868, $150,000."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 72.

Mr. BAKER. I shall demand the yeas and nays on that amendment. We are entitled to the yeas and nays as no quorum has voted on the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the custom the gentleman is entitled to tellers, but not to the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAKER. I insist on the demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HASKELL. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Everybody understands that it is an increase of $20,000 on the amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations in the pending bill for this purpose. The amendment has already been read twice, and I object to its further reading.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the persisting reads.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative 84, nays 104, not voting 104; as follows:

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DUNN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment coming from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union a reference to the peace commissioners.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration a bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to remove the charge of desertion from a meritorious soldier. It will only take a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. McMAHON. I will be compelled to object if there is to be any discussion. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations

Mr. BROWNE. I will state the facts in this case in shorter time than it would take to read the report.

The regiment of this man had been sent to Louisville, Kentucky, for the purpose of being mustered out of service at the end of the war. He had a brother residing on the north side of the Ohio River. and went to visit him, being away six or seven days. During his absence the regiment was mustered out of service. He returned to Louisville to be mustered out, but found his regiment was gone. He served gallantly in the war, was twice wounded, and has no blot on his record.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I have a case which is equally meritorious where the committee have refused to report. I object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. McMAHON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. They recommend concurrence in the amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 1 with an amendment making the sum named $250,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. Have these amendments been printed?
Mr. McMAHON. They have.
Mr. STONE. I desire to move concurrence in one of these amendments in which the committee recommend non-concurrence.
Mr. MONEY. I rise for information. What is the proposition of the gentleman who has charge of this bill?
Mr. McMAHON. The Committee on Appropriations have directed me to move to concur in certain amendments of the Senate. Upon those of course if the House yoth favorably there will be an end of those, of course, if the House vote favorably, there will be an end of all disagreement between the two Houses. Mr. CONGER. I make the point that the bill and amendments, with the report of the Committee on Appropriations, should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There are changes of appropriations in these amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask my colleague on the committee if the intention is, first to take a vote on the concurrence, and then go into Committee of the Whole on the items on which non-concurrence is recom-

Mr. McMAHON. I am willing to take that course.
Mr. HISCOCK. I think we should go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of all the amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the amendments of the Senate must have consideration in Committee of the Whole. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read Rule XX.

The Clerk read as follows:

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Mr. McMAHON. It cannot be disputed that these amendments must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill must of necessity go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. McMAHON. I will move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole; but will first yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Manning] who desires to rise to a question of privilege. After that is disposed of I will move that the House go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Mc-MAHON] not to move this afternoon to go into Committee of the Whole. We opposed yesterday the adjournment over until Monday so that we might finish the consideration of the pending appropriation bill. That bill has been passed, and members should be allowed some little of the time to-day for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question for the House to determine.

Mr. McMaHON. This is a bill making appropriations for the in-mediate necessities of the Government, and I think it should be passed without delay.

ELECTION CONTEST-CHARGE OF BRIBERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississipp

MANNING] rises to a question of privilege, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] will please take the chair.

Mr. COX took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MANNING. By direction of the Committee on Elections I submit for present consideration and action by this House the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a certain anonymous letter, dated, House of Representatives, Washington, District of Columbia, March 4, 1880, addressed to Hon. WILLIAM M. Springer, offering a bribe of $5,000 if he would prevent the unseating of William D. Washburn, was mailed the 8th day of March, 1880, in the post-office of the House of Representatives, and delivered to Hon. WILLIAM M. Springer, then and now the chairman of the Committee on Elections, before which said election case at that time was pending. and was pending; and Whereas said letter purports to be an attempt to corruptly influence the action of said Hon. William M. Springer, as a member of said committee and of the of said Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, as a member of said committee and of the House of Representatives; and Whereas another private letter was sent to and received by the said SPRINGER in reference to the said contest, signed by H. H. Finley; and

Whereas the language by the said SPRINGER, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 6th instant, in his speech on the subject before the House, is construed by many members as a charge against said Donnelly of having inspired the writing of said letter; and
Whereas the said Donnelly has requested an investigation of said matter: Now,

Whereas the said Donnelly has requested an investigation or said matter: Aswetherefore,

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, to inquire and report to this House as to the authorship of said anonymous letter, who sent it, and the purpose for which said letters were sent, and all other matters in connection with the same, and that said committee be authorized to inquire and to report to the House thereon whether, in either or all of the letters in controversy, and written to Hon. William M. Springer, there has been any breach of the privileges of the House, or of any memberthereof, and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the House, and to report at any time; and that the expenses incurred in said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The question was upon adopting the preamble and resolution.

The question was upon adopting the preamble and resolution. Mr. BROWNE. I desire to make an inquiry. Mr. MANNING. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. Is it proposed to investigate the conduct of some person not a member of this House by a committee of this House, and at the expense of the people? Is that the purpose of this reso-

Mr. MANNING. The preamble and resolution are quite clear. The language is not ambiguous. The resolution is strictly in accord, in the judgment of the Committee on Elections, (and I would say that that judgment was expressed with marked unanimity,) with our duty as we conceive it to ourselves, to this House, and to the country.

The resolution proposes an investigation into the authorship of an anonymous letter, which upon its face purports to have been written in the interest of a member of this House. Whether it was written or inspired by contestee or contestant is a matter which this House of course ought to determine. If it was written or inspired by the contestant who asks a seat here, such dishonorable conduct should be promptly and decisively rebuked by this House, and I take it that no man would feel that he could give his consent for the admission on this floor of such a person, if the proof should show that he wrote or inspired a letter of that sort.

There are a great many things of which I might speak, but which I do not propose now to discuss. I rose merely for the purpose of saying that if this resolution shall be adopted, I do not desire to be the chairman of the committee contemplated therein. I wish now to waive all the right I may be supposed to have by parliamentary practice in such a matter.

In response to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] I will remark that many things might transpire while a contested-election case is pending, so far as the contestant is concerned, that would make every man on this floor set his face firmly against the entrance here as a member of such contestant. Why, sir, it seems to me that it would be plain to an honorable man charged with the investigation of the merits of an election contest, that after he had gotten through with the technicalities of the case, the consideration of the facts and of the law applicable thereto, then if nece sary to address himself to the moral features of the case also; and to say, if you please, in the report, that while he found the contestant had been elected upon the facts and the law that governs the case, he did not believe that the contestant was a fit and proper man to be sworn in here as a member of this House.

Suppose that a man asking admission here, and waging a contest with a sitting member, should commit arson, or theft, or any of the heinous crimes enumerated in the catalogue of crimes; suppose he should cover himself all over with crimes, what man on this floor would say that you could not consider those matters until the man was admitted to a seat here and then, under the Constitution, which refers alone to a sitting member, could turn him out by a two-thirds vote? I take it that the American Congress would get itself into an attitude before the honest and intelligent people of this country and of the world that would be utterly indefensible by any such course as that.

Now, Mr. Speaker— Mr. New was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. McLane. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, I was about to make a further remark; but I have no disposition to go into any argument of this case. I purposely refrain from expressing any judgment upon the merits of the resolution further than I have done. The resolution is broad; it was intended to be so. It is as broad as the merits of the case require. A full, thorough investigation is what I court; and I hope no gentleman on this floor will be found seeking anything less. Nobody here, I presume, will say that he desires any limited investigation which will shut out any part of the facts.

I move the previous question, unless it is deemed desirable that the debate shall proceed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman whether this resolution is reported from the Committee on Elections?

Mr. MANNING. I have so stated. I endeavored to be as explicit as I could. If the gentleman desires me to go further I will say it has been reported with a unanimity that is most marked.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear that part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANNING. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SPEER. I would like to say a word.
Mr. MANNING. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.] Mr. NEW.

I have been recognized. KER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has The SPEAKER pro tempore. called the previous question.

Mr. McLane. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. MANNING. I believe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Speer] desires to be heard. I yield to him with pleasure.
Mr. McLane. Before the gentleman from Mississippi demanded the previous question I rose for the purpose of addressing to the Chair the previous question i rose for the purpose of databases a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. New,] supposing the gentleman from Mississippi had concluded. But the previous question cuts off both gentlemen. The Chair will, however, hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McLANE. I rose before the demand for the previous question; and I stated to the Chair that I rose to ask a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANNING. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. McLANE. It is not necessary for the gentleman to yield. It is my right to address to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry; and it is not the privilege of the gentleman from Mississippi to interpose an objection.

Mr. MANNING. No, sir; but I presume no debate is in order pending the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland will

Mr. McLane. I rose for the purpose of asking the Chair whether the gentleman from Mississippi had taken the floor to reply to the inquiry of the honorable gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.] But as the Chair did not recognize me and as the gentleman from Mississippi has proceeded and has asked the previous question, I withhold my inquiry; but the pendency of the demand for the previous question permits me to make the motion I design now to make—to lay this resolution on the table. I do not think it presents a question of privilege at all.

privilege at all.

Mr. MANNING. It is a question of the highest privilege. It involves the integrity of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is in order, but it is not debatable.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. McLane to lay the resolution on the table, there were—ayes 41, noes 99.

Mr. McLane. I call for the years and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. So the motion of Mr. McLane was not agreed to.

Mr. MANNING. I have demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; there being—ayes 81, noes 52. The main question was ordered; which was upon the adoption of the resolution.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 106, noes 55.

Mr. BROWNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 27, less than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BROWNE. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays. Tellers were not ordered.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the amendments of the Senate to what is known as the "immediate deficiency bill."

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope we shall not adjourn now. Let us go into Committee of the Whole, and proceed with this bill till three o'clock

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were-

Mr. McMAHON. I call for tellers. If gentlemen will consent to go into Committee of the Whole, I will move at three o'clock that the committee rise.

Mr. PAGE. If there be no objection, I will withdraw my motion upon the assurance of the gentleman from Ohio that he will move the committee rise at three o'clock.

Mr. McMAHON. At three o'clock I will move that the committee

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The question recurred on Mr. McMahon's motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. WHITTHORNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration now is printer's number 3337. It is what is known as the immediate deficiency bill, which was passed about a month ago by the House and sent to the Senate, and by the Senate amended in a considerable degree and sent back to the House. I do not propose to take any time in discussing the provisions of the bill in ordinary general discussion. I have no general discussion to tender to the House. I desire, how-ever, the committee to understand that there is a substantial agreeever, the committee to understand that there is a substantial agreement between the two Houses upon most of the important amendments. The Senate has added in the aggregate $402,932 to this bill, but they have deducted $107,000, leaving $295,932 of an increase; but the deduction of $100,000 made in regard to the printing burean will be found in another bill we passed; so the actual net increase by the Senate is $391,932, without counting cents. We have moved to concur in the Senate amendment in regard to the public printing with an amendment reducing the amount to $250,000 instead of $300,000, because in the star-route bill we passed $50,000 for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which therefore leaves the amount of $250,000 still necessary RECORD, which therefore leaves the amount of $250,000 still necessary to appropriate.

We have moved to concur in the Senate amendment of $51,283.10

We have moved to concur in the Senate amendment of $51,283.10 for dies, paper, and stamps in the Internal Revenue Department, made necessary, as we understand, by the very large increase of the internal-revenue business.

We have moved to concur in $15,000 for what is known as the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The House declined to put that in the bill originally. We were requested to put in $15,000 for the eastern division and $15,000 for the western division. We declined; but representations were made to the Senate and it was put in there. We have finally concluded to let it stand; and perhaps it ought to stand. finally concluded to let it stand; and perhaps it ought to stand.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no change of amount, but simply as to the

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; the amount is changed. It is reduced one-half what was asked in the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. What I had in my mind was this: that the appropriation, as it was sent to the House, looked to its use for the repair

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; that is continued in the bill, $10,000 for the repairs and maintenance of the vessels used in the Coast and Geodetic Survey

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not notice that.
Mr. McMAHON. This is new matter, and a compromise has been agreed upon of $7,500 to each division. My colleague wished to ask a question: What is it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Perhaps my question is now unnecessary. I was going to request of my colleague that when we got out of committee he should move that these amendments of the Senate should be printed in the RECORD. I am told, however, that they have already been printed.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir; I ordered the bill and Senate amendments printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. All right.

Mr. McMAHON. The sixth amendment of the Senate appropriates $286,500 for continuing the construction of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Department building. On that the committee recommend non-concurrence, the appropriation for the last fiscal year having been about $600,000. But this we can discuss when we come under the five-minute rule.

The amendments numbered 7 and 8 are simple transpositions, with no change in the text, and therefore are eminently proper.

We have moved to non-concur in the ninth amendment appropriatwe have moved to non-concur in the finth amendment appropriat-ing $3,299.22 to pay for illustrations for the Official Gazette of the Patent Office. I desire to say to the committee we have had no infor-mation on that subject, and whatever may be the final action of the House on this matter will be a direction to the committee. I have no information to give to the committee on this point; no one has seen the committee or the sub-committee that I am aware of, and a motion of non-concurrence is as much for the purpose of having information on the subject as any other.

We move to non-concur in amendments numbered 10 and 11, be-

We move to non-concur in amendments numbered 10 and 11, because we desire conference with the Senate on that subject as to why the limitation was put in "February 1;" why it may not be later or why it should not be earlier.

We have also moved concurrence in $6,000 for continuation of the surveys of swamp lands. This was an amendment discussed at considerable length at another place when it was put in, and put in on motion of those interested in the subject. I understand a large number of Representatives on the floor of the House are interested in the passage of this matter, and the committee recommend concurrence. passage of this matter, and the committee recommend concurrence in the amendment.

Although we move to non-concur in amendments numbered 13 and 14, the committees of the two Houses will substantially concur. The Senate put in an amendment appointing these parties from the 1st day of April, which is a day long since past. We make the appropriation for these persons from the time this bill passes, and the noncurrence is really with a view to having concurrence in what the two Houses have agreed to substantially.

For the preparation and publication of post-route maps, $5,000. The committee move to non-concur in that amendment. I will state we have no definite information on that subject except as we derive it from members of the House. Nobody in behalf of the Department has made any special recommendation to us since it was put in by the Senate. That I suppose is open really to a committee of confer-

I desire to state to the gentlemen here, what I think they ought to understand, that concurrence in the Committee of the Whole House will be regarded in the nature of instructions by any committee of conference which is appointed. Therefore the committee ought to be a little guarded in moving to concur or non-concur, because it might result in definite action without full investigation of the sub-

I expect it would have been put in by the House committee if the committee had been asked to do so. I think at the time we prepared this bill the request was not made, and the urgency and need of it were not understood. The committee unanimously agreed that should be concurred in.

No. 19 is for an employé of the Senate. That we move to concur in as a matter of course out of comity to the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 20 and 21 were regarded as formal amendments intended to carry out some purpose the House intended to carry out, and therefore we move to concur.

Mr. CONGER. Relating to what?

Mr. McMAHON. The southern claims commission. I think it is a mere change in language. The amendments are numbered 20 and 21.

Amendment numbered 22 is for extra labor on the grounds, putting up seed and printing labels for the Botanic Garden, $550. This is an important industry, putting up seeds for members of Congress, which it was thought by the Committee on Appropriations could not be neglected when so many gentlemen were up for re-election, and therefore they thought it only right to put in an appropriation of $850 to make it pleasant and wholesome in every man's district. [Laughter.]

The twenty-third amendment of the Senate relates to the appointment of special deputy marshals. This amendment in the Senate, as offered by my colleague from the State of Ohio, provided for the appointment of such deputy marshals of elections by judges of the courts. The Constitution of the United States is a little technical on this point and requires the appointment of officers shall be made by the President and heads of Departments or by the courts, and we thought President and heads of Departments or by the courts, and we thought in looking at this amendment by the Senate—indeed we knew it probably before the Senate put it in—it should be adopted, so that the appointment should be by the circuit court of the United States, or, in the absence of the circuit court or circuit judge, by the district court of that district. The committee therefore have moved to concur in this amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that the House passed an unconstitutional provision?

Mr. McMAHON. The committee is not the law committee of this House; the committee is a Committee on Appropriations. And I want to say to my distinguished colleague that we were all too modest to criticise the work of my distinguished colleague from the State est to criticise the work of my distinguished colleague from the State of Ohio, but have now accepted the criticism of the Senate on that question and of my colleague who now stands on the floor of the House.

Mr. CONGER. We assented to the passage of that clause—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. MCMAHON. I do.

Mr. CONGER. We assented to the passage of that clause with that provision in because we were aware on this side it could never be car-

Does the gentleman say he voted for it?

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman say he voted for it?
Mr. CONGER. No, sir.
Mr. McMAHON. Do I understand he voted even for the appropriation bill which had it in ?

Mr. CONGER. I cannot tell what the gentleman understands.
Mr. McMAHON. I ask the question.
Mr. CONGER. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the idiosyn-cracies of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McMAHON. My recollection of the proceedings in the House is that we had to pass the bill without the vote of gentlemen on the other side

Mr. CONGER. That is true, and will be again unquestionably if this clause is retained.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not see where the gentleman's consent comes

Mr. CONGER. Assented, I said. The gentleman ought to be familiar with the use of ordinary words. [Laughter.]
Mr. McMAHON. If he sticks on the first syllable, all right. [Re-mewed laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. The foundation of my remarks is on the gentleman's own side of the question. [Laughter.]
Mr. McMAHON. Has the gentleman any further remarks to address to me?

Mr. CONGER. I did address a remark to the gentleman. Yes; I am not above speaking to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. I think not. I do not know anybody on this floor the gentleman is above speaking to, not only once, twice, but a dozen times a day. No man on this side of the House can get the floor but the gentleman from Michigan is anxious to be recognized by him and to speak to him.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman desire to ask any further

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to ask any further question until the other is answered.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman's wit is not ready just now he can sit down and I will proceed with the explanation.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman does not feel disposed to answer the question I will not press it.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman has a question pumped up now,

I am ready to hear it.

Mr. CONGER. I asked the gentleman whether it was understood on that side of the House as on this, that the proposition that the judges should appoint these officers was unconstitutional and there-judges should appoint these officers was unconstitutional and therefore could not be carried into effect.

Mr. McMAHON. I think not.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has declined answering that question.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not think it was understood so on that side, because, if it was, gentlemen on that side were very derelict in sitting there and allowing an unconstitutional law to pass.

Mr. REED, (in his seat.) We voted against it; we did not suffer it to receive the constitutional seat.

it to pas

Mr. McMAHON. Has the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] a question? If any gentleman desires to ask me a question I hope he will rise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass to the last amendment of the Senate. It is to add these words:

For repairs to the court-house building in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $800, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

In that we move to concur.

I have now made a short statement, which probably was unnecessary; but it may save trouble to members of the House, because the printed bill, when taken in connection with the report of the committee, will show exactly what the committee recommend and do not recommend; and it is for the House to determine what it will do with these recommendations.

I now move, in accordance with the understanding, the hour of three o'clock having arrived, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTHORNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MRS. CORNELIA F. WHITE.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1564) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ASSESSMENT OF TERRITORIAL REVENUE.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Territories, in order that it may be printed for the use of the committee before Tuesday morning.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRENTS accordingly introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5808) to annul an act of the last Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory entitled "An act to provide for assessing and collecting the county and territorial revenue;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS TO SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. BRENTS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5809) to amend section 2309, chapter 5, title 32, Revised Statutes, giving additional homestead rights to soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH DEMPSEY.

Mr. MASON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5810) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Dempsey, late a captain of Company K, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at three o'clock and three minutes p. m.) the House

CANAL IMPROVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a Senate resolution asking for certain information, to report it back without amendment, and ask that it be now considered.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish the Senate with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the filling up of the old canal, the amount of ground that will be reclaimed thereby; also the probable cost of placing James Creek Canal in good sanitary condition.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1611) to incorporate the National American Humane Association, asked to be discharged from its fur-ther consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from virginia when he proposes to call up the bill?

Mr. WITHERS. I propose to call it up to-morrow, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate to take it up then. Should it not be, my desire is to get it up at as early a day as practicable, so as to get as early action of the Senate upon it as it is willing to take.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1082) for the relief of Smith E. G. Lawson, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 676) to amend class 2 of the general incorporation laws of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 633) for the relief of the State National Bank of Louisiana, instruct me to report it adversely, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Jonas] desires it to go there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I am directed by the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections to make a report on the prevention of the elective franchise by threats of deprivation of employment. I do not report the testimony now. The understanding is that the minority will make a minority report, for which there will be

Some ten days given.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose there is no limit.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no special time fixed; but we want it done as soon as possible.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the subject of selecting jurors in the interest of economy, and have directed me to report an original bill.

The bill (S. No. 1643) to provide that whenever the circuit and district courts of the United States are held at the same time and place

trict courts of the United States are held at the same time and place there shall be but one grand or petit jury summoned to attend on said courts at one and the same time was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is but one section to the bill and I will state that nobody objects to it. It simply provides that wherever the district and circuit courts of the United States sit at the same time and place there shall be but one panel of grand and petit jurors summoned at the same time, and that they shall be interchangeably used in both courts. That is all there is of the bill, and I would ask its present consideration. its present consideration.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States shall be held at the same time and place, grand and petit jurors summoned to attend in either of said courts may serve in the other of said courts, and but one grand or petit jury shall be summoned to attend on said courts at one and the same time; said jurors to be drawn as is or may be required by law. This provision shall not prevent either of said courts from procuring the attendance of several panels of jurors successively, as the business of either may require.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me that there must be many districts in the United States where the business is so important and the cases are so numerous that to make that a peremptory provision of law would be a serious detriment.

would be a serious detriment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We have not passed a court bill since I have been in the Senate where we have not inserted such a provision, but it is not general, as it ought to be. There is a provision at the end of this bill that, when the business requires, the courts can summon just as many jurors as they please.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall make no objection to the bill; but it appears to me very questionable whether it may not result in retarding busi-

Mr. HARRIS. I will inquire of the Senator from Illinois if there is not a provision of law already existing that authorizes the court to order jurors to be summoned whenever there is not sufficient in the regular panel?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We have incorporated that at the end of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. WHYTE. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for printing 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine, have had the same under consideration and report the same back with a recommendation that it pass, but with that recommendation suggest two amendments, which the Secretary will see marked upon the face of the resolution.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That there oe printed 100,000 copies of Special Report No. 22, of the Commissioner of Agriculture, containing the reports of the veterinary surgeons appointed to investigate diseases of swine, and infectious and contagious diseases incident to other classes of domesticated animals; of which 65,000 copies shall be printed for the use of members of the House, 20,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 8, to strike out "five," so as to read "60,000 copies shall be printed for the ase of members of the House," and, in line 9, after the word "twenty," to insert "five," so as to read "25,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1644) to repeal section 13 of the act of Congress approved July 12, 1876; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1645) for the relief of Lieutenant John A. Payne, Nineteenth Infantry, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1646) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell, in adjusting titles to lands in Michigan;" which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on the files relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to consider at this time the joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) providing for a commission to consider and report what legislation is needed for the better regulation of commerce among the States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think that ought hardly to come up at this time.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Anthony rule be set aside for the purpose of taking up the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to postpone the pending order, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule be indicating his purpose if that motion is suggested to thony rule, he indicating his purpose, if that motion is successful, to move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is a bill pending on the Calendar to give a pension to a person which has occupied this body for some four days.

There are a great many reports on the Calendar from the Committee on Claims as well as from the Committee on Pensions. As far as the Committee on Claims is concerned with all those cases on the Calendar not acted upon, you might as well abolish that committee, if we are not going to have this little time allowed to us to consider and pass upon the bills from that committee. There is no use hereafter for that committee to meet at all and to undergo the great labor it does if we are not to have the short time from the conclusion of the morning business after twelve until half past one o'clock to consider bills on the Calendar. The bill granting a pension to Mr. Phares has been before the body some time. If this motion prevails, it lays that bill aside. The joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania can come up very well in its regular order on the Calendar. Ido not know anything in the way of taking it up in its regular turn. I do not think that the business that has been on the Calendar, some of it for two months, should be displaced to take up that measure or anything else.

I am not addressing myself to the merits of the joint resolution at all; but if the Calendar is not to be disposed of in its regular order, we might as well abolish a good many of the committees; it is to the disadvantage of any subject-matter to have it upon the Calendar; you had better not have it on the Calendar, but move in the morning hour to take it up

The VICE-PRÉSIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to the Chair whether that

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. With all respect to the Chair, I think a few days ago the Chair decided that a resolution was in order in the morning hour, and the Chair submitted the question to the Senate, as I recollect

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was not a similar question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My recollection is that it was a resolution pending in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question then was whether the remainder of the morning hour should be devoted to the consideration of concurrent and other resolutions. The pending question is whether the majority of the Senate shall now consider the bills on the Calendar under the Anthony rule. The Chair rules that the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not take issue with the Chair; I think the Chair is right; but my impression is that the Senate ruled the other way a few days ago.

The joint resolution which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to take up is a very important one, and one that I think ought to be well considered by the Senate before we act upon it. It ought not to be taken up here within a day or two after it has been reported from the committee. It proposes to create a commission, as I understand it, to be composed of three Senators, three members of the House, and three civilians to be appointed by the President, who are to consider all questions relating to railroad transportation, and during the summer to sit where they please, as much as they please, and as they please. It is a question that requires more consideration than it can have if taken up in the morning hour, and when there are other bills pending that I think are entitled to consideration.

I am not speaking now as to the merits of the joint resolution, but I would say to my friend from Pennsylvania that I have not had time to consider it. It was reported last Thursday morning. I think it more than probable that with an opportunity to examine it, some of the objections at least that I have now to it may be removed. I submit to the Senator whether it had not better lie over a morning or two, so as to give Senators who have not examined it an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It has not been my habit to ask much of the time of the Senate; nor do I desire to do so to-day; but I think this is a very important subject, and one that requires immediate attention. If the commission is to be appointed, as I hope it may be, all the time between now and the meeting of the next session of Congress will be required to take into consideration the subjects to be brought before them. The resolution has been examined by the Committee on Commerce to whom it was referred, and was rearriguedly received back to the Scanter. unanimously reported back to the Senate. I understand from quite a number of Senators that they are anxious it should pass for the reasons I have stated.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] a few days ago in the remarks which he made in objecting to the consideration of this joint resolution, stated that we had forty-five regular committees, and that we had two committees either of which might take this matter One of those committees, the Committee on Commerce, in charge. One of those committees, the Committee on Commerce, did have it before them, and if they had felt that they had time to examine the subject and to report a bill such as the joint resolution contemplates, they certainly would have done so. The Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, of which I am a member, is composed of members of this body whose time is entirely taken up on other committees; so that I think if this subject is to be investigated at all, it must be done in the manner proposed by the joint resolution, and believing it to be important, I ask the Senate now to take it up and consider it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator, among other things, said that the joint resolution ought to be passed because the commission proposed ought to go to work at once. It is well known that no Senators or members of the House can leave here on such a duty while Congress is in session.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him I will state that it is not necessary that the commission should leave here while Congress is in session; but it can meet in Washington. It can bring persons and papers before it here if necessary; and the investigation could go on even while Congress is in session. After that if it wishes to go to another place, it can do so. It is not the intention of the mover of the joint resolution that this

It is not the intention of the mover of the joint resolution that this should be a commission to roam all over the country. It can be stationary. They can get all the information they want anywhere—here, in New York, in West Virginia, or in any place they choose to go.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The joint resolution, in my judgment, is a very important one; and it ought to have thorough consideration whenever it is taken up. The Senator has referred to the number of committees that we have. I stated the other day not quite as the Senator puts it, not that we had forty-five standing committees, but forty-five committees in all: or at least it was my intenmittees, but forty-five committees in all; or at least it was my inten-

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. That is immaterial.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We have forty-five standing and select committees in all, and certainly those forty-five committees ought to be able to consider all questions before us. But that point I do not to be able to consider all questions before us. But that point I do not care about pressing now. I notice that the joint resolution, among other things, provides for two stenographers. Two are hardly necessary for one committee. If the Senate wishes to take up the joint resolution, it involves, I think, important questions which will be discussed for some time, and I doubt very much whether it ought to be taken up in the morning hour.

M. FATON. Law inclined to the opinion that the joint resolution.

Mr. EATON. I am inclined to the opinion that the joint resolution will lead to very considerable discussion, and, if so, I hardly think that my friend from Pennsylvania will care to bring it up in the morning hour. I am inclined to favor the proposition, but I suggest to my friend that there is no hurry about the appointment of the commission as it is constituted by the joint resolution. You will hardly get within a few days or weeks three Senators and three Representatives to attend to the business of this commission. Therefore it may as well be delayed and let some matters come up that demand immediate action. I hardly think the joint resolution ought to come up to-day.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the Senator from Connecticut, I will state that the joint resolution must pass the House of Representatives before it can go into effect, and there will be considerable delay, I take it, before it gets through that body, and there may be some delay before it is signed by the President. Even if it passes the Senate to-day I do not suppose that any action can be taken under it for a month to come. Therefore I am anxious, if the Senate will agree to the resolution and think it is right and proper, to see it passed at as early a day as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to postpone the Calendar of General Orders.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 14;

no quorum voting.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 21; as follows:

Allison, Baldwin, Blair, Burnside, Call, Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis.,	Carpenter, Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Dawes, Ferry, Garland, Hamlin,	Hill of Georgia, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Plumb, Pryor, Ransom,	Rollins, *Teller, Vance, Voorhees Wallace, Whyte, Windom.

So the motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution indicated by him

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) providing for a commission to consider and report what legislation is needed for the better regulation of commerce among the States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 23, after the word "commissioner," to insert "shall be paid his actual reasonable expenses, and each commissioner."

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, in line 24, after the word "shall," to insert "in addition thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 25, to fill the blank before the word "dollars," with the word "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 26, after the word "duties," to strike out "and his actual reasonable expenses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution as it stands by the adoption of the amendments. I do not understand what the effect of the amendments is.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as amended, as follows:

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as amended, as follows: Resolved, &c., That a commission is hereby constituted, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and three commissioners, to be appointed by the President, who shall sit during the recess and inquire generally into the conditions that will most favorably affect the transportation of the commerce among the States carried by land and water routes, securing thereby to the people the required facilities at the lowest charges with the greatest certainty and economy in time, and that will avoid and prevent any unjust discrimination, unnecessary burdens, or impediments in its transportation, in order to ascertain whether these conditions can be secured by legislation by Congress, and, if so, in what particulars and by what measures, and report their recommendations to Congress at its next session. That said commission shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and examine witnesses; shall have power to appoint and employ one clerk and two stenographers, to be paid such usual compensation as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and each commissioner shall be paid his actual reasonable expenses, and each commissioner appointed by the President shall, in addition thereto, receive a compensation of $10 per diem while engaged in the performance of his duties; and the sum necessary therefor is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I move to amend, in line 4, by striking out "appointed by the President of" and inserting "selected by," and also, in line 6, to strike out "appointed by the Speaker," and insert "selected by the same;" so as to read:

That a commission is hereby constituted, to consist of three Senators, to be selected by the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the same, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In line 6, the resolution reads now, "and three commissioners to be appointed by the President." I move to amend so as to read, "three commissioners, one to be selected by the Senate, one by the House, and one by the President."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Does the Senator mean by that to have this new man to be appointed by the Senate selected from among Senators or from outsiders

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Upon the suggestion of Senators, I move simply to strike out "three," in line 6, and insert "one."

Mr. CONKLING. One what?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One commissioner appointed by the President, so as to make the whole number seven instead of nine.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I hope that amendment will not

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Thope that amendment will hole be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Davis.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. Personally I see no necessity for the appointment of a commissioner by the President. It strikes me that the members of the two Houses on the committee are fully competent without the aid of an appointee of the President of the United States. I think the whole thing is unnecessary; but if we are to have an investigation into this subject, I do not see why members of the Senate and members of the House, who are paid for the services, may not perform all the duties which a commission composed of Senators, members of the House, and commissioners appointed by the President, may perform. The commissioners appointed by the President dent, may perform. The commissioners appointed by the President are to be paid $10 a day. I do not know how long their service will continue. I am aware that that is not a very great amount to pay in the expenditure of public money either by the Senate or the House. We go on as if we had all the money at command that was desired, and we take very little interest in those who pay the money into the Treasury, but we expend it according to our own pleasure, whether it is to result in good to the country or not.

I believe the proposed investigation entirely unnecessary. I see no good that can come from it. I have not heard the Senator who introduced the resolution explain any necessity for it. I do not know what it proposes; I do not know what evils are to be remedied by this investigation; and whatever we may do, people will inquire why we appoint this commission and what is to result from it.

We very frequently hear of investigations instituted that are wholly Much criticism is indulged on the action of the Senate and House in appointing committees and commissions to investigate at very great expense various matters; but if we are to have an investigation, I do not see why members of the Senate and members of the House are not fully competent to make all the investigation that the subject requires. Therefore I am opposed to any commissioners appointed by the President or by anybody else. If we are to have commissioners why should we have them selected by the avecutive commissioners, why should we have them selected by the executive department?

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, having concurred as a member of the Committee on Commerce in reporting this joint resolution—indeed the report was the unanimous work of the committee—I think I am able to answer the suggestions or questions of the Senator from Delaware.

The object of this inquiry was stated somewhat at large by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Cameron,] who originally moved the resolution. In some extended remarks the other day he commented, as I thought very clearly and instructively, upon the urgent importance of this general theme. The purpose of the investigation is twofold; first, to acquire information, and were that its only purpose the Senator from Delaware might have warrant its only purpose the two Hoyees would be found quitte along the two Hoyees would be found out to the saying that members of the two Houses would be found quite adequate to conduct it; but the other purpose is to invoke from this commission recommendations, advice, suggestions, a projet of legislation if they shall think legislation would be useful in securing the very important objects in view. When you come to that, you must see the object of going beyond the members of the two Houses. It is that the President, if he selects wisely as the presumption must be he will, will select experts, if I may so say, will select for one of these commissioners a man specially taught or instructed in regard to the subject. For example although I do not know that he ever will be thought of, Mr. Henry V. Poor who has devoted so many years to railway investigations, to writing on the subject, would be in respect of many of the incidents falling within the scope of this investigation a very proper selection. So I might mention other men whose lives and pursuits have trained them to do that which I may say without offense to the honorable Senator from Delaware he could not do quate to conduct it; but the other purpose is to invoke from this comout offense to the honorable Senator from Delaware he could not do for lack of the practical training, which certainly I could not do, and which it would be very difficult to find any member of either House who could do as well. Therefore that we might employ and utilize the special faculties and the special fund of information pertaining to those who in particular are instructed in this regard, it was thought wise by the committee to authorize in the mode proposed the selection of three of these nine persons to bring in such fund of instruction and aid as they could.

tion and aid as they could.

Now, if $10 a day be an inordinate compensation, it would be true of one as well as of three; but, then, I submit that any Senator who so thinks should make his amendment a reduction of the compensation. "Ten dollars" was put in by the committee, the resolution having a blank, the committee thinking that that, upon the whole, was as near as we could well come to what would be a fair compensation to a man who did not go into this for mercenary motives, and who at the same time could not be expected to give his time and labor without any compensation at all. So it was that the committee came to the conclusion that it would be wise to have at least three persons, one-third of the commission, drawn from the country at large persons, one-third of the commission, drawn from the country at large and drawn from those walks and avocations in life which a private individual would naturally resort to if he wanted to find a person whose judgment and whose services would be valuable in this regard.

Now, one other word and I have done. My honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] said that this might provoke a good deal of discussion; some other Senator said it ought to be considered at large; and another Senator that it was a very important matter. All that may be true; and yet this is a mere preliminary inquiry; merely private the provided that the provided t may be true; and yet this is a mere preliminary inquiry; merely using a hand to gather up facts and recommendations to be in the future submitted to Congress. It certainly can do no great harm beyond the expenditure of the money, and considering how much has been said and how much remains to be said, how enormously the country would be advantaged if the strifes and hardships growing out of the want of adjustment of railway and other freights could be brought to an end, it seems to me that this is not an unwise or extravagant expenditure of money. Indeed I would be willing to vote for the extreme amount if I thought the chances were nine to one that it would fail for the remaining one chance of success in the attempt to acquire this information to enlighten us all to the end that hereafter we may profit by it. I would vote for what must be (unless this shall fall into improper hands, as I cannot suppose,) a very limited expenditure at most to enable such a commission to acquire this information.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York has said, this resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce by the unanimous vote of all who were present at rather an unusually full meeting, and after a very full consideration of the subject. The records of the Senate will show that upon this question probably more than any other has the Congress of the United States been me morialized, I think from every State almost in the Union. in the Committee on Commerce are absolutely burdened with petitions from every section of the country upon the subject of interstate commerce and the regulation of railroads, and the committee thought that in dealing with such a vast subject, embracing so many conflict-ing interests, railroads built necessarily at such different costs, railroads running necessarily at such different rates of expense, varying roads running necessarily at such different rates of expense, varying according to the topography of the country and the amount of freight, it would be impossible for gentlemen sitting here at a central point like Washington to determine what was due on the one hand to the great mass of shippers and on the other hand to the railroads, and they thought, therefore, that as little as Congress could do to meet the wishes of the great mass of the people of this country was to make some investigation into this subject, and the question was how should

It will be difficult to frame a bill, as every Senator can see at once, to meet the wants of the country; and the very first element of success in doing that would be to get information upon this subject, and at the same time to get suggestions from men who are eminently practical and qualified to give opinions on the subject.

I was led myself very largely, indeed almost entirely, to vote for this resolution by the consideration that it had been already tested in my own State. Georgia has recently appointed a commission upon this very important subject to determine railroad freights through that State, and I believe I may say that the report of that commission, recently made, has given almost universal satisfaction to the people and to the railroads. There was great clamor from different sections of our State, one section complaining that there was discrimination against it another section complaining that there was discrimination against it another sections of policy of the section o ination against it, another section complaining that through freights were destroying the business of that particular locality. Our Legislature was burdened, as Congress is, with petitions to do something which would relieve the country and give satisfaction to the people. The Legislature, after mature consideration, decided that it was best The Legislature, after mature consideration, decided that it was best to have a commission appointed to make report, to get up facts, and to suggest legislation, and, as I said a while ago, that commission has acted; it has produced quiet and peace and satisfaction, I think, to almost everybody in that State. As the Senator from New York has suggested, the bare possibility of accomplishing that much for the United States certainly justifies some expenditure of the public money.

These were the motives that influenced the committee. great desire myself on this subject except that as chairman of the Committee on Commerce I am anxious that these memorialists from different sections of the country shall have some assurance from Congress that we mean to take action upon that subject. What is wisest to be done, I think can best be determined after we get at the facts, and the best way to get at the facts is by investigation by men competent to obtain them.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am opposed to this resolution, for reasons which I will briefly state.

I believe that the Congress of the United States ought to control any commission it may appoint, therefore it should be made up of its own members. It ought to be composed of men who can explain on the floor of the respective Houses the information that may be obtained by the investigation. Stenographers are provided for in this resolution, they can take down whatever testimony men belonging to both Houses shall elicit, so that all the views of the experts can

There is no design, as I understand the proposition, to select men who will give us only their individual views; but these men are to take the testimony brought before them from all parts of the country, and then lay it before the Senate and before the House and tell both Houses what manner of men they were that came before them, what influenced their action, under what influences they were brought to appear before the committee, and all other facts necessary for us to know. I think the members of the commission who make the investigating committee should be men who on the floors of their respective Houses can tell all they saw and heard, and give us advice according to the facts.

All the eminent men in the country are not to be selected, I presume on the commission to give their personal views. Each man, I do not care how eminent he may be, who desires to give his views or is interested in the great questions to be inquired into, can come before the comested in the great questions to be inquired into, can come before the commission and have his testimony taken down and reported to us; I desire to say frankly that I wish the Senate and the House to hold the control of this commission, and if anybody is to be appointed by the President, I would let him appoint only one man, and he should be appointed by the advice and consent of the Senate. I would hold the power in the body of the Senate and the House, that are responsible for the legislation looked to under the resolution. Three to be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the President of the United States is not according to my views of what is best for us to do. If, however, they are to be appointed by the respective Houses, as I think they all ought to be, we might as well appoint a committee representing all shades of opinion and of all parties, and let the Senate and House consult as to what is best. I am opposed to the President interfering at all in this matter; but if he does I would surely not allow him to appoint three or even one without at least submitting to the Senate who he is, so that the bodies responsible for the legislation Senate who he is, so that the bodies responsible for the legislation shall have the control of the investigation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the Senator from Kentucky I will state that I have not any objection whatever to the Senate having control of the three men to be appointed by the President; but I do think there ought to be three competent men, experts, if there can be such a thing as an expert in this question, joined with if there can be such a thing as an expert in this question, joined with a committee of the two Houses, three men who have paid some attention to the subject to be considered by this commission. If the Senator wants to move an amendment that they shall be confirmed by the Senate, I have not any objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the statements of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. GORDON,] of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] and of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] seem to show very clearly the necessity of some action on this subject-matter, and as the original resolution was sent to the Committee on Commerce for its consideration, it would seem of course to be the sense of the Senate that that committee should primarily consider the question. The only reason, so far as I gather from the debate, why that committee does not consider it fully and finally and make its recommendation to the Senate and to the country is the press of other matters. It seems to be conceded that there is no more important matter connected with the internal commerce of the country than this, and if the committee on Commerce was obliged to neglect any, it should not be this, but some other of the pressing or perhaps not as pressing subjects which are referred to it.

But if that were so, the Senate will observe that the duties originally referred to the Committee on Commerce have been divided, and the Senate has one select committee already, that on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, which, so far as I can understand the matter, has nothing whatever to do unless it is when the Committee on Commerce is unable to consider a question like this to take charge of it. I observe the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck.] the chairman of the committee, who has just spoken, and I should like to inquire of him if there has been a single meeting of that committee called during the present or the past session. Has that committee had a single bill referred to it for its consideration? If not, I would nad a single off referred to it for its consideration? If not, I would inquire of him and of the Senate, if any one can conceive of a subject proper to be considered by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, if this is not that subject-matter? A few of the committees of the Senate seem to be overworked; there are other committees that if they have anything whatever to do, my limited observation of this Chamber has failed to discover what it is.

Now, upon the general question whether it is necessary to have into have the general question whether it is necessary to have incorporated with members of the two Houses of Congress to consider this matter persons outside of Congress, I wish to offer a suggestion or two. It must certainly be considered that whatever legislation is to be taken must be taken by the two Houses of Congress; and to incorporate with these investigating committees of Congress men outside, men who are to testify or are to act as experts, is, it seems to me, entirely unnecessary, because they cannot legislate, they can only recommend; and to incorporate them with the legislative power of the Government is to give to men who are not a portion of the Legislature of the Government an undue influence, an influence beyond that which should properly be given to the opinion of the citizen. It eems to me it is entirely a wrong practice, perhaps objectionable on seems to me it is entirely a wrong practice, perhaps objectionable on higher grounds than the matter of propriety.

I hardly see how such an act can itself be a constitutional act, for it must certainly be delegating to those outside of the legislative branch of the Government a certain degree of influence beyond that of a mere opinion which they otherwise would possess. This branch of the Government can avail itself of all the knowledge which any was related to the control of the man whatever in the land may have upon this subject. He can be summoned. The most intelligent gentlemen, knowing the most upon this general matter, can be summoned to testify as witnesses, and thus the committee can avail themselves of all the knowledge that there is upon the subject; and it is improper to give any one outside of the House or of the Senate any influence beyond that which he would exert simply as a private citizen.

I am aware, and I think any one can perceive, that by incorporating in a commission of this kind, prominent and influential men coning in a commission of this kind, prominent and influential men connected with the transportation interests of the country—and nobody knows who will be appointed—we may give to these men and to certain influences in the country an undue power in fashioning the legislation which may be the result. If this commission is simply to gather knowledge, to obtain information to be laid before the Senate and before the House, what real occasion is there to do more than simply appoint a committee of members in the ordinary way, and endow them with the power of summoning persons and obtaining papers in the usual way and for the purpose for which information is sought by the committees of Congress. the committees of Congre

It may be said that a regular committee of the Senate is too numerous and too cumbersome for the purpose; but it is the common practice to make investigations through the agency of sub-committees. if from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate there can be no three gentlemen selected, can there not be from this other committee that I have referred to or from the Senate at large? Is it not possible to find three intelligent gentlemen in the Senate, if they are not connected with the Committee on Commerce, who possibly might be able to give their time and attention to the investigation of this matter? And then there is the special committee, of which the honorable Senator from Kentucky is chairman, with nothing in the world to do as a committee. It does seem to me that if the chairman is too busy there could be two men taken from the majority of that committee; and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, who introduced this resolution, is also a member of the minority of that com-

The occasion for the constitution of this commission or this new committee seems to me to be altogether imaginary. I do not see what good it will do, how it can throw any light on the subject that we cannot obtain otherwise; and it does seem to me that it is but a continuation and aggravation of the old bad practice.

Mr. BECK. I desire only to say on the part of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman that it has had very little to do, and it is composed of members (leaving myself out of view) who are perfectly competent to attend to this matter. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is a member of it; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] is a member of it; the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] and others. That committee, in my judgment, can take all the evidence; can make a report; can hear all the experts that can be brought, and will do it, and do it perfectly, and gather all the information that any outside committee can gather, and then give their reasons before the Senate for the action they shall propose to take and the recommendation they may make at the next session of Congress, just as well as any set of men that can be selected. It is because I believe that that I am opposed to this resolution.

We have had to do with many as important things, and two years ago the whole subject was investigated by that committee and two large volumes printed, the Senator from Minnesota then being chairman of it. We have had before us all the matters connected with the navigation of the Mississippi, the Eads jetties, and so on; and we have now. We have delayed action in regard to a very important subject, connection between the Chesapeake and the Delaware by a shipcanal, because the House is considering it, and we did not think it important to press it before us now as the House committee was acting.

If this question has to be looked into by any committee was acting.

If this question has to be looked into by any committee, I have no hesitation in saying, I do not care how much labor it involves or what time it takes, that committee can do it and will do it, and will make a report that will embody all the views that any gentleman who may see fit to come before the committee shall give.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I only wish to add that I am informed that the select committee of which I spoke has been made by recent order of the Searte one of the standing committee.

order of the Senate one of the standing committees.

Mr. BECK. It was at the last session of this Congress.

Mr. MAXEY. Is an amendment in order ?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is one amendment pending.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia by striking out in lines 6 and 7 of the resolution the words:

And three commissioners, to be appointed by the President.

And, as a necessary corollary of that, I move in lines 24 and 25 to strike out the words:

And each commissioner appointed by the President shall, in addition thereto, receive a compensation of $10 per diem.

The importance of interstate commerce is thoroughly appreciated, not only in Congress, but by the whole country. It has received a very large share of attention by appropriate committees in both Houses of Congress; not only in this Congress, but in past Congresses. I can see no reason why Congress should go outside of its own bodies for the purpose of getting persons to aid them in the discharge of this duty, for they have the power to summon witnesses, send for books and papers, and receive all the light that can possibly be thrown upon this great subject from any source whatever.

The members of the Senate and of the House are responsible to their constituents and the whole country for the important duties which they perform here. They are supposed to have the intelligence to discharge any duty whatever incumbent upon them in the way of legislation. Therefore I cannot see for the life of me why we should go outside of these bodies for the purpose of selecting three persons, to be named by the President, as the joint resolution has it, to aid Congress in doing its duty.

If the amendment which I have had the honor to offer is not car-West Virginia further, by providing that one commissioner, selected by the President, shall be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

But still behind all that, I have never yet seen the good flowing from these special roving commissions sent about through the country to Saratoga Springs and the White Sulphur to test the qualities of those two springs and the cuisine of the Fifth Avenue Hotel and other places of that kind; and that is about all I have ever known to result from these commissions. Let Congress do its own duty, do it through its appropriate committees, and I have no fear duty, do it through its appropriate committees, and I have no fear whatever that a bill will not be presented such as, after receiving the due consideration of the two Houses, will meet the approbation of the people and the needs of the case.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It was said by the Senator from Kentucky that there is a transportation committee, and that that committee is willing to take this work. It will be recoilected that three or four years ago, in 1875 I believe, the Senate appointed a committee on this very question, and that committee went over almost the entire territory of the United States, and perhaps into Canada. There are two large volumes now in the document-room containing their report and testimony. That committee was composed, among There are two large volumes now in the document-room containing their report and testimony. That committee was composed, among others, of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] and had the benefit of his information and advice. The present Secretary of the Treasury, I recollect, was on it. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] was the chairman. They went fully into the very subject that it is now proposed this special commission shall take charge of. The Committee on Transportation grew out of that, and it has grown into a standing committee upon this very question and no other question—commerce among the States, commerce with the seaboard. That special committee was organized for that nursoes and as I said it went special committee was organized for that purpose, and, as I said, it went over the whole territory of the country, and made a report which is now in the document-room.

In addition to that, we know that the House of Representatives at this session has heard almost every eminent railroad man in the countries. try and has had his views taken down in writing. Those views are now in evidence before the House. I do not know of an eminent railroad man in the country who has not been summoned before the House. The information is there, and there is no necessity for this resolution in order to get a committee. If there is any particular man wanted by any committee, he can be summoned and brought here. Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.
Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Senator is arguing against the appointment of a special committee.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is arguing that in part. He has many objections to the resolution. That is one.
Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. On that part I should like to call his attention to a special committee of which I think he is chairman that has been in session now for three years, during which time the Senator took a trip to Europe and returned, and I should like to know what is going to be the result of that special committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will find out in a very few days now, and I think he will not be as well satisfied as he is now on that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I will be satisfied with anything that comes from that committee or the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will hear from that committee in due time, and it will not be very long either. But if the forming of that committee has anything to do with this commit-tee I fail to see it, and if the Senator thinks he can push his scheme forward, if it is a scheme, or push his committee because there was a committee appointed two years ago or more, that is a question that does not enter into this.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. This is not my committee, and

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. This is not my committee, and I do not expect to be a part of the committee; therefore I have not any scheme to push forward of a personal character.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I correct that. I do not believe the Senator has a scheme. I think it was a wrong word and I corrected it immediately; but still the Senator had as well let the question alone about another committee. I think that has nothing to do with this matter. There are, as is well known, among the four great trunk this matter. There are, as is well known, among the four great trunk lines of this country two that are entirely in one State; there are two others that pass into and through different States. We all know that the question of whether or not Congress can control the railroads in either case is a doubtful one, but certainly there are very few persons who claim that Congress can in any way legislate for or control a road that is entirely in one State. The Pennsylvania Central Railroad and the New York Central Railroad, I believe, each starts and ends in the season State while the Fair and the Paltingers and Ohio and in the same State, while the Erie, and the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Chesapeake and Ohio go into two States or more, and so they are in a very different position as to the legislation of Congress, as is thought by a great many people. A very different state of things exists as to

It may be possible that some legislation may be presented that would affect a part of these lines and not affect the others, for there are very few persons in the country who claim that when a road starts and ends in the same State Congress has anything to do with it. That is the case with two of the great railroads of this country to-day. I think it best to allow the States and the railroads to control their own affairs, and Congress ought to have very little to do with them. If this is merely for inquiry, to find out what can or what ought to be done in the way of transportation, then we have the information, for as I have just said a House committee has been sitting this entire session probably, or a large portion of it, the Committee on Commerce, which has been examining into this very question. It has taken a very large amount of testimony, and almost every eminent railroad man in the country has been before it. In addition to that, whatever the Senate could get by the committee it raised a few years

Mr. President, if we are to have a commission, why not let it be a Senate commission? What do you want to go outside of the Senate for? Why do you want to leave Washington? What do you want power to go elsewhere for, and have appropriations made to the committee to pay for its movements over the country? It appears to me altogether unnecessary. It ought to be confined to the Senate if it is to be created at all.

Again, three commissioners are to be appointed by the President, and the Senate has not anything to say about them. Congress has not anything to say about them. If they are to be appointed, they certainly ought to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. There is no objection to that.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand; but I do not think we ought to have them at all. I shall move at the proper time that they shall be confirmed by the Senate, if we are to have them; but I do not think we ought to have the commission in the first place.
The question is one of considerable doubt whether it ought to exist

Again, this question of interference with railroads is one that we ought to go very slowly about. I think the States ought to have control of the roads, and not the Federal Government. My friend from Delaware asks me to give way for him a minute, to which I have no objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution—after the word "measures," in line 17, to insert:

And also to inquire and report to Congress the effect of the consolidation of great railroad lines and their management and control by a few persons upon the general interests of commerce, upon fares and freights charged for the transportation of persons and property, and generally what advantages or disadvantages have or are likely to result from such consolidation, and whether any and what power Congress possesses to prevent further consolidation of railroad companies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. I submit an amendment which I intend to offer to the joint resolution. I ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask that the amendment I offered to the joint resolution be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Hoar to the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, in the course of remarks submitted to the Senate on Friday last I endeavored to establish the following propositions:

First. That the indirect claims so called, i. e., the claims of the First. That the indirect claims so called, i. e., the claims of the United States as a nation against Great Britain, including what is called the claim for enhanced war premiums, were never relied upon by our Government as a ground for damages before the arbitrators at Geneva, and were only presented to have them by adjudication removed as a cause of contention between the two nations thereafter. This was shown by the letter of Mr. Fish to Mr. Schenck, which I read Second. That these indirect claims, including enhanced war premiums, were decided by the arbitrators to be invalid before them.

Third. That they were subsequently withdrawn from further consideration by Mr. Davis, our agent, before the arbitrators.

Fourth. That the arbitrators subsequently declared that these claims were no longer before them for consideration.

Fifth. That thereupon the United States prepared at the request of the arbitrators and presented a statement or bill of particulars of the individual claims, so called, that is the claims of our citizens for actual losses resulting from the acts of rebel cruisers, and thereupon the case before the arbitrators proceeded upon those claims alone and the award of $15,500,000 was made upon and for such individual claims, and for no others.

And sixth. That by the proceedings before the arbitrators and the acceptance of the money awarded our Government has forever estopped all individual claimants of the United States from presenting claims against the government of Great Britain on account of the claims thus allowed by the award.

The only remaining question is, whether those claims were presented by our Government, allowed by the tribunal, included in the award, and who are concluded and estopped by our having accepted the money awarded on their claims, are entitled to the money we received for them, and by the receipt of which they are estopped from making any further claim against Great Britain. This question suggests its proper answer so plainly that it is very difficult indeed to argue it. The ablest mathematician in the world would find it impossible to make an argument to prove that two and two make four. When any proposition is universally conceded, it passes out of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish in the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and beyond the reach of argument to establish the control of the domain and the control of the lish it. If an attorney presents the claim of his client in a court, recovers a judgment upon it, and makes the money upon the judgment, the law says he shall pay the money over to his client, and why does the law say this? Because it is in accordance with the universal sentiment of all honest men that an agent should pay over to his principal what he has received on that principal's account. It is true that in the case of an attorney an action at law can be maintained to enforce obedience to that precept of law. It is equally true that no action can be maintained against the United States in this case to compel it to pay over this money to the persons upon whose account and upon the allowance of whose claims it was paid by Great Britain and received by us. But can it be maintained, will the Senate decide, that because there is no means, no remedy to enforce that obligation, the obligation does not exist? Will it be contended here by any honest man that the Government of the United States, because expect from compulsory process to do right is therefore under no obligation.

empt from compulsory process to do right, is therefore under no obligation to do right and justice to its own citizens?

The United States, by the circulars I have read, solicited the control of these claims. It has received the money upon them; and although it cannot be compelled to pay that money over, still I maintain that the moral obligation to do so rests as completely and as clearly upon us as though we were answerable to an action at law to compelits performance. Do we as Senators recognize no higher right than that of might? And because the Government cannot be compelled to do justice, is any man willing to say it ought not to do justice?

The act of June 23, 1874, has been referred to in this debate as being in the way of passing a bill now to do justice to insurance companies. It is said this was a final decision by the Senate against the right of the insurance companies to receive any part of this fund if upon their whole business during the war they were gainers and not losers, and that those Senators who supported that bill are now inconsistent in supporting a bill to authorize payment to these companies which were not losers on the whole during the war. This, however, is

In the first place, it will be remembered that there was at that time great difference of opinion among Senators and a difference of opinion between the two Houses as to the proper disposition of this fund. There were certain claimants conceded by everybody to be entitled to payment. There was difference of opinion, however, in regard to the claims of the insurance companies and some other claims, and the bill which was passed, although it followed the award as far as it went, was regarded by those who supported it and by those who opposed it as leaving the question which is now before the Senate entirely undisposed of. In the discussion which took place in the two Honses upon the report of the conference committee upon that bill, this matter is made perfectly plain. In the RECORD of June 22, 1874, at page 5377, in the House, Mr. E. R. Hoar said:

It was my hope that this Congress would be able to pass a bill at this session making a final disposition of the Geneva award. I think that our position before the civilized world required it if possible. It is not proved to be possible or practicable to reconcile conflicting views. When that was ascertained in the committee of conference I went to those gentlemen and begged them for the honor of the country, for the honor of this Congress at least, to report a measure that would provide for the payment of the undisputed claimants upon the fund, so that this Congress should not go by and leave them unpaid, and leave the rest to be considered in the next Congress without prejudice to the rights of any man.

The bill itself provided in section 15 as follows:

The bill itself provided in section 15,as follows:

And after the payment of the said judgment-

That is the judgments that should be rendered by the commissioners appointed under the actand the reimbursement of the expenses as herein provided, if there shall remain any part of the said money, the same shall be and remain a fund from which Congress may hereafter authorize the payment of other claims thereon.

The true meaning of this provision became the subject of debate in the Senate between the champion of the bill, the then chairman of in the Senate between the champion of the bill, the then chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. Edmunds,] and the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] who was insisting upon an amendment which would protect the rights of the insurance companies. This debate may be found in the Record of June 22, 1874, at page 5359. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] had read to the Senate this provision of the bill and stated that in his opinion it would be claimed at the then next session of Congress that this provision in the bill was a final disposition of the rights of insurance companies. Now I read from page 5359: read from page 5359:

Mr. EDMUNDS, I should like to ask a question. I will not now put the question I desired to put when the Senator declined to yield, because he has gone beyond that part of the subject. On this part he says it will be claimed next winter that the words he has read will be construed to mean other claims than those of the insurance companies. Does the Senator think that is the true and fair meaning of the language as it reads ? Or is it the fair and true meaning, as it reads, that claims other than those allowed or adjudicated upon by the tribunal are open for the further adjudication of Congress, and inasmuch as we only authorize the adjudication of a certain class of insurance claims—

That was of course the claim of the companies above their profits-and not those in respect of which the companies made a profit, is not the fair meaning, let me ask the Senator, that there will be open for consideration next winter the claims of insurance companies to the full extent that they have demanded, except so far as we have already provided for them by the cases which we have allowed?

Mr. Thurman. What is far more important to those who I think are entitled to justice in this case, is that I should know what the Senator from Vermont thinks of this bill of this bill.

t this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator decline to answer the question I put to him?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; but I would prefer greatly to have the Senator's answ first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I will have the Senator's answer first, because I put the question first, and then I will answer him when it is my turn.

Mr. Thurman. I will only say that if I had to decide it I should put upon those words this construction: that "other claims" would include the claims of insurance companies to that which they had not received under this bill but which they claim they are entitled to receive.

Mr. Edmunds. Then the Senator thinks they would be entitled under this act to come in for a further claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the Senator thinks they would be entitled under this act to come in for a further claim.

Mr. THURIANA. I say if I had the decision, that would be my decision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And if the Senator had the decision he would decide according to his honest judgment?

Mr. THURIANA. Certainly I should.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should decide in exactly the same way, and that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. Frelinghuysen then interposed and pursued the subject in the same vein, holding that the provisions of the bill would not exclude insurance companies from those claims which were not provided for by the bill and which were to be allowed by the commissioners under the bill.

So the bill was regarded both by its friends and its opponents as deciding nothing upon the question now before the Senate, but merely providing for the payment of those whose right to payment was conceded by everybody. There were, as Senators will remember, at that time around us a great many men who were claiming that they were nearly ruined financially by the attitude of the case as to them, and that to keep them out of their money further when it was conceded on all hands they were entitled to it, simply because there were other claimants whose rights to the money was contested, was great injustice to them; and so I think a majority of both Houses concluded to pass a bill to provide for claimants whose right was undisputed, reserving the question now before the Senate for future adjudication.

serving the question now before the Senate for future adjudication.

The Senator from Ohio moved an amendment to strike out that clause of the bill which imposed the restriction upon the claim of insurance companies; but it was manifest that if that amendment should prevail the bill would not pass at that session of Congress. Consequently those who were in favor of paying the undisputed claimants voted against that amendment. I voted against it myself and voted for the passage of the bill; but I did not understand at that time, nor do I now understand, that the passage of that bill at all precluded the question now before the Senate, and I have shown by reading from the remarks of Mr. Hoar in the House, and from Mr. THURMAN and Mr. EDMUNDS in the Senate that they all under-Mr. THURMAN and Mr. EDMUNDS in the Senate, that they all understood that the object of that bill was simply to provide payment to the second that the object of that our was simply to provide payment to those whose right was not disputed by any one.

The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] in the former discussion of this subject, referred to the eleventh section of this act as showing that in the then opinion of Congress the adjudication was to proceed independently of the award. He referred to the eleventh section of this act which provides:

That it shall be the duty of said court to receive and examine all claims admissible under this act that may be presented to it, directly resulting from damage caused by the so-called insurgent cruisers Alabama, Florida, and their tenders, and also all claims admissible under this act directly resulting from damage caused by the so-called insurgent cruiser Shenandoah after her departure from Melbourne on the 18th day of February, 1865, and to decide upon the amount and validity of such claims in conformity with the provisions hereinafter contained, and according to the principles of law and the merits of the several cases.

It will be seen that after the arbitrators had made their award in gross of fifteen and a half million dollars for all these claimants, without determining how much A was entitled to, or how much B was entitled to, it became necessary in order to settle that question between the claimants themselves that the tribunal created by that act should pass upon that question, and that is all that section provides for; and it will also be noticed that it exactly follows the award in so far as it provided for a distribution of the fund. The claims to be allowed are to be for direct damages committed by the inculpated cruisers, the two named and the Shenandoah after leaving Melbourne, leaving no discretion whatever to the tribunal to allow anything except to those claims which were the direct losses committed by the inculpated cruisers. So that part of the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts certainly amounts to nothing upon the question now before the Senate. It settled nothing, and, as I have already shown, was understood by both its friends and those who opposed it as settling nothing, and not as precluding the question now before the Senate.

I wish to be as brief as possible this morning, but before yielding the floor I will examine some of the arguments that have been offered against the claim of the insurance companies. I read now from the RECORD of April 21, 1880, page 14, from the speech made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] He says:

There is not from the beginning to the end of all the proceedings of the tribunal, (and I do not want to detain the honorable Senator from Ohio from taking the floor,) not one word that recognizes the individual claim of any solitary man in the United States. There is not anything in the award there that recognizes the claims of an insurance company or of insurance companies or of anything else or anybody else whatever. As I said this afternoon, the idea of nuterly degrading that international conference and tribunal into a mere arbitration before which the United States employed counsel to represent the losses of marine insurance companies in the city of New York is the most extraordinary conclusion, it seems to me, that logic or false logic ever can lead a man to maintain.

On the question of fact I have already shown by reading from the records of the tribunal, first, that we presented our case, including both the claims of the Government, the nation, as such, and the claims of individual sufferers, or what are called individual claims. Those were all presented by us and urged at first upon the tribunal, but the tribunal itself in its first solemn determination excluded in express words all the claims that we had made before the tribunal except what we called the individual claims. Second, that the Government of the United States through its agent assented to that decision as a final determination of our right further to insist upon the national claims; and that the tribunal were informed that they would be no further insisted upon. And third, that on the following day the tri-bunal itself announced that all these claims, the national claims, the indirect claims as we called them, were no longer before them for their consideration.

Mr. THURMAN. And entered it on their record.

Mr. CARPENTER. They entered it in the record. The protocol that day shows the announcement of the arbitrators themselves. Then what was left for the arbitrators to do? Manifestly we could not go on except by a false pretense to recover money for claims which that tribunal had said were not fairly allowable against Great Britain. If it be said that we did proceed, pretending to represent claims, but really attempting to get money for the losses which the nation had sustained in the enhanced war premiums for the expenses of putting down the war and all that sort of thing, that is a confession, or rather it is not a confession, for no man has any authority to make it, but it is a charge against the good faith of our Government in the subse-quent proceedings before that arbitration.

When a party goes before a court, for instance, presenting his claim, containing a great many items, against a defendant, and the court makes a final determination that all but one head of those claims, all but one class of items, are rejected, and he subsequently proceeds upon the unrejected items set out in his case, would it not be charging him with fraud, with false pretense, and infamy generally, to say that he was lying to that tribunal, and that although he pretended to proceed upon the particular items, he was really pursuing the items which had been rejected. This is simply charging dishonesty on this Government in that prosecution which would disgrace any suitor in a common pleas court to which we have heard so many references in this discussion.

But the Senator seems to think there is something unworthy of this Government in becoming a claim agent, as he would style it, to prosecute and collect the claims of our citizens for the wrongs committed against them by foreign nations. He says, and let me quote his language again:

As I said this afternoon, the idea of utterly degrading that international conference and tribunal into a mere arbitration, before which the United States employed counsel to represent the losses of marine insurance companies in the city of New York, is the most extraordinary conclusion, it seems to me, that logic or false logic ever can lead a man to maintain.

The Senator forgets the Government of which he is a member. He forgets that it is the proud boast of our nation that we are "a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people," to quote the beautiful language of Mr. Lincoln, yet if he represented the most arbitrary government upon earth, if he were a counselor or any officer whatever of the Czar of Russia or the Sultan of Turkey, his doctrine could not be maintained for a moment or his idea find the slightest acceptance that there is anything degrading on the part of one nation in protecting its citizens against foreign nations.

There is not a writer on government who does not define allegiance to be the duty of obedience on the part of the subject to the sover-eign, in consideration of which the sovereign is bound to protect him against wrongs committed by other members of the community and the wrongs committed by foreign nations and their subjects. One is made the condition of the other; one is the consideration of the other; and it has been so understood among all the nations of the earth, the most arbitrary as well as the most liberal. The whole doctrine of issuing letters of marque and reprisal rests upon no other basis. It is well settled now by the law of nations, although it is seldom resorted to of late, and if the method of arbitration shall find such favor with the world as to supersede it it will supersede many of the inconveniences and disasters of war, as well as of this particular species of it—but it is well settled by the law of nations that when the private citizens of one nation have suffered injury at the hands of another nation the government may issue letters of reprisal, or, as the French call it, letters of marque, authorizing the injured citizens to seize the property belonging to the citizens of the offending government, wherever it may be found on the face of the globe, until they have received full recompense for the wrongs suffered by them. What is this but making the Government a claim agent? What is this but performing the duty that rests upon every government to protect its own citizens?

Look at the dealings of France and England with Mexico, and we Look at the dealings of France and England with Mexico, and we may look around among the nations of the earth to see what is going on every day. For years the custom-houses of Mexico were held in the interests of these two governments for the payment of bonds of Mexico, which were owned by the private subjects of Great Britain and France. What is going on now in Egypt? France and England, representing their constituents, who hold large amounts of bonds issued by the Viceroy of Egypt, very politely, through the pressure of negotiation, but in substance and effect, have gone into Egypt and established a receivership, and one English subject and one French citizen are to-day ministers of the viceroy, as they are called, but substantially agents of these two governments for the purpose of collecting the revenues of Egypt, and applying them in part to the collecting the revenues of Egypt, and applying them in part to the satisfaction of the bonds held by Englishmen and by Frenchmen.

If there be one jewel in the crown of England which is never dimmed, if there be one characteristic of that nation which is entitled to universal applause and approval, it is her steady, constant, and effectual protection of her citizens against the injustice of foreign nations or the wrongs inflicted upon them by the subjects of foreign nations. Armies march and navies sail to vindicate the rights of Englishmen all over the globe. England has never regarded it as any stain upon her escutcheon that she collects the claims for her subjects against foreign nations.

But our nation is as deep in the mire as Great Britain in this claim agency business. In the convention between the United States and France on the 4th of July, 1831, each government paid the other a sum in gross in satisfaction of individual claims, and I regard this as so pertinent to the matter now before us that I will ask the Secretary to read articles 1, 2, 3, and 4 of that convention. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The French Government, in order to liberate itself completely from all the reclamations preferred against it by citizens of the United States, for unlawful seizures, captures, sequestrations, confiscations, or destructions of their vessels, cargoes, or other property, engages to pay a sum of twenty-five millions of francs to the Government of the United States, who shall distribute it among those entitled, in the manner and according to the rules which it shall determine.

ARTICLE II.

The sum of twenty-five millions of francs, above stipulated, shall be paid at Paris in six annual installments of four millions one hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-six francs sixty-six centimes each, into the hands of such person or persons as shall be authorized by the Government of the United States to receive it.

to receive it.

The first installment shall be paid at the expiration of one year next following the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, and the others at successive intervals of a year, one after another, till the whole shall be paid.

To the amount of each of the said installments shall be added interest at 4 per cent. thereupon, as upon the other installments then remaining unpaid, the said interest to be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present convention.

ARTICLE III.

The Government of the United States, on its part, for the purpose of being liberated completely from all the reclamations presented by France on behalf of its citizens or of the royal treasury, (either for ancient supplies or accounts, the liquidation of which had been reserved, or for unlawful seizures, captures, detentions, arrests, or destructions of French vessels, cargoes, or other property,) engages to pay to the government of His Majesty (which shall make distribution of the same in the manner and according to the rules to be determined by it) the sum of one million five hundred thousand frames.

ARTICLE IV.

The sum of one million five hundred thousand francs, stipulated in the preceding article, shall be payable in six annual installments, of two hundred and fifty thousand francs; and the payment of each of the said installments shall be effected by a reservation of so much out of the annual sums which the French government is bound, by the second article above, to pay to the Government of the United States.

To the amount of each of these installments shall be added interest at 4 per cent. upon the installment then paid, as well as upon those still due; which payments of interest shall be effected by means of a reservation, similar to that already indicated for the payment of the principal. The said interest shall be computed from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present convention.

Mr. CARPENTER. Thus you will see, Mr. President, that the Government of the United States entered into a convention with France for the very purpose of collecting the claims of our citizens against France, and France pays us the sum of 25,000,000 francs, which we received from her and distributed to the claimants.

It is not a month since the Senate ratified a treaty with France, which is purely a private-claims treaty. It provides for the appointment of commissioners, each government to appoint its own, the expenses to be equally paid by the two governments, to adjust individual claims. This very Alabama treaty, under which we received this fund, after passing the national claims and grievances, is itself a treaty for the collection of private claims. I will ask the Secretary to read the twelfth article of that treaty.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

The high contracting parties agree that all claims on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States, upon the government of Her Britannic Majesty, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of citizens of the United States during the period between the 13th of April, 1861, and the 9th of April, 1865, inclusive, not being claims growing out of the acts of the vessels referred to in article 1 of this treaty, and all claims, with the like exception, on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, upon the Government of the United States, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of subjects of Her Britannic Majesty during the same period, which may have been presented to either government for its interposition with the other, and which yet remain unsettled, as well as any other such claims which may be presented within the time specified in article 14 of this treaty, shall be referred to three commissioners, to be appointed in the following manner, that is to say.

Mr. CARPENTER. Everybody will see that that article relates to the private claims of the citizens of each government. Read, now, the fifteenth article, which shows that the money which was to be paid upon those private claims was to be paid by Great Britain to the Government of the United States.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

All sums of money which may be awarded by the commissioners on account of any claim shall be paid by the one government to the other, as the case may be, within twelve months after the date of the final award, without interest, and without any deduction save as specified in Article XVI of this treaty.

Mr. CARPENTER. So that with regard to those claims, in which everybody will concede we were claim agents, we were prosecuting the claims of individuals and nothing else under that article; and yet the provision is that the amount which should be ascertained against Great Britain in favor of our citizens shall be paid to the Government of the United States. This matter is perfectly familiar to every man who has studied at all the method of dealing between two governments. When a government comes to deal with a foreign nation on behalf of its citizens it speaks as a nation; and so we stood before the arbitrators. We stood there as a nation presenting two claims, first, one that was ours, one that we made as a nation, and it would have if recovered resulted to the benefit of the people at large and gone into the Treasury; and the other was a claim made on behalf of our citizens.

I have shown these treaties, and many more might be cited in which I have shown these treaties, and many more might be cited in which the sole purpose is to collect claims of private individuals, but in the Alabama treaty both were incorporated in the same treaty. Our national claims I have shown by the letter of Mr. Fish we never expected anymoney for. We did not expect Great Britain to soothe our wounded honor with coin. In the treaty itself, although those claims were not expressly disposed of, the apology which England made to us was accepted by us so far as that was concerned, and we did not want any money out of Great Britain; we did not want to dirty our fingers with shillings as a compensation to our wounded honor and dignity; but in order to remove that bone of contention between the two governments Mr. Fish said, "Let us have it adjudicated upon by these arbitrators," and so it was adjudicated upon, and excluded, and then the Government proceeded and made its case on behalf of its citizens, founded solely and entirely upon the claims made by those citizens for the wrongs they had suffered at the hands of the inculpated cruisers.

To show a little further how this was understood at the time, and that England did not regard it as dishonorable for the United States to be urging the claims of its citizens, England has done that everywhere; she will do it always; and it is the proudest claim she can make to the admiration of the world that an Englishman anywhere make to the admiration of the world that an Engishman anywhere under God's shining sun can find and can realize the protecting shield of English nationality; be it in Europe or Asia or Africa, no matter where, if a British subject is wronged Great Britain rushes to his rescue. It may be in the form of war; if that be not necessary it may be accomplished by diplomatic correspondence; it may be accomplished as it was in this case by an arbitration setting a great example to the world of the peaceful settlements of disputes between nations in a peaceful manner, where argument and not force prevails.

In a peaceful manner, where argument and not force prevails.

But in one case as much as in the other it is the government protecting its citizens, and protecting its citizens at its own expense. That is the consideration it pays for your obedience and for mine to its laws and sovereignty. We must obey. But we owe this obedience in consideration of being protected; protected at home against the wrongs of other members of the community, which is done by the enactment of laws which are applied to particular cases by the judicial department of the Government and executed by the executive, and accomplished in case of foreign pations through diplomacy or and accomplished in case of foreign nations through diplomacy or war as the case may require; but in either case it is the protection the Government is awarding to its citizen as the compensation to him for his obedience and allegiance to the sovereignty of his own government.

I cannot take the time to read forty or fifty pages here of the claims of these insurance companies presented in the statement which was made in the case of our claims against Great Britain after the national claims had been excluded. The Senator from Maine will not question that it is here. If he does he can take the book and read it. When we had presented those claims, when we had specified the insurance companies as claimants, and stated the amount they had paid upon their risks and put them forth as claims entitled to be paid, upon their risks and put them forth as claims entitled to be paid, what did the British government say about them? Did the British government say, Is it possible you Yankees have become so sordid that you have so far lost all self-respect and regard for national dignity that you come here trying to enforce the claims of an insurance company in the city of New York? Great Britain would not have looked very well saying this in the light of her receivership over Egypt to collect the bonds issued by the viceroy and held by the citizens of Great Britain. She would not have looked very well saying this after her proceedings against Mexico, nor would she in the light of the pretension which she makes against all nations that Englishmen are to be respected, protected, and paid. be respected, protected, and paid.

Now let me read not a mere accidental statement, not a hasty remark of counsel in what an Irishman would call "the hate of debate," but recorded in the case presented by Great Britain:

bate," but recorded in the case presented by Great Britain:

On the fourth head it is observed:

"The American insurance companies, who have paid the owners as for a total loss, are, in our opinion, entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the latter, according to the well-known principle that an underwriter who has paid as for a total loss acquires the rights of the assured in respect of the subject-matter of insurance. This principle was explained and acted on in the well-known English cases of Randall vs. Cochran, 1 Ves. Sen., 98, and the Quebee Fire-Insurance Company vs. Saint Louis, 7 Moore, P. C., 286, and is well recognized by the courts of America. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the underwriters cannot be entitled to anything more than the assured themselves; for the claim of the former is founded on nothing else than their title to be subrogated to the rights which the latter possessed, and which, therefore, cannot possibly be more extensive than the claim which the latter would be entitled to maintain. From these considerations two consequences follow: In the first place, where the claimant is the insurance company and not the owner, compensation cannot be due for any sum exceeding the amount of the actual loss sustained by the owner, however much that sum may fall short of the amount paid by the company by reason of the property having been overinsured. In the second place, wherever the owner puts forward a claim for his loss at the same time that the insurance company also claims the money paid by them in respect of the same loss, such a double claim must at once be absolutely rejected, since to allow it would be in effect to sanction the payment of the loss twice over."

Mr. CONKLING. Whose language is that?

Mr. CONKLING. Whose language is that?
Mr. CARPENTER. This is the language of Palmer, representing England in the case; not an argument orally made, but in the formal case presented by Great Britain in reply to the case made by the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Sir Roundell Palmer?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, sir.
Mr. WHYTE. It is printed.
Mr. CARPENTER. It is in the printed case submitted to England.
Mr. THURMAN. The official reply.
Mr. CARPENTER. The official case; what is known as the counter-

Now, what will be thought of the statement of the Senator from Maine that in this record from beginning to end there is not one word that recognizes any individual claim? A plaintiff goes into court suing on an account made up of various items; the defendant ancourt suing on an account made up of various items; the defendant answers that as to certain items he concedes the plaintiff's right to recover. Other items he contests. The court finally hears and excludes the contested items, and then renders a judgment in favor of the plaintiff large enough to pay the items which the defendant concedes ought to be paid. Yet top of all this we are told there is not a word in the case that even recognizes the admitted items.

Mr. President, a lawyer in a court of justice who, with a printed record before him, should thus mistake the case would be thrown over the bar as being a disgrace to his profession; but, sir, we are not lawyers; we are not debating with lawyers; we are statesmen. The lawyers; we are not debating with lawyers; we are statesmen. The Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] emancipating himself from law and justice, joins hands with the Senator from Maine, who has emancipated himself from the recorded statement of facts; and the two Senators are soaring in the blue ether of statesmanship, no shackles senators are soaring in the blue ether of statesmansine, no snackles of law upon them, no restraints of conscience, no scruples, nothing but their individual will and high sovereign pleasure. But subrogation, which was laughed out of court by the Senator from Maine, made contemptible by the illustration of a rich uncle coming in to help out his poor nephew, is re-established, finds footing again, in the solemnly prepared counter-case of Great Britain before the highest tribunal that ever sat upon earth.

As a part of the arguments of the Senator from Maine to show that these individual claims should not be paid, in the RECORD of the 14th of April, at page 20, the following is found, and I ask the Secretary to read the printed extract from the RECORD.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Blane. It is a very easy way of arguing. The Senator from Delaware will observe there is no mode of arguing a case so easily to get at a conclusion as to throw out all the facts that make against the case we are presenting. There is nothing so easy as to draw your conclusions if you can eliminate all the testimony that-makes against you. But this letter of Mr. Fish cannot be read too often, and I want the honorable Senator from Delaware to observe that it was written six months after the indirect claims had been thrown out. It was written after they had stripped off everything which he says brought it down to the basis which leaves us no discretion.

Mr. Bayard. The letter might have been of great use if read to the Geneva tribunal.

Mr. Blaine. It was addressed to the counsel, but the Geneva tribunal in their award do not say one solitary thing in conflict with this letter. I want the honorable Senator to remember, and I want the Senato to remember, that full six months after all the claims which the Senator from Delaware says were excluded—after all the claims which the Senator for member, that runsix months after all the claims which the Senator from Delaware says were exciteded—

Mr. BLAINE. Six months after they were thrown out, and when the honorable Senator says the whole case was stripped right down to the individual parties who were entitled to this award, leaving to the Senator of the United States nothing to do but sit as a board of assessors, leaving us here no function in the world but what three assessors could perform—
Mr. BAYARD. Mere distributors.

Mr. BLAINE. Mere distributors. I say that six months after that the Government of the United States, speaking through its recognized channel of communication upon foreign affairs, on the 8th day of December, 1871, the tribunal then being in session, said:

"In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded, or what may be recovered in the event of the appointment of the board of assessors, mentioned in the tenth article of the treaty. It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the cases of insurers and insured. The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered.

ered will be made by this Government without committal as to the mode of dis-

It was not in the name of the insurance companies, the honorable Senator will lease observe; it was not in behalf of individuals.

Mr. Bayard. Each claim was separately considered.

Mr. Bayard. Each claim was separately considered.
Mr. Bayard. By whom?
Mr. Bayard. By the arbitrators.
Mr. Blaine. There is nothing in the evidence under heaven to show that; there is not a thing in the whole record at Geneva that will vindicate and justify that statement of the Senator from Delaware.
Mr. Bayard. Why, the case maintains it.
Mr. Blaine. No, sir; it is just as I stated a few days ago in regard to this elaborate figuring that was made to get at the amount. I stated—and I was not aware at the moment that I was so thoroughly well backed in my statement—that it was a merc ease of general average on which they made up by what they call in the country chalking on the barn-door for the average, a mere splitting of the difference, and I want the honorable Senator's attention to that.
Mr. CARPENTER. The pay of a Senator is not magnificent. The real compensation that a Senator gets for his services in this Chamber real compensation that a Senator gets for his services in this Chamber is what he can learn. The general rules of debate is a subject interesting to all lawyers; and when a master of that subject, like the Senator from Maine, takes the floor to give instructions upon it, it is well for every anxious learner to pay very strict attention. He lays down here a rule which undoubtedly will be assented to by all professional men. He says to the Senator from Delaware:

The Senator from Delaware will observe there is no mode of arguing a case so easily to get at a conclusion as to throw out all the facts that make against the case we are presenting. There is nothing so easy as to draw your conclusions if you can eliminate all the testimony that makes against you.

And then the Senator from Maine, scorning to teach by precept merely and intending to throw in the weight of an example as a brilliant illustration of what may be done by misstating the facts in an argument, proceeds as follows:

But this letter of Mr. Fish cannot be read too often, and I want the honorable Senator from Delaware to observe that it was written six months after the indirect claims had been thrown out. It was written after they had stripped off everything which he says brought it down to the basis which leaves us no discretion.

That the Senator from Maine regarded as a very important point. I must confess I did not see the importance of it then, and I do not see it now; but the Senator from Maine thought it was very important, and in the course of his remarks reported here, and which I have read, he twice or thrice repeats it, that the letter was written six months after the indirect claims had been rejected by the arbitrators, and that he wants to have the Senator from Delaware particularly mark, and wants the Senate especially to notice. If there be any mystic and mysterious importance in that point let me end it by stating the facts. Instead of having been written six months after the adjudication excluding the indirect claims, this letter was written seven days before the arbitration first met. It is dated December 8, 1871, and found in the second volume of Papers, page 414, and shows that it was written before the arbitrators met by its language and whole tenor. It is the letter which that forged by its language and whole tenor. It is the letter which that forged paper which is called the opinion of Caleb Cushing pretends not to extract but to publish in full, but gives only a part. Bear these dates in mind. For the purpose of aiding the Senator from Maine in his argument, that point being in his opinion so material, although I do not see the materiality of it for any purpose whatever, remember that the letter was dated December 8, 1871. The arbitration first met December 15, 1871; and the decision excluding the indirect claims was made on the 19th of June, 1872, six months after the letter was written. What an illustration this is of the valuable remark of the Senator from Maine, that it is easy to overcome an opponent in an argument by assuming the facts. The great fact then in the mind of the Senator which overrode everything was that Fish's letter was written six months after the decision of the arbitrators excluding the indirect claims when it was in fact written seven days before the first indirect claims when it was in fact written seven days before the first meeting of the arbitrators and six months before the decision was made excluding the indirect claims.

Again, as a contribution to this legal debate, the Senator from Maine read a letter, which is found in the RECORD of April 16, 1880, page 19, from one Charles H. Cole, in which Mr. Cole pretends to set forth a conversation that he had with the president of the North American Insurance Company of Philadelphia, in which that president to the conversation that he had with the president of the North American Insurance Company of Philadelphia, in which that president to the conversation that the conversati American Insurance Company of Philadelphia, in which that president asserted that his company had lost $100,000, but had made $300,000 and that he would scorn to accept anything out of the Geneva award. Precisely how the inclination of that one man should affect the question of what we ought to do I do not see; but still if the Senator from Maine does think it important then it is well to examine into the truth of it. Turning to the record here, to the seventh volume of Appendix, Papers, it will be ascertained that this insurance company that is made to say that it paid in losses $100,000 paid but four losses. On page 101 is set out one case to D. S. Stetson & Co., $600; on page 150 is another case to C. H. Cummings, $3,069; on page 190 to Thos. S. Hathaway, $7,500; on page 221 to Thos. B. Wattson & Sons, $16,050; making in all paid by that company as shown by the papers in this case $27,219 instead of $100,000 that this president of the insurance company in the magnificence of his genpresident of the insurance company in the magnificence of his generosity was represented as willing to give away because he was too proud to take it under a law of Congress. His loss would not have been as great by about $70,000 as the Senator from Maine thought it was. They only paid $27,000 instead of $100,000; and it turns out that the fact, without regard to the amount, is entirely mistaken. The president of this company, whose conversation is set out in this letter of Cole, telegraphs to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee denying the statement in toto, and I will ask the Secretary to read his telegram. If this legal question is to be determined upon such statements, let us have them on both sides.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 16, 1880-11.40 a. m.

Senator A. G. THURMAN, Washington, D. C.:

The only marine insurance companies in Philadelphia which paid losses on account of the depredations of confederate cruisers were North America, State of Pennsylvania, Union, and Delaware Mutual. We emphatically deny that any of those companies disclaim or ever have disclaimed any right to participate in the Geneva award. On the contrary, we unqualifiedly claim our respective proportions by right of subrogation.

CHAS. PLATT. President.
HENRY D. SHERRERD, President.
RICHARD S. SMITH,
President Delaware Mutual S. Insurance Company.
HENRY BALL, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. CARPENTER. Those are the officers of the insurance companies in Philadelphia who paid war losses. There is another one from Platt, a little more to the point, which I ask to have read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 16, 1880-11.26 a. m.

To Senator A. G. THURMAN, Washington, D. C.:

I have not seen Charles H. Cole for years. What I may have said in private conversation years or more since, which may have been twisted by him, I cannot recall, but this thing I most emphatically state, that I have always been a firm believer in the right of subrogation under the Geneva award, and think the insurance companies fully entitled to their share of the fund.

CHAS. PLATT.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maine also in his argument upon this subject attempted to call the Hon. Caleb Cushing from his grave as a witness. Doubting the authenticity of the document which he presented in the Senate, and asking him in good nature for information, as one gentleman would ask another, the following took place, as shown in the RECORD of April 14, page 23:

Mr. Carpenter. I simply wish to ask the Senator from Maine for information how he knows that this is the production of Caleb Cushing? Here is one of the little pamphlets, of which I have five or six hundred in my office, that I have received at different times on this subject. I see the name "C. Cushing" printed at the end of it, but it is not a letter from Mr. Cushing.

Mr. Blaine. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, see how exactly he is treating this question according to the smallest kind of practice in the county court of a State. He wants me to get an affidavit from Mr. Cushing's executor that Cushing wrote that letter. I cannot do it. [Laughter.]

[Laughter.]
As soon as I saw that document I believed that Caleb Cushing never As soon as I saw that document I believed that Cateo Cushing never did see it. I was as thoroughly convinced of it as I ever was of any fact in the world. In the first place, to show how utterly inconsistent it is with what Mr. Cushing claims before the arbitrators, let me read a paragraph from the argument submitted by our counsel, signed by Cushing, Evarts, and Waite, and found in the third volume of Papers at page 570. The English argument upon this is found in volume 3, Papers, 557, 558. The English argument was this:

With respect to the insurance companies, it must be remembered that, as against the losses which they paid, they received the benefit of the enormous war premiums which ruled at that time; and that these were the risks against which they indemnified themselves (and, it cannot be doubted, so as to make their business profitable upon the whole) by those extraordinary premiums. Would it be equitable now to reimburse them, not only the amount of all these losses, but interest thereon, without taking into account any part of the profits which they so received?

This was the argument made by the counsel of Great Britain before a arbitrators. To that our counsel, Mr. Cushing signing first, then Mr. Evarts, and then Mr. Waite, reply as follows

(b) We may also lay aside the suggestions prejudicial to the allowance of interest on the claims which by subrogation or assignment have been presented by the insurers who have indemnified the original sufferers.

How clear it is that not a word ever was uttered by anybody in that whole case recognizing an individual claim. The argument proceeds:

Whole case recognizing an individual claim. The argument proceeds:

So far as Great Britain and this tribunal are concerned, who the private sufferers, and who represent them, and whether they were insured or not, and have been paid their insurance, are questions of no importance. But it is worth while to look this argument in the face for a moment. Some of the sufferers by the depredations of the Alabama, the Florida, and the Shenandoah were insured by American underwriters. These sufferers have collected their indemnity from the underwriters, and have assigned to them their claims.

The enhanced premiums of insurance on general American commerce have, presumptively, enriched the insurance companies. Great Britain should have the benefits of these profits, and the underwriters at least should lose interest on their claims.

That was stating the British argument. Now, what did our counsel proceed to say

It is difficult to say whether the private or the public considerations which enter into this syllogism are most illogical. Certainly we did not expect that "the enhanced payments of insurance," which Great Britain could not tolerate, and the tribunal has excluded as too indirect consequences of the acts of the cruisers to be entertained when presented by the merchants who had paid them, were to be brought into play by Great Britain itself as direct enough in the general business of underwriting, to reduce the indemnity on insured losses, which, if uninsured, they would have been entitled to.

That was the argument of our counsel, Mr. Cushing signing the paper first. After that it is next to impossible to suppose that Mr. Cushing could have come home and claimed that these insurance companies were not entitled to recover anything. But that was not all, and here in passing let me notice the argument made for the warpremium men against the insurance companies. They say these insurance companies insured these losses and were paid for it; if they lost a ship, therefore, they got just what they contracted for. See how such an argument can stand. Here are two insurance companies in Philadelphia, for instance. One insures ten vessels and receives the enhanced premium, and does not lose a vessel. The other insures in Philadelphia, for instance. One insures ten vessels and receives the enhanced premium, and does not lose a vessel. The other insures ten other vessels at precisely the same rates, receives precisely the same profits, but she does lose a vessel, and presents her claim for that loss. Now what becomes of the argument that these men have suffered no loss on a particular ship because they made profits on other ventures. Then how would the argument apply to other cases? Here is a bank, Messrs. Riggs & Co., for whom I entertain great respect, for they pay my checks when I cannot pay them myself. [Laughter.] They are in the business of discounting notes. It is their business; that is what they are paid for. I get them, for instance, to discount a small note for me, to show the extent of confidence that even a banker may be cajoled into. When the note matures it is not convenient for me to pay it and it goes to protest. They bring suit against me, declaring that on such a day they discounted my note and I promised to pay them so and so; but I plead in bar, "You, sir, are a banker; your business is discounting notes; what you have made on the whole in your business is a great deal more than the amount of my note; now what right have you to follow me into the little corners of my life on a promissory note when you have got rich discounting notes?" That is precisely the argument here; first-rate as statesmanship, ridiculous from a lawyer.

After Mr. Cushing returned from Europe and before Mr. Evarts had returned there was published what purported to be a letter of the discounting in the Journal of Commerce November 12 1872. It is detail.

After Mr. Cushing returned from Europe and before Mr. Evarts had returned there was published what purported to be a letter from Mr. Cushing in the Journal of Commerce, November 12, 1872. It is dated October 17, 1872, is signed "C. Cushing," and was published in the Journal of Commerce, which of course vouches for its authenticity, was commented upon by the press and never repudiated by Mr. Cushing. Let that letter be read by the Secretary.

was commented upon by the press and never repudiated by Mr. Cushing. Let that letter be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

New York, October 17, 1872.

Dear Sir: I think it well to state in writing the substance of what I said to you yesterday respecting the present state of the so-called "Alabama claims."

1. To begin, it is misspprehension to suppose that there is any similitude between these cases and those of the so-called "French spoliation claims."

In the latter case the Government of the United States relinquished to France all claim against that Government on account of alleged illegal captures of American merchantmen, theretofore made by France, in consideration of the relinquishment by France for certain national claims against the United States.

In view of these mutual relinquishments, the aggrieved owners of the merchantmen captured by France contend—and, as I think, with great reason and truth—that the Government of the United States is bound in equity to indemnify them for their losses in consideration of the benefit thus accruing to the United States. But the United States did not receive any money from France in the premises. It is a question of equitable indemnity, not a question of the payment of money in the hands of the Government.

In the case of the "Alabama claims," however, the United States will have in their hands a definite sum of money, awarded against England by the tribunal of arbitration, and paid over by England to the United States for distribution among the parties interested, according to the award of the tribunal.

2. In the matter of the "Alabama claims," however, the United States for distribution among the parties interested, according to the award of the tribunal.

2. In the matter of the "Alabama alaims," however, the United States for distribution among the parties interested according to the award of the tribunal.

2. In the matter of the "Alabama alaims," however, the United States presented to the tribunal detailed schedules and estimates of ship.

4. In view of the foregoing considerations I carnestly advise you and other parties interested:

First. Not to sacrifice any of your claims by sale, that is, not to sell under any circumstances or at any other rate than in the case of other assured rights of prop-eircumstances or as any cases stand better appearing in their own right.

All claimants in such cases stand better appearing in their own right.

Secondly. Not to sacrifice your claims by transactions in the nature of contingent agency compensation.

You will need attorneys or counsel before the board of assessors, who should be compensated with liberal and honorable fees as such; but your claims are not of that aleatory and precarious character which requires them to be placed in the category of some foreign claims, such as those before the Mexican commission, or of some domestic claims demanding long-continued and peculiar service before the executive departments or before Congress.

I remain, very truly yours,

C. CUSHING.

Mr. CARPENTER. From the fact that this letter was published in the New York papers soon after the return of Mr. Cushing to this country, commented upon by the press of the whole country, and never repudiated by Mr. Cushing, vouched for by the Journal of Commerce as a genuine letter, it is safe, I think, to assert that this letter was a genuine letter of Mr. Cushing. Besides that it has internal evidence of being a genuine production of Caleb Cushing; it has his style; it has his language; it has his manner and method of treating a subject. Here in this letter he speaks of this fund in our hands as a trust fund. Here in this letter he speaks of this fund in our hands as a trust fund. He says the Government presented the claims of these insurance companies in detail, collected them, have the money to pay them, hold it in trust to pay them, and they may be as certain of being paid their claims as they might be of being paid if they held the bonds of the United States. Now, then, to believe that after that Mr. Cushing did say what it is pretended by this forged document he has said is to dishonor Mr. Cushing's memory beyond the power of redemption.

honor Mr. Cushing's memory beyond the power of redemption.

But having some little share in the reputation of Caleb Cushing as a lawyer, I do not wish to leave this subject until I satisfy everybody that he never wrote this letter. In the first place, the internal evidences are very strong. It bears no date of time or place; it is addressed to no one; he does not state why it is written; it does not say that any question has been submitted to him for his opinion; it does not say what his opinion is on any question; it has not the form of a professional opinion; it certainly is not a brief, because it is entitled in no court or tribunal. It is therefore a document which a lawyer, on inspection, would believe to be spurious.

At the risk of incurring the everlasting contempt of the Senator

At the risk of incurring the everlasting contempt of the Senator from Maine, who hates affidavits worse than Falstaff hated talk by from Maine, who hates affidavits worse than Falstaff hated talk by his tailor about security, I have an affidavit upon this subject. The Senator complained; he thought I seemed to demand that he should bring affidavits here on this question. I did not demand that. I simply asked him a civil question as to how he knew it was written by Mr. Cushing. I had not seen it at the time. I did not know but he had procured it from Mr. Cushing himself; I did not know but he had the original signed by Caleb Cushing, so he could answer the question at once. I send to the desk to be read an affidavit, to which is attached this document, and which speaks of it as ampered. I sale is attached this document, and which speaks of it as annexed. I ask that the affidavit be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

J. Langdon Ward, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides in the city of New York, and is an attorney and counselor at law; that from about the year 1867 and up to the time of the death of Caleb Cushing deponent was well acquainted with him and had business relations with him of considerable extent; that during the period of General Cushing's absence in Spain, as minister to that country, the printed paper hereto annexed was brought to deponent's notice; that afterward, and very shortly after General Cushing returned to this country, deponent called on him at Wormley's Hotel, in this city, and in conversation referred to the opinion purporting to be contained in said paper; that General Cushing expressed surprise thereat and disclaimed having given such opinion; that thereafter, and, as deponent now remembers, on the next day, deponent showed the paper hereto annexed to General Cushing, who, after perusing the same, emphatically denied the authorship thereof, saying that he did not write it, and never saw or heard of it until deponent brought it to his attention.

J. LANGDON WARD.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 14th day of April, A. D. 1880, [SEAL.]

Mr. CARPENTER. I know nothing of J. Langdon Ward except that I understand he is a member of the New York bar in good standing. Mr. BLAINE.

Mr. BLAINE. I dislike to interrupt the honorable Senator-Mr. CARPENTER. Then you had better not. Mr. BLAINE. Shall I have the privilege? Mr. CARPENTER. Not if you dislike it

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator does not dislike it— Mr. CARPENTER. I do not dislike it.

Mr. BLAINE. I merely want, just in this connection, so that it may be embodied—

Mr. CARPENTER. That had better be held for reply; that is the better way.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like to have it alongside of that

The Senator always wants a reply Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator always wants a reply to every paragraph.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not interrupted the Senator, and he has been three hours on the floor.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maine can have three days after I get through, which will be very soon. In other words, let me after I get through, which will be very soon. In other words, let me state here—for I would not be discourteous to anybody, and I interrupt Senators oftener perhaps than anybody else—the office of an interruption is well understood among lawyers. It is to suggest a question which will bring to the speaker's mind something he has omitted, some fact he has forgotten or misstated; but to put in an answer to what has been said is never the office of an interruption. While I would be quite willing to submit to an interruption now to set me right on any statement I have made, I do not wish to be replied to until I shall have concluded. I understand the Senator in-

Mr. CARPENTER. There is another thing in this letter which is internal evidence of its not being genuine that I should not overlook, and which I forgot to state. It says:

The counsel of the United States were specially instructed by the Government to avoid committing the United States to any theory of distribution as regards either claims or claimants, and especially not to commit the United States in the matter of the claims of insurers, in the words following:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 8, 1871.

Gentlemen: In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded or what may be recovered in the event of the appointment of the board of assessors mentioned in the tenth article of the treaty. It is possible that there may be duplicate claims for some of the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed, as in the cases of insurers and insured. The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government without committal as to the mode of distribution.

It is expected that all such committal be avoided in the argument of counsel. I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. CALEB CUSHING, WILLIAM M. EVARTS, and M. R. WAITE.

In other words, this purports to state the entire letter, no stars, no marks to indicate but that the entire letter is given. The entire letter may be found in the third volume of Papers, page 414, and covers two pages. If it had been quoted in full here the Senator would not have fallen into the blunder of supposing that the letter of Mr. Fish was written after the arbitrators excluded the indirect claims, because the letter itself shows that it was written before the arbitrators had met. Mr. Cushing never would have done this; no lawyer would; it is not like a lawyer. Mr. Cushing would have said that a letter was received at such a time from which the following extract might be made, or he would have stated it in some other way; but to set it out as the whole of that letter when it is only a paragraph out of the letter, which covers nearly two printed pages, I know Mr. Cushing never would have done. Another thing, this says:

The doctrine of subrogation, as between assurer and assured, does not control the action of the United States in the allowance of claims or distribution of indemni-

To the contrary of this is the well-considered judgment of Congress, as proved by the following letter.

And then here comes a letter in quotation signed by W. B. Washburn. That Mr. Cushing would have set forth such a letter from one member of the House as the deliberate judgment of Congress is simply absurd.

Mr. CONKLING. Do not forget that the letter states nothing except what was done in one committee of the House; it does not say anything about what Congress has done.

Mr. CARPENTER. I will read the letter:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Boston, January 24, 1873.

Dear Sir: While I was on the Committee of Claims for six years several cases of insurance companies were presented where property had been lost or destroyed on which they had paid the insurance. The committee always dismissed the claim, on the ground that they were paid for the risk and could not ask the Government to hold them harmless.

Yours truly,

W. B. WASHBURN.

To GEO. O. SHATTUCK, Esq.

The letter does not pretend to state anything except the action of one committee of the House, and yet Mr. Cushing is supposed to have exaggerated that letter of Mr. Washburn into the well-considered and deliberate judgment of Congress. Mr. Cushing never did any such thing, and I am as thoroughly convinced that the document is a forgery as I am that the Senator from Maine is not aware of the Passing from the details of the record in this case, here are fifteen and a half million of dollars to be distributed by Congress to somebody or to be held in the Treasury of the United States as the private money of this Government. I shall discuss no further the question money of this Government. I shall discuss no further the question that those men whose private property was destroyed, the destruction of which formed a part of the claim presented by our Government to the arbitrators, allowed by them, included in the award, and paid to us by Great Britain, have the highest equitable lien upon that fund. They have what lawyers would say—and I beg pardon for alluding to lawyers again; I know it is out of place and in bad taste, but it is on a level with my comprehension, and I am therefore more at home there than I would be if soaring into statesmanship—as every lawyer would say those men have an equitable lien on that particular fund. Their property made it; their property has been turned into that money just as completely as when a court of admiralty sells a ship and deposits the money in the registry of the court; the money represents the ship for all future proceedings. Now, then, why should not the men who owned the property have the money. That is the only question. I can see no reason why they should not; but if you deny their right, then the money is the general money of the United States; we have a right to do what we please with it; it is like any other money collected as internal revenue or as duties on foreign importations. We can pay pensioners with it, we can build railroads with it, we can pay the expenses of Congress, or do anything else with it.

It is proposed by one section of the bill that if a surplus shall remain after the judgments rendered for the direct losses according to the award shall have been paid, then the tribunal shall allow claims for the damages directly resulting from the exculpated steamers. So much of the bill I do not support. If any man moves to strike it out I shall vote with him; and if he does not I think I shall move to strike it out myself. It is, as the Senator from Maine said, illogical; or at all events it is not supported by the logic which sustains the other part of the bill.

The right of these insurance companies rests upon the fact that The right of these insurance companies rests upon the fact that they can trace their ships, irectly into those dollars. They can start with the building and own ership of the ship, then show their sailing on their voyages, their insurance by the companies, their destruction by the rebel cruisers, the making of their claims, the presentation of them to the arbitrators, the award made upon them, and the payment of the money, and follow that into the Treasury, and thus tell cruetly where their ship is and they have a right to demand it. exactly where their ship is, and they have a right to demand it. When you deny the theory of a special lien upon this fund those who when you deny the theory or a special lien upon this find those who suffered from the exculpated steamers have no special right to this money unless they have stronger claims to our charity than others, for they can only ask for this money upon that ground. If there is no especial lien upon this fund, then it is, while we retain it, like all other moneys of the United States, subject to be appropriated for any purpose in the power and discretion of Congress. Many of these while owners are wealthy men. If it comes to a question of charity. any purpose in the power and discretion of Congress. Many of these ship-owners are wealthy men. If it comes to a question of charity—if we are to distribute this money as charity—we ought to distribute it to those who need it most.

The poor woman who stands on the corner of the street without money to buy her dinner or to find a lodging for her children to-night has a higher claim for charity, if we have any money to dispense in charity, than the ship-owner worth his millions, although he lost a charity, than the sup-owner works as ship.

If we find after examining all the claims for which this money was paid, and satisfying them in full, and deducting our expenses in the matter, there is still money left, I would vote to return it with our compliments to Great Britain. I understand that the Senator from Delaware took this position and was roundly rebuked for it by the Senator from Maine. I shall come in for the same rebuke, but I admit I have some respect for legal maxims as a safe guide to practical honesty. If I go up to a counter and buy some goods and give the merchant a hundred-dollar bill and he is to take out $25 and give me the change, and he passes me over the change and I put it in my pocket chant a hundred-dollar bill and he is to take out $25 and give me the change, and he passes me over the change and I put it in my pocket and leave supposing that I have $75 and he supposing that he has paid me $75, but if I go to my office and ascertain that he has paid me $20 too much, what is my duty in the matter? What would an honest man do about it? Would he say, "Well, now, here is $20 clean made; I never expected it. It has come to me like a windfall. Heaven is kind; here is $20. If I want a good thing for myself I will buy it; if I do not I will give it in charity; I will give it to some ship-owner who lost his ship, but is still worth a half million dollars, or I will give it to a poor woman starving on the corner of the street." But would that be quite honest? The merchant supposed he had paid me $75; I supposed so; but I subsequently find out that he has made a would that be quite honest? The merchant supposed he had paid me $75; I supposed so; but I subsequently find out that he has made a mistake and given me $20 too much. There is not a man in this Chamber who would hesitate one moment to say that if under such circumstances I did not go back and return the $20 I was a rascal.

Now, what was our case against Great Britain? We made claim against them for a great many things that were disallowed. We made claim against them for one thing that was allowed. That one was for the injuries directly inflicted upon private property by the inculpated cruisers, and that sum was estimated, as well as they could estimate it, by the arbitrators, at fifteen and one-half million dollars, which it, by the arbitrators, at fifteen and one-half million dollars, which was paid to us, as Mr. Cushing says in his letter in the Journal of Commerce, as a trust fund to pay those who had so suffered. received the money; but on more accurate examination of these claims than could be made by the arbitrators at Geneva, we find, for instance, that after paying all claims and expenses we have got two, three, or five million dollars left. What are we to do with it? The Senator from Maine says pay it to the men whose claims were rejected. Senator from Maine says pay it to the men whose claims were rejected. Upon every legal principle a man who did not present his claim is better off than the man who presented it and had it excluded. The man who did not present his claim has not got an adjudication against him. The man who presented it and had it excluded has an adjudication that he is not entitled to it. In the case I suppose, the poor woman on the corner, who was not a claimant before that tribunal, is not precluded by the judgment. The war-premium men are; they were heard. They have, therefore, not only no adjudicated right, but there is an adjudication against their claim.

there is an adjudication against their claim.

But it may be said, and I understand it will be, by those who support all the provisions of this bill, there was an honest difference between us and Great Britain as to the amount we were entitled to, after it had been determined what losses Great Britain should pay for. We contested that question before the arbitrators, and got a decision from the tribunal that Great Britain should pay us fifteen decision from the tribunal that Great Britain should pay us fitteen and a half million dollars; and that we are justified in saying if it turns out that there was a mistake in the calculation of the amount we were entitled to, we may put the excess in the Treasury or dispose of it in charity or otherwise as we please. A distinguished Senator said to me, "St. Peter might object to this, but that in sublunary affairs it would not be very bad."

But the older I grow the more I am inclined to consider the probable exactions of St. Peter than the opinions of a bustling, sordid, selfish are. And the question is, whether it would be honest for us to re-

age. And the question is, whether it would be honest for us to retain and appropriate to our own use money paid to us by Great Brit-ain upon an adjudication made by the arbitrators under a mistake of fact as to the amount we were entitled to recover upon the principles determined by them. Of course Great Britain could make no demand upon us to return such surplus. But the question is whether we could honestly retain the benefit of an adjudication in our favor based upon a mistaken state of facts? I confess I should greatly prefer to see our Government returning to England a surplus we had no better title to than that which rests upon an adjudication made under a mistake of

I will illustrate my meaning by an incident I have heard in the life of Mr. Lincoln. As the facts have been reported to me, he had per-formed professional services for a railroad company and rendered his formed professional services for a railroad company and rendered his bill at $500. This the company refused to pay and he was compelled to bring suit, in which he recovered $5,000, and the money was paid. Thereupon Mr. Lincoln deducted his original bill as rendered, $500, and all expenses in the litigation, which left a balance of some $3,000 in favor of the company, which with his compliments he re-turned. In such ways he acquired the affectionate appellation of "Honest Old Abe;" and it is impossible to say how much such reputation contributed to his election as President of the United States. I would be glad to see this Government take an equally honorable course in regard to any surplus of this fund above what we are equitably entitled to retain.

But, Mr. President, there is another consideration that I wish to refer to before yielding the floor, and will do so as briefly as I can.

This arbitration was a conspicuous event in the history of the world. It remains to be seen whether it shall stand as an example to be followed by other nations, or whether it shall be dishonored and brought into contempt among the nations. It is our duty to deal with this fund in such a way as to encourage arbitration. In other words, if foreign nations see that when a nation has submitted to arbitration with a such a way as to encourage arbitration. with us and paid over money claimed for our private citizens, we, like thieves and robbers, put the money in our pocket and refuse to pay it over to those for whom it was paid, they will not be likely to enter into arbitrations to settle national difficulties. Nor will our people (as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] suggests to me) agree to any more arbitrations.

We can do nothing more potent in the right direction than honestly and faithfully to execute the award by paying the money to those for whom it was received. In this connection, and showing how this arbitration was regarded and how anxiously it was pursued by the greatest military chieftain of this age, I will ask the Secretary to read a passage from the annual message of the President, which was read in the Senate December 5, 1870.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The relations of the United States with foreign powers continue to be friendly. The year has been an eventful one in witnessing two great nations, speaking one language and having one lineage, settling by peaceful arbitration disputes of long standing, and liable at any time to bring those nations into bloody and costly conflict. An example has thus been set which, if successful in its final issue, may be followed by other civilized nations, and finally be the means of returning to productive industry millions of men now maintained to settle the disputes of nations by the bayonet and the broadside.

I transmit herewith a copy of the treaty alluded to, which has been concluded since the adjournment of Congress with Her Britannic Majesty, and a copy of the protocols of the conferences of the commissioners by whom it was negotiated. This treaty provides methods for adjusting the questions pending between the two nations.

Various questions are to be adjusted by arbitration. I recommend Congress, at an early day, to make the necessary provision for the tribunal at Geneva and for the several commissions on the part of the United States called for by the treaty. Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. CARPENTER. I think the Senator had better let me get through and then I will submit to cross-examination. Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator sometimes exercises the privilege of interruption.

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly, I cannot refuse it to the Senator.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to know if all these claims had been purchased, as was recommended by the President, and his recommendation would have included losses growing out of the exculpated cruisers; suppose they had all been purchased as recommended by the President and after the commissioners had met it was held that only a portion of those claims could be allowed, does the Senator think the citizens would have been compelled to refund the money to the Government

Mr. CARPENTER. If I ever am called on to look at any question of that kind I will examine it and give an opinion. That is so far from the matter we are examining that it does not come within the same lines, and therefore I will not decide that case.

Now I ask the Secretary to read the passage marked from the message of 1871.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I regret to say that no conclusion has been reached for the adjustment of the claims against Great Britain growing out of the course adopted by that government during the rebellion. The cabinet of London, so far as its views have been expressed, does not appear to be willing to concede that Her Majesty's government was guilty of any negligence or did or permitted any act during the war by which the United States has just cause of complaint. Our firm and unalterable convictions are directly the reverse. I therefore recommend to Congress to authorize the appointment of a commission to take proof of the amounts and the ownership of these several claims on netice to the representative of Her Majesty at Washington, and that authority be given for the settlement of these claims by the United States, so that the Government shall have the ownership of the private claims as well as the responsible control of all the demands against Great Britain.

It cannot be necessary to add that whenever Her Majesty's government shall entertain a desire for a full and friendly adjustment of these claims the United States will enter upon their consideration, with an earnest desire for a conclusion consistent with the honor and dignity of both nations.

Mr. CARPENTER. It will thus be seen that the President proposed in the first place that the United States should buy up these claims and own them itself so as not to be embarrassed in future negotiations with Great Britain upon any of these questions. The private claims of course were only one element of difference between us and Great Britain. It was policy for us to hold the whole case back, and have it settled altogether either by arbitration if it could be, or by war if it must be; and therefore the President thought it wise for the United States to become the owner of these claims, to pay these men, these insurance companies, what they had paid, and hold the claims for future adjustment with Great Britain.

Now, the Senator from Florida asks me whether in such case if a claim had been purchased by us, and had not been allowed by the arbitrators, we could have recovered the money back from the claimant. That would be one of those questions arising under "undefined equity," which can only be passed on by the Senator from Florida. I should not know anything about it as a question of right because there would be no principle of law to attach it to at all; it would be "undefined equity," which I pass over to the Senator from Florida.

After this award had been made, the President of the United States, on the 2d December, 1872, sent a message to Congress, from which I wish the Secretary to read the passage marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

wish the Secretary to read the passage marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When Congress adjourned in June last, a question had been raised by Great Britain and was then pending, which for a time seriously imperiled the settlement by friendly arbitration of the grave differences between this Government and that of Her Britannic Majesty, which by the treaty of Washington had been referred to the tribunal of arbitration which had met at Geneva, in Switzerland.

The arbitrators, however, disposed of the question, which had jeoparded the whole of the treaty and threatened to involve the two nations in most unhappy relations toward each other, in a manner entirely satisfactory to this Government and in accordance with the views and the policy which it had maintained.

The tribunal which had convened at Geneva in December concluded its laborious session on the 14th day of September last, on which day, having availed itself of the discretionary power given to it by the treaty to award a sum in gross, it made its decision, whereby it awarded the sum of $15,500,000 in gold as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to its consideration.

This decision happily disposes of a long-standing difference between the two governments and, in connection with another award made by the German emperor under a reference to him by the same treaty, leaves these two governments without a shadow upon the friendly relations which it is my sincere hope may forever remain equally unclouded.

The report of the agent of the United States appointed to attend the Geneva tribunal, accompanied by the protocols of the proceedings of the arbitrators, the arguments of the counsel of both governments, the award of the tribunal, and the opinions given by the several arbitrators, is transmitted herewith.

I have caused to be communicated to the heads of the three friendly powers who complied with the joint request made to them under the treaty, the thanks of this Government f

It is due to the agent of the United States before the tribunal to record my high appreciation of the marked ability, unwearied patience, and the prudence and discretion with which he has conducted the very responsible and delicate duties committed to him, as it is also due to the learned and eminent counsel who attended the tribunal on the part of this Government to express my sense of the talent and wisdom which they brought to bear in the attainment of the result so happily received.

reached.

It will be the province of Congress to provide for the distribution among those who may be entitled to it of their respective shares of the money to be paid.

Although the sum awarded is not payable until a year from the date of the award, it is deemed advisable that no time be lost in making a proper examination of the several cases in which indemnification may be due. I consequently recommend the creation of a board of commissioners for the purpose.

Mr. CARPENTER. It will thus be seen that the President of the United States earnestly pursued this scheme of arbitration as a peace-able mode of settling the differences between us and Great Britain, that he succeeded in the negotiation of a treaty which finally resulted in this arbitration. It will also be noticed that that great chieftain and magistrate from first to last had steadily in his mind the common vulgar doctrine of honesty, that when the claims were paid to us the money was to be distributed and paid to those claimants who were money was to be distributed and paid to those claimants who were entitled to it, and that he congratulated Congress on the great achievement the world might rejoice in; and that he, in the same breath, recommends us to take steps for the immediate distribution of that fund. He speaks, too, of the arbitrators themselves. He speaks of the manner in which that arbitration was conducted, the arduous duty imposed on the arbitrators and the faithful and patient manner in which they had performed it. In the name of the nation he thanks the nations which had appointed arbitrators to be assumed. the nations which had appointed arbitrators to be members of the tribunal, and thanked the arbitrators themselves, and Great Britain thanked Mr. Adams for his patient and laborious performance of duty.

Mr. President, I am too great a lover of truth and justice, I am too proud an admirer of my country, I am too anxious for the fame and dignity of the Senate, to bring the language of the Senator from Maine in regard to this tribunal and the manner it performed its duties into pitiful contrast with the eloquent and appreciative utterances of a man who has become a lover of peace from witnessing the horrors of war, who is ready to award the meed of praise to the faithful discharge of official duties, having always discharged his own uprightly, the man who to-day and of this generation is "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen" and of all mankind. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not feel it necessary to reply to or scarcely refer to the remarks which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has made in regard to lawyers, my dislike of lawyers, my contempt for lawyers. Among the facetize of debate in this Chamber, pursued as I have sometimes thought beyond the point of good wit or good manners by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin and some others whom I need not name, I have been often reminded that I was not myself a lawyer—wit that it seemed to me would have been brighter and the thrust a little keener if I had ever professed to be a lawyer. For the satisfaction of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin and of those who may have this killing taunt still ator from Wisconsin and of those who may have this killing taunt still in reserve, I beg to say that I am not a lawyer. I never was in court as an attorney, nor as a plaintiff, nor as a defendant, nor as a jaror, nor as a witness. In that vast sea of adventure I am an exculpated cruiser. [Laughter.] I have nothing to answer for and have incurred no responsibility. But I spent two honest years of a young life under the tuition of a lawyer who was too great to taunt any man, and I have had association personal and intimate with three men who served in this Chambeau and wheee learning in the law was of such a charter of the contraction.

in this Chamber and whose learning in the law was of such a character that even the Senator from Wisconsin was never worthy to unloose the latchets of their shoes.

The Senator has lectured us upon the common honesty, the universal demand that these insurance companies upon every principle of law should be recognized as entitled to compensation. an old adage that "liars should have good memories." That adage might be well extended by suggesting that Senators would sometimes be improved by having good memories. In the little reading of the law which in my young life I accomplished I remember that one of its maxims was "Idem ratio idem jus;" and yet the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, who occupied a seat on this floor for two years of the first discussions on this question, voted on the yeas and years of the first discussions on this question, voted on the yeas and nays six distinct times against giving the insurance companies the slightest recognition. He endeavors to pass it off—I say endeavors to pass it off—by saying that he gave that vote (and he spoke of that rather sotto voce) at a time when there was pressure to pass some bill, and that they were compelled to throw the insurance companies overboard or postpone them until a more convenient season, in order that some other claims might be settled. This is rather late in the day for the excuse, and there are two or three inconsistencies about it; and I regret that the honorable Senator is not in the Chamber to hear what I may say in that connection.

In the first place, the Senator's excuse is entirely inconsistent with the idea that the insurance companies had as good a claim as anybody else. If they had as good a claim as anybody else, as the Senator now maintains, upon what possible justification did he throw ator now maintains, upon what possible justification did not throw them overboard to facilitate the passage of a bill for other interests. But as a matter of fact that is not the history of the case at all. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, on the 10th day of February, 1873, the question being on Senator Thurman's motion to strike out from the original bill the provision in precisely the same words which the present committee's bill repeals, voted against striking it out—at the very initial step of the whole question. The original bill was a Sentence of the strike of the whole question. very initial step of the whole question. The original bill was a Senate bill. There had been no controversy between the Houses, the subject had not yet been mentioned in the other House. On the very threshold, on its first appearance, and I believe seven months before the money was paid into the Treasury of the United States, on that bill which was proposed to be passed the honorable Senator voted against giving a penny to the insurance companies.

Then on the same day he voted against Senator BAYARD's amendment in favor of insurance companies, and then he voted for a bill almost identical with the law of 1874, which contained the precise words that the Judiciary Committee's bill now proposes to repeal. That was in 1873. On May 13, 1874, the previous bill having failed and the honorable Senator having had fourteen months to reflect upon the imperious justice which demanded the payment of these insurance companies, after fourteen months' reflection, on May 13, 1874, the Senator from Wisconsin voted in Committee of the Whole against striking out from the bill which became the law of 1874 the words which he now asks to have repealed; but in spite of his vote the words were stricken out in Committee of the Whole, and when the bill was reported to the Senate this amendment was not concurred in, the Senator from Wisconsin again voting against it. On the final passage of the law of 1874 Senator Thurman announced to the Chamber that Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, was paired in favor of the bill and against the insurance companies.

That is the record of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. It is not for me to impugn his right to change; but the Senator should not rise here and preach to us in a dogmatic strain about our duty to follow his lead to-day when on five, or possibly six, distinct calls of the yeas and nays, running over the period of fourteen months when he was in the Senate for his first term, he voted every time in the teeth and the face of the declarations which he lays down to-day as his views of national duty. I said, Mr. President—and the Senator gave us a very admirable illustration, better than I could have possibly hoped for—that there was nothing in the world so easy in argument as simply to ignore the facts. The letter of Hon. Caleb Cushing was such a tough nut to crack—it had in it so many positions utterly irreconcilable with anything the Senator from Wisconsin had said that nothing was left him but to go out in the lobby and get an affidavit from the attorney of the insurance companies that Mr. Cushing never wrote the letter. That is what he did; and he brings it in here to convince the Senate that Caleb Cushing never said that and never wrote what has been read here. I repeat that the affidavit which he flourished with such greece and practice is the affidavit of the attorney of the insurance read here. I repeat that the affidavit which he flourished with such grace and unction is the affidavit of the attorney of the insurance companies. Mr. President, if there be a living man on this earth qualified and entitled to represent Caleb Cushing, by long personal association, by study of law in his office, by intimate relations with him at the bar, by being his clerk when he was Attorney-General of the United States, it is Richard S. Spofford, of Newburyport, Massachusetts. I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Spofford dated April 14, 1880, addressed to myself. Mr. Spofford says:

I observe that in yesterday's debate in the Senate the authenticity of the document purporting to contain the opinion of Hon. Caleb Cushing, as the rightful distribution of the Geneva fund, was challenged by Hon. Mr. CARPENTER, of Wiscontribution of the Geneva fund, was challenged by Hon. Mr. Carpenter, of Wisconsin.

I beg to say to you that this opinion was given partly at my instance, and partly on request of several leading merchants of the city of Boston, for submission to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, in the spring of 1873, when the question of the Geneva fund first came up for consideration.

From time to time it has been reprinted by the friends and attorneys of the warpremium interest, in the form in which it now appears, for circulation in the two Houses of Congress.

In a subsequent year, on invitation of the Judiciary Committee of the House, Mr. Cushing appeared before them personally, and gave his views in full, entering into the details of the Geneva arbitration in its whole length and breadth, reiterating on that occasion the same views as to the rights of the war-premium claimants contained in the printed brief, extracts from which were read by you in the presence of the Senate.

of the Senate.

It will thus be seen that there is no doubt whatever of the authenticity of the paper in question, or of the attitude which Mr. Cushing held toward the issue now pending respecting the relative rights of the insurance companies and of the war-premium payers.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

R. S. SPOFFORD.

This document has been known here for years, quoted in the other branch of Congress, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD five years ago, and the only way the honorable Senator from Wisconsin has to meet its unanswerable argument is to get the attorney of the person against whose interest this opinion wages war to come in here and say that Mr. Cushing never wrote it. I do not know the gentleman who makes the affidavit. I have certainly no disposition to speak harshly of him; but I do say that it is a most extraordinary circumstance that the honorable Senator from Wisconsin should have the hardihood and the temerity and the insolence to speak of Mr. Cushing's letter as a forged document. That was all that was left him to do. I think now, with this fresh, authentic character given to the letter, and the Senate having had their attention called to it so pointedly by this extraordinary accusation of the Senator from Wisconsin, that in the hearing of the Senate even to detain them beyond what I should have originally laid out for my remarks I will yond what I should have originally laid out for my remarks I will read it. Mr. Spofford said to me in conversation which I repeat, for I claim to have known Mr. Cushing well if not intimately myself for many years, Mr. Spofford said to me that there was not any man who had ever seen the slightest production from Mr. Cushing's pen who would not see his style all over that document, crisp, close, clear, pungent, forcible in its statements, undeniable in its conclusions. And now I ask the Senate's attention afresh to this invaluable letter of Mr. Cushing. Here is what he says:

1. The Alabama claims, by explicit provision of the treaty of Washington, are claims made in the sole name of the Government: "Claims of the United States." (Article I.)

(Article 1.)

Compare Article XII, which refers other claims "on the part of corporations, companies, or private individuals, citizens of the United States."

Turn over to article 12 of the treaty of Washington. The honorable Senator went through two hours' quite useless parade to inform me that England always protected her citizens and that we ought to do the same; and that I had said that the United States was above protecting its citizens. What I said was that it was utterly belittling that great tribunal that met at Geneva to speak of it as adjusting private claims. We had a tribunal of that kind at Washington running for two or three years, and it did not attract much more potice. private claims. We had a trounal of that kind at washington relication for two or three years, and it did not attract much more notice than the police court; did not attract half the notice that the ordinary sessions of the supreme court of the District of Columbia do. That was under article 12. That was for claims of corporations, companies, or private individuals, as Mr. Cushing well defines and explains. plains.

The difference between the two tribunals, the one at Geneva and the one at Washington, is thus clearly stated by Mr. Cushing at the outset. I resume the reading of Mr. Cushing's letter:

2. The award was expressly to the United States, in these words

Did anybody ever hear of the tribunal that was sitting at Washington awarding anything to the United States? They were sitting on the little petty claims of John Doe and Richard Roe. The United States was not there at all, except as a protector of its individual ckizens. I resume the reading:

2. The award was expressly to the United States, in these words:
"The tribunal * * * awards to the United States the sum of $15,500,000, in gold, as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States."

3. The award is not confined to any particular claims, either vesses or persons, but is "for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal."

4. The counsel of the United States were specially instructed by the Government to avoid committing the United States to any theory of distribution as regards either claims or claimant, and especially not to commit the United States in the matter of the claims of insurers, in the words following:

And then he quote's Mr. Fish's letter. This was a paragraph out of a letter of instructions which covered several pages, but this was the particular paragraph that applied to the argument Mr. Cushing was making, and the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, an astute lawyer, (for he says he is himself,) says it was not like Mr. Cushing to quote that which related exactly to the subject, but he ought to have recited the whole letter. Mr. Cushing's way was to do it crisply and sharply. Mr. Cushing then proceeds:

5. The counsel of the United States obeyed the instructions given them, and did not commit the United States to any theory of distribution whatever, either by way of inclusion or of exclusion, but left that question to be determined by the wisdom and discretion of Congress.

These are weighty words. They were not written by an ordinary man. County clerks and scriveners do not write the law that way. The Senator from Wisconsin does not write the law that way. I read further from the letter:

The United States at Geneva laid before the tribunal all the claims of citizens of the United States which had been presented to the Government, without vouching for the validity of any of them; but insisted that the United States were not bound by the printed schedules, but only by the description of the treaty—"all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generally known as the Alabama claims." (Protocol XXVI.)

6. The tribunal, in making up their award, expressly excluded the idea of definite assessment and allowed a sum in gross, incompatible with assessment, by taking the American estimate of supposed damages of $14,437,000, and the English estimate of supposed damages of $70,74,000, and splitting the difference, so as to arrive at the arbitrary sum of $10,905,000, as the capital which, with interest added, makes the $15,500,000 of the award. (Protocol XXIX.)

I stop at that point of Mr. Cushing's opinion for a moment. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin called down every conceivable honorable Senator from Wisconsin called down every conceivable malediction which his facile tongue could apply to the Geneva tribunal if they had done as I alleged they had, using the phrase well known in the country, "chalking on the barn-door," for splitting the difference. He says that they ought to be impeached, that they ought to be denounced, they would be infamous in history, and he says that a quotation from Caleb Cushing to that effect proves that the letter is a forgery. Now, I hold in my hand Mr. Cushing's book on the Treaty of Washington, and I think I can vouch for its being his production. It is a copy which he did me the honor to present to me, putting his name and my name on the same page, and I feel honored by the association. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin would dispute the handwriting, but still I will vouch that it is Mr. Cushing's. Now, what does Mr. Cushing say in this weighty, deliberate book, in regard to the very point on which the honorable Senator has expended his maledictions declaring that the tribunal ought to have been impeached if they had attempted this splitting of the difference? Let peached if they had attempted this splitting of the difference? Let me now read, not from Mr. Cushing's letter, but from Mr. Cushing's

Some discussions on the same subject afterward occurred between Mr. Staempfli and Sir Alexander Cockburn, which conclusively prove that the result reached did not accept as binding either the tables presented by the United States or the deductions therefrom claimed by Great Britain. The estimate of Mr. Staempfli seems to have been the basis of conclusion; and that estimate is founded—

I beg the honorable Senator from Wisconsin to listen-and that estimate is founded on dividing the difference between the American estimate of $14,437,000 and the British estimate of $7,074,000, the mean of which is $10,905,000; which mean does not in any sort represent the actual claims of the United States.

I brought in a "forged" opinion of Caleb Cushing which says that they "split the difference." I bring in now the book of Mr. Cushing, stereotyped, gone into history, on the shelves of libraries, in which he says they "divided the difference." Probably it was the inelegancy of the phrase splitting the difference that offended the sensitive ear of the Senator from Wisconsin, but to the unlettered and untutored people whom I represent splitting the difference and dividing the difference represent the same idea precisely; to men who are not lawyers as my honored colleague, who is a lawyer, suggests. [Laughter.] Mr. Cushing says in his letter:

7. The doctrine of subrogation, as between assurer and assured, does not control the action of the United States in the allowance of claims or distribution of

The Senator says he never could have said that. No lawyer, he says, like Mr. Cushing could ever have attempted to say that.
Mr. CARPENTER. It is of no consequence particularly, perhaps;

Mr. CARPENTER. It is of no consequence particularly, perhaps; but I did not say that.

Mr. BLAINE. I am glad to be interrupted by the honorable Senator, for I like to show him a little courtesy. I should like to instruct him as to what might constitute courtesy, when he next has the floor, touching some other Senator. Now, the honorable Senator says he could not have put that.

Mr. CARPENTER. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAINE. I undertake to say that with all the knowledge of the law the honorable Senator has, he cannot show a case in which the United States ever permitted itself to be subrogated—never.

Mr. CARPENTER. Who ever said they did?

Mr. BLAINE. I thought this doctrine was so wide as to include every one. Has the Senator ever attempted to enforce the doctrine himself as an attorney that the United States ought to be subro-gated? I will yield him the floor if he says he has. Has the honorable Senator ever taken before any Government tribunal the doc-trine that the Government of the United States ought like other parties to permit itself to be subrogated, or has he not?

I have here the digest of the opinions of the Second Comptroller, whose decisions settle the ownership of more money than all the Supreme Court decisions of the country. I will read from it for the instruction of the honorable Senator, and I mean literally for his instruction, for with all the large learning of the honorable Senator he has skimmed over the mere superficial facts of this case, and I say to him that as a good lawyer, one of the first requisites is to get at the facts, and the Senator does not understand the facts; and in regard to them I will venture to say to him as Mr. Webster said in this body on a memorable occasion, that on this question I am to be inquired of by the honorable Senator and not informed. Let me read the de-

Certain steamboats, while impressed into the military service of the United States, were destroyed by fire, without any fault or negligence of the owners. The risks taken by the underwriters were liquidated and paid for; and claim by them, as subrogated to all the rights of the assured, made under the act of March 3, 1849, for the amount thus paid; but it was held that the principle of equitable subrogation applied only in favor of the Government, the underwriters as for the owners, having, by their policies of insurances, pro tanto, agreed to incur the risk.

And in the case of the steamer Robert Campbell, a rather noted case at the Treasury Department; she was impressed into the service of the United States at Memphis, insured in a Saint Louis company for $25,000, and burned while in the service of the United States. And while in the service of the United States the act of March 3, 1849, made the Government liable to the owner, and the steamer being appraised at $57,000, the Government paid the other $32,000, and then appraised at $57,000, the Government paid the other $32,000, and then the insurance company claimed that it was subrogated to the right to the remainder; but the decision was against it. While that pettifogger in the law, Salmon P. Chase, was at the head of the Department an attempt was made to reverse this ruling, and it failed. And then Mr. Chase was succeeded by another pettifogger, William Pitt Fessenden, and they tried it before him again, and they have tried it ever since and they never could get that reversed.

Fessenden, and they tried it before him again, and they have tried it ever since, and they never could get that reversed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They might have gone into the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAINE. And the honorable Senator from Vermont—I thank him for the suggestion—reminds me that they might have gone into the Court of Claims; but they have not been heard of there. They tried to rush it through some bureau or other, but up to this time, under Secretaries Chase, Fessenden, McCulloch, Boutwell, Richardson, Bristow, Morrill, and Sherman, I believe they have tried it under every one of these secretaries, and uniformly failed.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator give me the citation of the book and page 1 and page?

Mr. BLAINE. It is not possible that the honorable Senator from Ohio, who has indulged himself often in the little wit of reminding me that I am not a lawyer, asks me where a great case is to be found.

[Laughter. Mr. THURMAN. I do not think I ever reminded the Senator of Mr. BLAINE. Oh yes, the RECORD will show it.

Mr. THURMAN. And I do not think it was necessary that I should, [laughter;] and furthermore I do not admit that there is any such great case, nor do I pretend to be acquainted with every book that is printed as the report of the decisions of some subordinate officer of the Government. If the Senator does not want to give me the citathe Government. It the senator does not want to give me the cleation, he can let it alone.

Mr. BLAINE. Now I will give it to the honorable Senator. It is in the Digest of the Decisions of the Second Comptroller, on page 133, referring to volume 29, page 630. The assumption has been all through that when a layman attempts to argue this case, there are no lawyers on the same side. Why, in the House of Representatives I was sustained by as respectable and highly esteemed lawyers as Mr. Lapham, of New York; Mr. Scott Lord, of New York; General Butler, of whom the honorable Senator has heard; Mr. FRYE, my colleague, who is a lawyer of note at home; Judge Peters, who is one of the most distinguished members of our supreme bench; Hon. Lot M. Morrill, well known in this body, long an eminent member of our Maine bar, and offered a circuit judgeship of the United States by President Grant; Mr. Frelinghuysen, eminent and distinguished for his service here, and many other lawyers of equal fame that I might readily mention. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, eminent as I know him to be, "for he himself hath said it," [laughter,] eminent as I concede him to be, will admit that there is a little respectability of character in the au-will admit that there is a little respectability of character in the authorities that I have quoted, and that layman as I am I have the authority of a vast cloud of witnesses behind me, the choicest and best of the American bar on my side.

After this digression I proceed with Mr. Cushing's opinion. The Senator ridiculed the idea that Mr. Cushing should have quoted the opinion of a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts, formerly a member of this body, long a member of the other branch of Congress, and at the time he wrote it the governor of Massachusetts. It is certainly very extraordinary that the governor of Massachusetts. It is certainly very extraordinary that the honorable Senator will suppose that a paper of that kind could be a forgery circulating around here for years and years with W. B. Washburn's letter, written in the executive chamber of Massachusetts. The Senator will damage his reputation as a great criminal lawyer if he weigh evidence in that way.

Mr. Washburn, occupying these high stations, remarkable for his solid common sense, of the highest personal character, known to half the persons within the sound of my voice, writes to an attorney, in interest, to be sure, but still gives his valuable testimony. Here it

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Executive Department, Boston, January 24, 1873.

Dean Sir: While I was on the Committee of Claims for six years several cases of insurance companies were presented where property had been lost or destroyed on which they had paid the insurance. The committee always dismissed the claim, on the ground that they were paid for the risk, and could not ask the Government to hold them harmless.

Yours, truly,

W. B. WASHBURN.

To GEORGE O. SHATTUCK, Esq.

That reads very well for a forged document. The fellow who got this up is an immense fool to go around forging as good documents as this for other men to get the benefit of. He ought to write them himself and take the benefit of them. Mr. Cushing resumes:

s. The award is to the United States in conformity with the letter of the treaty, which has for its well-defined object to remove and adjust complaints and claims on the part of the United States.

The history of the treaty and of the arbitration, however, tends to show that it was the intention of the Government to exercise its own discretion, according to its own sense of justice and equity, in the distribution of indemnity among citizens of the United States, whether owners, mariners, insurers, or payers of premiums, who are actual losers by the acts or neglects of the British government.

The forgery gets mountain high just then on the honorable Senator. Now, let me take up Mr. Cushing's book again, this other forgery, and see what Mr. Cushing says here. I quote from the book:

The history of the treaty and of the arbitration shows that the United States recover, not for the benefit of the American Government as such, but of such individual citizens of the United States as shall appear to have suffered loss by the acts or neglects of the British government.

Another forgery! Identically the same opinion, almost in the same language. There is not one idea in this condensed and terse opinion of Mr. Cushing that is not likewise contained at one point or another in his book. I proceed with the opinion:

But like examination of the acts of the Government tends to show that it was the intention of the Government not to recognize—

Here the forgery gets very high again:

not to recognize any right of subrogation on the part of insurance companies, but to consider them only in so far as they were actual losses, on the whole, by the cruisers of the confederates, and, as such, claimants against the United States.

Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Thurman were engaged in conversation at the seat of the former.]

I am very anxious that the two honorable Senators should know just what Mr. Cushing said and just how little I know about this case. [Laughter.] I again quote Mr. Cushing:

9. Enhanced payments of insurance were disallowed by the tribunal, as national claims of the United States against Great Britain. But the Government has not the less the right, in the equitable distribution of the fund, and in the adjustment of losses, as respects premium-payers and premium-receivers, to indemnify those who have actually lost in paying premiums, instead of adding to the gains of those who have profited by the receipt of premiums.

That was the blind idea which Mr. Cushing had, that the persons who had actually lost had as much claim on this fund as those who had actually profited. Lastly Mr. Cushing says:

10. Great Britain has no concern whatever with the manner in which the fund is disposed of by the United States.

Mr. Gladstone said the same in the British Parliament. He stated that there were no individual claims presented before the tribunal at Geneva. Mr: Cushing concludes:

If the fund be insufficient, we have no recourse on Great Britain; if there be a surplus, she has no recourse on us.

Mr. President, I wish now to recur to the discussion we had on Thursday last in the Senate in regard to the clause in this bill which brings in all who suffered by confederate cruisers. The curiosity will be, in the records of the Senate to find out how that provision got in the bill. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has disavowed it; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] has disavowed it; the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] has disavowed it; and how it got in the bill is a question. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDgot in the bill is a question. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. ED-MUNDS,] did not put it in; but the Senator from Delaware states—and I was not aware of it when I spoke the other day—states that he voted to report this bill and in his argument takes the ground that we have no right to go one inch beyond the requirements and the limitations of the award. I undertake to say that there never was as broad a proposition made touching the distribution of the Geneva aread as this. I want the Sacretary to read from him 17 to line award as this is. I want the Secretary to read from line 17 to line 27 on page 3, and I shall be glad to have the Senate listen.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And such court shall also consider and allow all claims properly proved, and not included in the first class directly resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion, including vessels and cargoes attacked and taken on the high seas, or pursued by them therefrom, although the loss or damage occurred within three miles of the shore, and whether such claims be made by the original property-owner or by an underwriter who paid for such loss or damage, which claims shall be considered as claims of the second class.

Mr. BLAINE. This proposes to give a part of the Geneva award to losers at the hands of the cruisers for which England was not responsible at all. It is the "confederate cruisers" without any liminever were in English waters, had never dropped an anchor in an English port, and for which England was no more responsible than Rus sia or Algiers. That is the strict limitation which the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee puts on this award, and then he strangely forgets, for the Senator from Obio stated to us the other day when offsetting the relative merits of war premiums and excul-pated cruisers, that the Judiciary Committee did not report anything for war premiums because the first time that proposition was before the Senate it only got nine votes, and that was an instruction against it. The honorable Senator is entirely mistaken. The first time that war premiums were before the Senate they received twenty votes; and there were twenty-eight against it, and then the honorable Sen-ator himself tried the sense of the Senate on the exculpated cruisers and that only got nine votes, and therefore the instruction which he says was ample for him to keep out the war premiums, was precisely the vote that attached to the thing that he put in. I beg the honorable Senator's attention.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will give me his references, I will look at them.

Mr. BLAINE. I shall be glad to give it to him in a way that will not need any reference, I think. Mr. Morrill, of Maine, moved to include war premiums; the yeas and nays were called on his motion, and it was defeated by yeas 20, nays 28. (Congressional Record, May Afterward the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] moved to include with Mr. Morrill's war premiums the exculpated cruisers and take the two together; and then there were 9 votes in favor of the proposition. Which was it that weighed the other down? Standing alone the war-premium men came within 8 of a majority. A change of 5 votes would have carried it in the Senate. Then the honorable Senator from Ohio moved to include:

And all claims for all losses of vessels destroyed by the Shenandoah before her departure from Melbourne.

Mr. Morrill accepted it so as to join—I will use a legal phrase for the benefit of the Senator from Wisconsir—"jine drives," as the lum-bermen say; and when they attempted to "jine drives" the motion of the honorable Senator from Ohio weighted the whole to such a degree that it went down and got only 9 votes; and now he stands before the Senate and tells us that the reason the committee did not put in war premiums was that it only got 9 votes when they were first put before the Senate. It was the amendment which the honorable Sen-Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken.
Mr. BLAINE. Well, I will read:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Morrill.]

Mr. MORELL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The veas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The roll-call being concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28; as follows:

"YEAS—Messrs, Anthony, Buckingham, Chandler, Clayton, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Logan, McCreery, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—20.

"NAYS—Messrs, Allision, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Carpenter, Conkling, Conever, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Mchigan Howe, Ingalis, Kelly, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, Washburn, and Wright—23.

"ABSENT—Messrs, Alcorn, Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilin, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Saulsbury, Spencer, and Stevenson—25."

So the amendment was rejected.

War premiums got 30 votes the honorship, Sanaton for Chicagon, Inc.

War premiums got 20 votes the honorable Senator from Ohio will observe, and only 28 in the negative.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] striking out the limitation against insurance companies, and also the amendment proposed by the other Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] respecting the gold computation, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Stewart] about the expenses of the original tribunal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With these exceptions the question will be on concurring in the other amendments.

Mr. BAYARD. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Nevada and adopted in committee.

Mr. Edmunds. That is reserved.
Mr. Edmunds. That is reserved.
Mr. Bayard. Very well.
The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.
The Persiding Officer. The Secretary will report the first reserved amendment.
The CHIEFCLEEK. The first reserved amendment is, in section 11, after the words "shall be," in line 13, to insert "stated and adjudged upon the basis of United States gold coin at the time of the loss."
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in this amendment.
The amendment was concurred in—ayes 29, noes not counted.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

Then followed the insurance amendment. On that amendment the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] asked for the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays were taken, and the result was that it was beaten by 21 to 29, by just the same majority that war premiums were beaten. It was at this point that the Senator from Ohio was requested to state by the Senator from Wisconsin that he was against the insurance companies. He declared that six times.

Mr. Morrill then restated his amendment including war premiums. I quote from the Record.

I quote from the RECORD:

Mr. Thurman. I move to add after the word "premium" in the amendment of the Senator from Maine these words: "And all claims for losses of vessels destroyed by the Shenandoah before her de-parture from Melbourne."

Now, I do not want to fatigue my voice with merely reading but as the Senator from Ohio disputes this, and as it is a point of some im-

Mr. THURMAN. I do not dispute that. I did move that and it was

Mr. IHURMAN. Tub not dispute that a data and a data accepted by Mr. Morrill.

Mr. BLAINE. And then the two stood together.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, what was the vote on it? When the vote came the proposition got nine votes. Does the honorable Senator dispute that i

Mr. THURMAN. No.

Mr. BLAINE. Then why does the honorable Senator state that the war premiums when presented to the Senate got only nine votes?

Mr. THURMAN. Because Mr. Morrill who was the great representative of war premiums, and on the suggestion of his colleague, who is still a member of this body, and without an objection from a single war-premium man, accepted the amendment and said that it strengthened his amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. But his amendment had already had one trial in court standing by itself.

Mr. THURMAN. We shall see about that.

Mr. BLAINE. I guess we had better see about it! The honorable Senator from Ohio had better look to the record. [Laughter and applause.] I repeat

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The Senator will suspend a moment. There is too much disorder in the galleries. If the Senate will set the example, the Chair will enforce order in the galleries. The Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not want to proceed until this point is settled. I want the honorable Senator from Ohio to make good his assertion

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator can go on; I will answer him.
Mr. BLAINE. Then I will repeat that when war premiums were first introduced the vote stood 20 to 28; when they were laden down by combination with the amendment which the Senator from Ohio put into the bill they only got 9 votes; and yet the honorable Sencommittee felt instructed not to include war premiums because they had only received 9 votes; whereas the amendment that did actually receive only 9 votes he has put into this bill. That is the point I wish the honorable Senator to digest.

Now, Mr. President, there is another point of some importance, and I beg the attention of gentlemen of the Senate who consider themselves lawyers, for I am arguing this on law points. This is as to the war premiums before the Alabama claims court that sat for several years in this city for the decision of Alabama claims. I wish to state that under the twelfth section of the bill, which constituted that court for the adjudication of Alabama claims, the insurance companies, in every case where they could show a loss, were paid the war premiums which they had themselves paid. Let me explain. Here is an insurance company, for instance, that has a war risk of $50,000 on a vessel. She is not heard from. They begin to be anxthe $50,000 on a vessel. She is not heard from. They begin to be anxious about her. That company goes and reinsures that vessel for half the $50,000 in another company, divides the load, and pays the other company an extra war risk for it because of the suspected peril of the situation. Now, I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio if in the court that sat in this city for four years the insurance companies were not allowed to prove those claims and get the benefit of them? In other words, whenever an insurance company itself took a war risk, it was allowed to be put on the account by the court of Alabama claims under the twelfth section of the act which gave them the privilege of filing their accounts and offsets. I think this is a most important point in this case. To refuse to vote for war premiums, for individual losses, while the insurance companies were paid them, is merely say ing that a corporation has a better right to have this allowance made for it than a private citizen. There are plenty of claimants for the repayment of war premiums. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin was pleased to refer to the ship-owners as millionaires. I venture to say that the great body of the men-there may be rich men among them-but the great body of the men who are applicants for war premiums are poor men, or men in very moderate circumstances. Ships are owned in eighths, in sixteenths, in thirty-seconds; I have known them to be owned in sixty-fourths by the men who sail them. These are the men who paid these war premiums, and after they had paid them, if the insurance company, to make itself doubly sure, proceeded to reinsure outside in order to divide the risk, it was uniformly allowed that premium in offsetting or balancing its account of profit and loss.

Moreover, the honorable Senator from Delaware moved a very important amendment for which the honorable Senator from Ohio voted which is I think strangely at war with the position of both these Senators to-day, and that was that when an insurance company came to prove its losses it should allow and deduct the premiums that had been paid it.

Mr. BAYARD. In the identical case.

Mr. BLAINE. In the identical case; and the Senator illustrated that here was a ten-thousand-dollar loss, and a thousand dollars was paid for premium, and they would have to allow for that. Now I should like the honorable Senator from Delaware to tell us what becomes of that premium of $1,000? For whose benefit was it withheld?

Mr. BAYARD. My idea about that was a very simple one. On the theory of compensation, when the contract of insurance was made the insured paid as the Senator says a thousand dollars, and insured

Mr. BLAINE. I used the exact figures of the honorable Senator in debate.

Mr. BAYARD. It is a mere supposititious case, and will answer to illustrate what I meant. A ship-owner paid a thousand dollars premium to be insured to the amount of $10,000. Of course that put a thousand dollars in the pocket of the insurer. Then when the loss occurred the insured was paid $10,000, and I proposed when the claim was made that the insurer having already received by the way of premium a thousand dollars should receive $9,000 more in order to make

Mr. BLAINE. But on the Senator's theory we received from England $10,000 for that loss; now you are only going to pay $9,000 out of it to the insurer; what becomes of the other thousand?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not see that you did receive $10,000 from England, because I do not know whether the amount received from England was sufficient to pay this loss in full or not. What I do mean is, that when the compensation has been made, and each man has been made whole who was awarded damage by the Geneva tribunal, if there has not been enough the parties entitled are to be paid prorata, and if there has been too much the surplus is to be honestly paid back to the nation that gave it.

Mr. BLAINE. But there is apparently a surplus now. want to get at—and I say it with perfect good faith—is this: the honorable Senator says that in the case of the individual ship the thousand dollars paid for premium shall be deducted when you come to settle with the insurance company.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not say "war premium," but any premium.

Mr. BLAINE. When you come to settle with the insurance company you say that the thousand dollars should be deducted. Now, I want to know, as there is plenty of money in the Geneva fund, to whom that thousand dollars is to go?

Mr. BAYARD. The insurance company having already been paid the one thousand and its whole loss being $10,000—

Mr. BLAINE. They were paid by John Doe, the insurer.

Mr. BAYARD. Paid by the person with whom they made the con-Mr. BAYARD. Paid by the person with whom they made the contract. There is a property insured for $10,000. Upon that a premium has been given of $1,000. Then if the insurer having received that premium of $1,000, is paid out of the award $9,000 more, that makes $10,000; and that is the amount he paid the assured. So that he is completely compensated.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, in case they had as much premium as the loss, you would not give the insurance company anything. Is not that the

Mr. BAYARD. If you will argue upon absurdities, that would be so.
Mr. BLAINE. Not at all, because if a man was paying 30 per cent.
a year, three years would bring it up to 90 per cent., and a little more than three years would bring it up to a hundred, which is the whole value of the ship, and the war lasted long enough to do that. the honorable Senator if his theory does not come to this, that if the war premiums were equal to the amount insured there would not be anything due to the companies.

Mr. BAYARD. Now if the Senator will stand before this countryis he willing to stand before this country-supposing that a man put 100 per cent. insurance upon his risk-

Mr. BLAINE. I mean to say this, that they did pay 30 per cent. in a single year. The honorable Senator from Delaware in advancing the doctrine of his amendment of 1873 abandons the whole theory on which he is standing now, because he proposes to make distinct allowance for the war premium and deduct it from the insurance company, and I ask him what he is going to do with that after he deducts it. Where is the claimant for it? By what right? The theory of the Senator is that you have recovered this for specific losses. Now you have just proceeded far enough to take it from the insurance company but you have lodged it nowhere. The old adage of robbing Peter pany but you have lodged it nowhere. The old adage of robbing Peter to pay Paul always has a little justification in the fact that if Peter was robbed Paul was paid; but this proposition of the honorable Senator from Delaware just goes to the extent of robbing Peter. Now I want him to point out Paul that is to be paid. That is all.

Mr. BAYARD. Now, let us take one fact. The Senator knows more about robbing Peter than I do. [Laughter.] What I mean is that no one shall be robbed. I propose that an American citizen who lost his money, whether as an insurer on other people's property or as an owner of property pulsayed, and for which as award was made by this arbiof property uninsured, and for which an award was made by this arbitration at Geneva, should be paid the exact amount he lost, provided enough money has been given by the tribunal to meet it. That is all.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator is just in this attitude. The very ground on which those with whom I am acting stand is that insurance companies as a whole—and if any one is an exception by proving a loss the law gives it to him—that the insurance companies proving a loss the law gives it to him—that the insurance companies as a whole should offset what they have paid by what they have received. "Oh, no," says the honorable Senator, "do not do business by wholesale; but I will go with you if you make it a retail business and take it on each vesse. That is, the honorable Senator proposes to apply in detail this principle which snould be made so general as to take in all the vessels. He proposes, and the honorable Senator from Ohio voted with him, to offset it in the case of each individual vessel. If the result is not to take out the entire ground on which they stand in point of law, I am unable to distinguish between A and If you may do it in one case, why not in two?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the honorable Senator give me the reference to that vote?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Ohio gave that vote.
Mr. THURMAN. I want to see when the vote was taken.

Mr. BLAINE. I will read the proposition now. The honorable Senator from Delaware moved this amendment:

Such claimant shall show, to the satisfaction of said court, that its or his loss in each respective case in question exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such risk.

We say that should be done generally.
Mr. THURMAN. What I want is the book.
Mr. BLAINE. The book is the Congressional Globe, February 10, 1873, page 1229, and the honorable Senator voted for it, and in this modified form it was going to give the insurance companies much less than the other proposition, whittling down in the individual case whatever the war premium might be. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin could not be induced to join in the vote. He would not vote the insurance companies a penny. He voted against this proposition. There was not anybody in the Senate that stood for fourteen months against the insurance companies as stubbornly and as tena-ciously on every call of the roll, first and last, day and night, sum-mer and winter, heat and cold, as the honorable Senator from Wis-consin. But now, where is he? Undoubtedly the honorable Senator can make it consistent to himself, but not to us.

The whole amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware after it was joined on to the context to which it was adapted read

Unless such claimant shall show, to the satisfaction of said court, that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses, in respect to its or his war risks, exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such risk; and in case of any such allowance the same shall not be greater than such ex-

Mr. BAYARD. O, no. Mr. BLAINE. Yes. Let me read:

Mr. Bayard. I think if the honorable Senator from Ohio would read the clause that follows the amendment proposed by me he would find that the object of my amendment is answered. Let me read it now in full.

Mr. BAYARD. You are mistaken there.
Mr. BLAINE. No, sir, I am not mistaken.
Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir, you are.
Mr. BLAINE. I will pass the book to the honorable Senator tocorrect me if I am.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not necessary for me to take the book; but I will state this fact, that I never offered any amendment or cast any vote in favor of bringing the business of these insurance companies before the court that they might balance their profit and loss during the whole war. I am very sure no such amendment as that can be found offered by me, because that was the provision which caused me to vote against the bill of 1874.

Mr. BLAINE. I want a little rest just now, and I will have the Clerk read what I have marked from the Congressional Globe of February 10, 1873. I beg the honorable Senator from Delaware to pay atten-tion to his own words.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Bayard. I move now to amend section 12 by striking out the word "during," on the seventeenth line, and also the entire eighteenth line, and the words, "or his war risks," on the nineteenth line, and to insert in lien thereof the words, "its or his loss in each respective case in question;" and also, on the twentieth line, to strike out the word, "war," and the letter "s" at the end of "risks," so that the amendment as proposed by me would leave the section as follows:

"Such claimant shall show, to the satisfaction of said court, that its or his loss in each respective case in question exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such risk."

Mr. BAYARD. In each special case.

Mr. BAYARD. In each special case.
Mr. BLAINE. That is all I read.
Mr. BAYARD. I misapprehended the Senator and misapprehended his reading of it. I thought the amendment which he ascribed to me professed to bring in the whole business of the insurance companies during the war, and did not apply to each special case. I explained to the Senate what the object of my amendment was which I should be very glad to have ingrafted on the present bill.

Mr. BLAINE. But the war-premium men have only contended that in this question there should be an offset between what the insurance companies received and what they paid out, and if there was an exception where any one paid out more than he received he should be compensated. But no, said the honorable Senator from Delaware, that is the wholesale business; let us do that by whittling it away and bring each one in to show his account. Now, I have asked and asked in vain, if this fund be enough and you have saved out of it what would be the whole amount of the insurance by deducting that allowance of the war premiums, what do you propose to do with the war premium thus reserved?

Mr. BAYARD. Pay it back.

Mr. BLAINE. To Great Britain? Then your doctrine of subrogation does not go to giving the amount when the vessel is handed over-The doctrine of subrogation is not that the premium must all be paid. back which the insurance company received. Is that the way the honorable Senator as a lawyer interprets it, that before the right of subrogation can be enjoyed, all that was paid to the insurance company. must be paid back? Does the honorable Senator from Wisconsin take that ground? Does any lawyer take that ground? It is perfectly unheard of. You would have to get a forged opinion indeed of Caleb Cushing before you could get that view sustained. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the whole truth about the insurance companies is omprehended in a letter so brief that it occupies, in a coarse hand, but one side of a sheet of paper. It is written by an insurance agent, the president of a company in the city of Bangor, where my colleague resides, by a man known to myself and still more to my colleague as one of the ablest of insurance men and as a man of the highest standing, and I want to read in the hearing of the Senate this letter, written on the 4th day of the current month and addressed

BANGOR, April 2, 1880.

BANGOR, April 2, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Pardon me for mentioning a matter relative to the "Geneva award" which possibly (though I think not) may have escaped your notice. No reference has been made to it in the discussions as reported.

The underwriters charged on all their war risks premiums based on the idea and belief that there could be no salvage. Insurance companies and ship-owners alike knew that if the rebel cruisers captured a ship she was in all cases to burn. Nothing but total losses were expected, and the war premiums were made on that expectation. I have been a director in our Bangor marine office from the beginning of the war to this time, and this was the rule under which we made 100 per cent. on war risks.

Respectfully yours,

S. D. THURSTON.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE.

That is an honest insurance man. They gave up all hope of salvage. They knew that it was not like an ordinary marine risk that on some distant shore the hulk would be found to which subrogation would The spes recuperandi was utterly abandoned. such thing thought of in the matter. They knew there was no hope of recovery whatever, and they adjusted their rates of insurance to that fact. Here is an honest man who says "we made 100 per cent. on it." Probably the Senator from Wisconsin will telegraph down to Bangor to get this contradicted. He may have a copy of it if he wants to.

When Mr. Frelinghuysen was discussing this subject in the Senate he made an able presentation of the doctrine, utterly disproving that he made an able presentation of the doctrine, utterly disproving that subrogation attached in this case. It was too uncertain a doctrine, hesaid, to apply under such circumstances. Chancellor Kent described it as a doctrine of "mere equity and benevolence." He says, "it rests on the basis of mere equity and benevolence." The latest authentic work on equity (Mr. Bispham) says that, "being an equitable right, it is consequently subject to the general qualification by which all equities are affected, namely, that it must not be enforced to the detriment of equal or superior equities existing in other parties." If written for this exact case he could not have a stronger or more apposite statement.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin wasted a great deal of time in arguing that England was not a belligerent, and he wasted a great deal of time in stating what everybody knew, that these cases of indirect claims were thrown out. But what was the actual case now, stating it in home phrase? Setting aside technicality, if it will not offend the honorable Senator, what was this exact case? Here were a large number of claims. We sent agents and counsel abroad under that recent to wake the best field for the work that was the send he wade and that treaty to make the best fight for them that could be made; and that treaty to make the best fight for them that could be made; and at the very threshold of negotiations, with the privity of this Government, I will not say connivance, that is an unpleasant word, but with the privity and intent of this Government these war premiums and these exculpated cruisers were thrown aside. What for? For a vastly larger consideration than we got for any other claims. The United States never got so much for any one of the claims as for these claims. They said, "We are to be a neutral nation in the midst of great wars of the world; and we want the largest possible liberty given to us." These claims were sacrificed in exchange for rules and construction of rules that may be worth five hundred millions to the United States within the life of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. We got constructions of these three rules of inestimable advan-tage, and I believe it is not saying anything improper if I state the general understanding or belief that Mr. Adams more than any other commissioner at Geneva obtained the construction that exculpated the Shenandoah before Melbourne. It is of great advantage to us to have that construction of neutral rights established.

But when we had these claims on which the United States had equally pledged their faith, and we went to Europe with the whole of them, and we exchanged these for constructions more valuable to us than money, why do you put these poor luckless owners in the gap and make them sole losers? Why should they not have some con-sideration; and why, if a great national advantage is gained, should they be made to perform simply the sacrificial part in the transaction? That is the theory and it is the fact. It is the theory and the fact on which that award was made.

I want to make another statement in regard to this point, and I make it for the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I have stated that the insurance companies were allowed the war premiums they had paid. I have stated that he voted on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to deduct the war premiums in each individual case.

Mr. THURMAN. Why does not the Senator state the whole fact?

Mr. THURMAN. Why does not the Senator state the whole fact? Mr. THURMAN. Why does not the Senator state the whole fact : Mr. BLAINE. That I leave to the honorable Senator; he will have plenty of time.

Mr. THURMAN. I will do it now; it will only take a minute.
Mr. BLAINE. I never refuse the honorable Senator the floor.
Mr. THURMAN. When a bill first came up on the subject of this award in February, 1873, it contained the exclusion of the insurance companies, which was afterward contained in the bill passed in 1874. Then, as afterward in 1874, I moved to strike that exclusion out. I moved to strike out these words:

And no claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right, or as assignee, or otherwise, in the right of a person or party insured as aforesaid, unless such claimant shall show, to the satisfaction of said court, that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses, in respect to its or his war risks, exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance, the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss.

That is the same provision which the year afterward was put in the bill which became a law. My amendment striking it out was voted down. Then the bill was in a shape that was very unsatisfactory to me. In that condition of affairs, when I could not vote for the bill, the Senator from Delaware moved an amendment which, if adopted, would have allowed the insurance companies to come in for all of their losses after deducting their premium, not giving them what I considered their full right, but giving them all after deducting their premiums.

Mr. BAYARD. In each case?

Mr. THURMAN. Taking each case by itself. Upon that I said:

Mr. THURMAN. I merely rise to say that although I do not think there ought to be this deduction of the premium as proposed by the Senator from Delaware, because I think that its is simply changing the legal and vested right of these companies settled by law, and just as well settled as any law can possibly be, yet I think that is better than the bill as it now stands.

The bill as it then stood did not give the insurance companies any-

As I cannot get what I want, I shall try to get the next best thing. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the honorable Senator from Delaware did it apparently with gladness, and the honorable Senator from Ohio did it reluctantly, but still they both voted for it, and both gave away the entire principle for which they have been contending.

Mr. THURMAN. Not at all.

Mr. BLAINE. The only thing remaining on that point that I desire to say by way of emphasis is that in all the settlements that were made before the court of Alabama claims with the insurance companies they was an alloware for all war premiums naid by them. So nies there was an allowance for all war premiums paid by them. So likewise in all the individual cases there was an allowance made for the premium of insurance. Let me explain it. Suppose the value of a ship was $100,000; insurance received $50,000; less war premium paid $5,000. Then they took the $45,000 out and allowed the man $55,000; and in all those partial settlements before the Alabama trinal in this city the war premiums were paid. There thus are two principal cases in which war premiums were distinctly allowed by the court of Alabama elains. the court of Alabama claims.

But the hour is getting late and I will not detain the Senate further than to say that of all the propositions that have been made the worst is the proposition of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON.] He is the last Senator to whom I would impute anything that he did not himself think honorable, and especially he will not consider that I am characterizing anything personal to himself when I say that that proposition would absolutely dishonor and disgrace the Government of the United States. We have suffered incalculably in the public opinion of the world already, because it has been whispered everywhere that having obtained fifteen and a half million dollars from Great Britain we could not find any sufferers entitled to re-Not only have we lost morally in public reputation, but we ceive it. ceive it. Not only have we lost morally in public reputation, but we have lost largely in money, for I will venture to say, criticised as I may be for saying it, that the Halifax fishery commission would never have muleted the United States in the large sum of $5,500,000 if they had not got into their heads, under peculiar influences, that it was a chance for an offset; that we had obtained millions from Great Britain under what practically amounts to false pretenses; that we had obtained under false pretenses millions of dollars for which we can find no owners; and here we have permitted eight years to go by since that decree was made, and there are ten millions of money in the Treasury. Ten million dollars is a vast sum, but it is not to be reckoned as a penny as against the honor of this Government; and reckoned as a penny as against the honor of this Government; and the honor of this Government would be fatally and permanently compromised by our acknowledging, in the chief legislative body of the Republic, that after eight years' search we are unable to agree upon any claimant or find any claim for the money; and that we will turn it into the Treasury of the United States, in the language of the amendment of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, to help pay the national debt. Pass the hat around in Europe in honest beggary, if we must; ask alms if you will, honestly, but for Heaven's sake do not send the United States into a great international conference with the largest suit at law that ever was prosecuted before a legal tribunal, and after obtaining your judgment acknowledge before the nations of and after obtaining your judgment acknowledge before a legal tributian, and after obtaining your judgment acknowledge before the nations of the world that you have got it on false pretenses; that the losers you avowed were losers who did not exist; that the men who had suffered could not be found, and that accepting this fund as a nation, for the citizens who had suffered hardship and calamity, after eight years' search we gave it up and said, we will pour it as a small contribution into the Treasury of the United States and help pay the national debt. Oh, my honorable friend from Connecticut, when he sleeps over that proposition, will never insist upon it. I shall be entirely willing to trust his sense of honor anywhere, but I do maintain that of all the propositions that have ever been made that is the most dis-to the legislative department of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Maine to say that he studied law but two years. The Senator did not state to the Senate why it was that he abandoned that pursuit, but it is fair to assame, in view of his well-acknowledged smartness that he discovered he had mistaken his calling, and that consequently he abandoned the law and turned into politics. The inconvenience of being a law student but two years has shown itself in his argument in the Senate to-day. In two years a student could not do much more than to read the decisions of the courts below. He would not have time to follow them into the higher tribunals and see how they were decided there, whether affirmed or reversed. Consequently, the Senator reads here to-day what he calls a decision made by the Comptroller from the Digest of Decisions of the Second Comptroller, 1869, in regard to the case of the Robert Campbell, jr. He reads the decision of the Comptroller as sustaining his doctrine that the insurance companies are not entitled to any part of this fund, forgetting or omitting to state that that case was carried from the Comptroller to the Attorney-General and was—
Mr. BLAINE. One moment. It was taken to the Attorney-Gen-

Mr. CARPENTER. Hold on, let me state it first, and then if I misstate the fact you may correct me. It was carried before the Attorney-General, Mr. Hoar, who, in an opinion of January 12, 1870, found in volume 13-

Mr. BLAINE. I have it here in my desk.
Mr. CARPENTER. That is all the worse for the Senator; he ought to have read it. Mr. Hoar reversed that decision, and it seems that although the Senator knew the fact he did not state it.

Mr. BLAINE. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, over-ruled him and would not pay the money.

Mr. BLAINE. He did not pay them.
Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator produces no authority upon that subject, nor any decision.
Mr. BLAINE. I had the authority taken off me.

taken off my desk.

Mr. CARPENTER. The opinion of the Attorney-General repudiates the idea of the Comptroller; it is exactly the reverse; he holds that the insurance companies are entitled to the money. This is his decision:

Insurance companies are entitled to the money. This is his decision:

The contract of insurance was not made at the request of, or on behalf of, the United States, nor did they pay the premium. The owners insured the steamer for their own benefit and paid the premium out of their own money. I am unable to see how contracts of insurance, which are essentially contracts of indemnity made by the owners of property with the third person, can affect the liability of the United States to pay the full value of it, if the property be of the kind and be employed and lost in the manner set forth in said second section. The principles on which the following cases were decided by the Supreme Court establish, I think, the right of the insurance companies to receive from the United States, in the place of the owners who were insured, whatever amount of money less than the value of the steamer, and now remaining unpaid, these companies have paid the owners under their policies, and which the owners otherwise would be entitled to receive.

Insurance Company, 16 Peters, 495; Gallison et al. vs. The Memphis Insurance Company, 19 Howard, 312)

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

Note.—In addition to the authorities cited in the foregoing opinion, see Hall and Long vs. Railroad Companies, 13 Wall., 367, as regards the doctrine of subrogation prevailing in cases of insurance.

So on the question of authority, unless it can be made out to the sat isfaction of the Senate that a decision by a Comptroller is of higher authority than the opinion of the Attorney-General, based upon four decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Senator from Maine has failed to establish his point.

But the Senator from Maine has substantially told us that the Government of the United States has been nearly ruined; it has lost greatly in money, it has lost in the good opinion of the world by what is believed to be our dishonesty in this transaction, that we have pretended claims that did not exist, we have obtained money under false pretenses, and he deplores the effect that has produced upon the reputation and honor of this country. How does he propose to supplement that? How does he propose to redress the grievance and rescue our reputation? Simply by taking this fund away from the per sons to whom it was adjudged or on whose claims it was based and paying it over to persons whose claims were expressly rejected and were never paid at all.

Mr. BLAINE. I have the rescript here of the whole of that case.

Secretary Boutwell, upon the request of the insurance companies, referred the question of liability under the statute to the Attorney-General for his opinion.

The Attorney-General gave an opinion, in which he decided that the Government was liable to the insurance companies for their losses as claimed by them. But Secretary Boutwell refused to accept this construction of the law.

Secretary Bristow was appealed to, and Secretary Sherman was appealed to. I have the whole history here.

Mr. CARPENTER. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. BLAINE. I read from a document giving the history of it. Mr. CARPENTER. A document from the Department?

Mr. BLAINE. I am not bound to state where it is from: I give you the facts

Mr. CARPENTER. I only want to know if you are reading from a document or something else?

Mr. BLAINE. I will vouch for the facts.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maine vouches for all the facts and has settled the law, and I think the debate is over.

Mr. BLAINE. As long as the honorable Senator wishes to prolong the debate, I desire here to read a paragraph in his hearing. some things to say about him which he was not gracious enough to wait to hear when I rose. He has never found occasion yet to explain them; I hope he will take occasion to explain just why in 1873 and 1874 he cast six votes against his speech to-day.

Mr. CARPENTER. If the honorable Senator wants an explanation, which has once been given, I will give it again. We are discussing a question of great national moment. We are trying to arrive at what honesty requires us to do. Whether a Senator has been entirely consistent in his past life, or whether he has not, is a matter entirely unworthy the attention of the Senate. This question will remain and our reputation as a nation acquired by disposing of it one way or the other will remain long to this country after both he and I are or the other will remain long to this country after both he and I are in the grave, and without any purpose to fasten any inconsistency upon any individual Senator, let me state again, as I stated before to-day, what was the fact in regard to that bill.

We were surrounded by men here who came urging us to pass a bill that should pay them, men whose claims nobody disputed. I recollect one gentleman in particular who with tears in his eyes appealed to me to appropriate hill that would not these whose claims are related. to me to support a bill that would pay those whose claims every body conceded ought to be paid, and not keep him waiting to settle all the questions which might be disputed and discussed in the final disposition of the fund. I thought that ought to be done; I thought it was just and honest; and when the bill which has been referred to, and which I voted for, and against every amendment to which I voted, was up, it was then perfectly certain to my mind, as I believed, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio would defeat the bill. Whether it was right or wrong I had not at that time very fully examined. The Senate will recollect at that time, in the winter of 1874, I was in the chair. I did not meet with the Judiciary Committee to consider that bill, and had no chance to examine it, because I was enough otherwise busy. I did not have it under particular examination, but I voted for the bill, and I voted against the amendments to the bill, believing as the Senator from Vermont who championed the bill, and as the Senator from Ohio who opposed the bill, and as Mr. HOAR, in the other House, and other good lawyers thought, it did not touch this question of the right of the insurance companies. I cannot say, if I had been pressed to vote at that time finally upon the question, how I should have voted, although it is very likely I might have followed the lead of the Senator from Vermont and voted as he did, because I had given the subject no examination, and had great confidence in his legal opinion. All that was accomplished by the passage of that bill was to pay the men everybody conceded should be paid, and reserve the other questions for future determina-

I have not the slightest desire to fasten an inconsistency on the honorable Senator, but he assumed a very dictatorial air—and I am stating it mildly when I merely say dictatorial—in which he held it up as a want of common honesty and public decency, and did not allow any possible variation from that standard of high public conscience which he was preaching to us; and here are facts precisely the same. The question has not changed. The same sky is above us, the same circumstances surround us. If it was a perfect question in law then, as the Senator says, it is a perfect question in question in law then, as the Senator says, it is a perfect question in law now. If it was without any doubt and beyond all doubt an obligation to pay those insurance companies, all I can say is that the honorable Senator who on six calls of the yeas and nays, running over a period of fourteen months, voted steadily against it, might have a little charity, or at least a little courtesy, which would best befit him, in conceding to other gentlemen somewhat of the same view to-day which he so tenaciously held at that time.

Mr. CARPENTER. In the matter of courtesy I do not admit that I am surpassed by any Senator upon this floor. My experience at the bar has taught me never to encourage and never to decline a row, never to make any personal assault upon any one. I have also learned that when one is made upon me to repel it as well as I can. When a man treats me insolently I reply in the same vein, or as near as I can.

man treats me insolently I reply in the same vein, or as near as I can.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not said an insolent word to the Senator. Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maine commenced this little dance between himself and me without my referring to him at all. Rising here on a question of order to reply to the Senator from Vermont in regard to the duty of the Chair to decide conundrums as to whether a thing was in order under a particular clause of the rule or not, or whether the Chair might simply rule on the point of order without giving his reasons, and making no allusion to the Senator from Maine, being for the moment as unconscious of his existence as I was of that of any other great man that I was not in the presence of, he saw fit to turn upon me, to ridicule me as a lawyer, to say that I was making a common-pleas argument, &c.; and in that very dis-cussion on those rules and afterward when we came to speak of the letter of Mr. Cushing, or the pretended letter of Mr. Cushing, then I was ridiculed again for taking a common-pleas view of this case; and so inexpressibly funny did the Senator from Maine think it was that I should draw a distinction between a genuine document and a forged one, or that I should have the curiosity to know whether that letter of Mr. Cushing, to which the Senator expected us to bow in the state of the curiosity of the senator of the curiosity submission, was ever written by Cushing or by some other man without Cushing's knowledge or his ever having seen it—so remarkable and so absurd did that strike the Senator from Maine as being, that, and so absurd did that strike the Senator from Maine as being, that, twice the next day, when I had not had the floor at all nor alluded to the subject in any way whatever, he took occasion to go out of his way to ridicule me on the ground of being a lawyer who wanted an affidavit to sustain a forged document. Now, the Senator from Maine can continue this dance just as far as he pleases or stop it when he pleases. He began it. I shall follow it as long as he pursues it. He will never be able to say to me in the Senate, in the country, or anywhere else, that he has piped to me and I have not danced.

Mr. RIAINE. Lam not so delighted at seeing the steps of the hon-where else, that he has piped to me and I have not danced.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not so delighted at seeing the steps of the honorable Senator that I would pipe long to call him out.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then hold up your harness.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator is making a mountain out of a molehill altogether, and showing, if he will permit me to say it, a remarkably thin skin for a lawyer who has had so many conflicts at the bar.

The heavestless Senator was not in when I gave the incentrovertible The honorable Senator was not in when I gave the incontrovertible evidence

Mr. CARPENTER. Allow me to relieve the mind of the Senator. I was only there [pointing to the cloak-room] where I could enjoy the luxury of smoking, which my throat required after speaking.

Mr. BLAINE. Then does the honorable Senator, after the evidence I gave, refer to the letter of Mr. Cushing as a forged letter?

Mr. CARPENTER. I still think it is a forgery. That is my honest belief.

Mr. BLAINE. After the statement in the letter from Mr. Spofford,

Mr. BLANKS. Attention of the statement o Mr. Ward is a lawyer for these insurance companies, and to disprove him he reads a letter which I understand to be from a gentleman in the interest of the war-premium men. Is that so?

Mr. BLAINE nodded assent.
Mr. CARPENTER. That is so. Then we have one interested man against another on the question of fact, and that leaves me to form my judgment from an examination of that letter, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is my belief that Cushing never wrote a

Mr. BLAINE. The attorney of the insurance companies having been heard, and the attorney of the war-premium men having been heard, my colleague, who I am sorry is not here now, had a letter from a gentleman who represents the exculpated cruisers and who is very well known to almost every Senator, Mr. Metcalf, who wrote a letter to-day stating that he had himself conversed with Mr. Cushing in regard to the matter; and the letter stands in 1873 and 1874 on the records of Congress as being used in the House, and was a matter of public notoriety, and has been in the book from which I quoted it for five years. I repeat again that the honorable Senator must only confess himself very hard pressed in the argument when he attempts still to question that as being an authentic letter.

Mr. CARPENTER. The great difference between the Senator from Maine and myself could not be more clearly shown than when he thinks it is a part of the argument of this case to dispute the question of fact whether Mr. Cushing wrote that letter or not. The argument of this case does not depend upon that. We have an impartial opinion of Mr. Cushing which was published immediately after his return from Europe and before he was retained for the war-premium men expressing his opinion upon the subject. A subsequent brief made by him for his clients, after he was retained for them, would not be any authority against his previous, impartial opinion.

Mr. BLAINE. That is sufficient; I do not care about carrying it any further.

Mr. CARPENTER. All right, if the Senator is through.

Mr. BLAINE. When the Senator was closing his speech with a very deserved and eloquent eulogium upon President Grant, who was President at the time this negotiation was initiated and who also communicated it to Congress, he failed to show anything at all in either of the communications of General Grant at one time or the other that gave the slightest expression of his opinion as to what were the proper claims to be paid. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter on file in the State Department, written to Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary in the State Department, written to Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, by the president of the Great Western Insurance Company, in New York, Mr. John A. Parker. I did not get it for the point I am going to read now, but I got it to show that what the honorable Senator claimed in his speech of Friday last, that every citizen of this country was able to plead his own case at the bar of the British government, was not in fact guaranteed under that statute, and that when an attempt was made of this kind it was inhibited by the express orders of the State Department. When this was protested against by the president of the Great Western Insurance Company and others, and his letter being sent to me for a wholly different purpose and his letter being sent to me for a wholly different purpose Mr. CARPENTER. Whose letter?

Mr. BLAINE. It is a letter written by John A. Parker, president and trustee of the Great Western Insurance Company, of New York, in August, 1870.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then you will read it to disprove what Grant did not say anything about?

Mr. BLAINE. No; if the Senator will not be so fast he will see what I read it to disprove. My law of evidence is different, and will lead me to wait until it is given. Here is what the man says:

The opinion expressed to me by President Grant that insurance companies who had charged a premium for the war risks could have no claim, and that claims of that character belonged only to the Government, which opinion you stated to me was largely entertained in Washington, would seem to indicate the necessity for making a case before the Supreme Court.

It rather seems from that, in a correspondence between Mr. Parker and the Secretary of State, that General Grant was not on the Senator's side of this question, so far as that little side-light comes in from a letter on file in the State Department. The gentleman wanted, in order to bring this case to judicial arbitrament, to have a case made up for the Supreme Court, and this letter was written for that pur-

Mr. CARPENTER. Has not this debate come to be pretty shadowy, when the great Senator—

Mr. BLAINE. I thought that when the Senator last spoke.

Mr. CARPENTER. When the great Senator drops the whole question in difference between us, the great point to be settled by our action, and goes fishing among shades and shadows, reading a letter that some insurance man wrote from New York to the State Department, and has got a certified copy of it, as to what General Grant's opinion was upon the subject? I have the greatest possible admiration for General Grant, I cannot yield to the Senator from Maine in that respect, and yet on a question of this kind which I have carefully examined I should follow my own convictions and judgment so far as my vote went.

as my vote went.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator is losing both his memory and his courtesy. He introduced General Grant here, as I said, with a highly deserved eulogium, and was parading him as an effective and conclusive witness on his side.

Mr. CARPENTER. To what point?

Mr. BLAINE. In order to convince Congress that it had a high-cape of public honor.

Mr. CARPENTER. Nothing—

Mr. CARPENTER. Nothing—

Mr. BLAINE. This little thing happening to occur in this little side-show, this little side light coming in to expose to the world just what General Grant's views were, then the honorable Senator turns around and says "Well, I do not care any more about General Grant's around and says "Well, I do not care any more about General Grant's views in that case than the views of any other respectable man." That is the way he sticks to General Grant. I go a great deal further. I think General Grant was perfectly right on that. I followed General Grant through almost every measure of his policy. I was a steady supporter of his administration; and I am very glad to find, by a sidelight thrown in by mere accident, as it were, his levelheadedness, his common sense of justice, his accurate knowledge of what was fair between man and man is proved clearly here by a brief letter that comes from the State Department. comes from the State Department.

Mr. CARPENTER. You will ruin Grant if you praise him. [Laughter.] Just one word and I am done. A man who has practiced law in the judicial courts for twenty-five years has lost the benefit of his experience if he has not learned one thing, and that is to hold to the point in issue, and not be led off by the balderdash of pettifoggers. read from the messages of General Grant to show his estimate of the high character of the arbitrators and the faithful manner in which they had discharged their duty. I read it in contrast with descriptions made of the same thing by the Senator from Maine that they had hustled through the bushes, up into the mountains, gone into a cave, chalked on a barn door and finally given fifteen and one-half million dollars. I read it to show that General Grant had quite a different opinion of those proceedings. It was not on the question of what we ought to do with the fund, further than this, that with a fund which we had received under such circumstances we ought to deal honestly. I did not read it as the opinion of General Grant as to the class of claimants who were entitled to the money. He said nothing about that in his message. I simply read it to place his estimate of the arbitration in contrast with the estimate upon the same subject made by the Senator from Maine and nothing else. the high character of the arbitrators and the faithful manner in which

Mr. BLAINE. But I am sure that no Senator ever spoke in higher terms of that great international arbitration. Every Senator who has ever spoken of it recalls it as one of the grandest events in history, honorable to two great nations speaking the same tongue and descendants of the same blood, memorable forever in the history of both, to be celebrated as one of the great incidents in the history of each. If the honorable Senator merely read General Grant's messages to show that he, in common with the other English-speaking people of the whole world, held the same views, he was merely wasting his words and his time.

Mr. CARPENTER. Was not the Senator in the Chamber when I read it? Did he not hear what I said I read it for? Does he not know I read it for the purpose of showing his estimate of that arbitration? Does he not know that I concluded by saying that I had too much respect for the Senate to put in contrast with it the rough language of the Senator from Maine on the same subject?

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the two Senators having set themselves right on the third-term question—

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the two Senators having set themselves right on the third-term question— [Great laughter and demonstrations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be order in the galleries. Business will be suspended until order is restored.

Mr. THURMAN. I will not take up two minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order. I should be glad to know if the Chair and the Sergeant-at-Arms are not capable of enforcing the rules of the Senate and its decorum by requiring the people in the galleries to observe its order when they are admitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states that the disorder has been shared by the Senate and the galleries. He has endeavored to enforce the rules.

has been shared by the Senate and the galleries. He has endeavored to enforce the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has had very poor success. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for an executive session?

Mr. THURMAN. I only want two minutes now. The Senator from Maine read a decision of the Second Comptroller. It was a very high judicial authority, I think he said. That officer may have been a very good lawyer for aught I know, and I will not say a word against him, because there are plenty of good lawyers who are not in high stations as well as good lawyers who are in high stations; but the Senator from Wisconsin called his attention to the fact that on the opinion of that Comptroller being referred to the Attorney-General of the United States, the Attorney-General delivered a distinctly opposite opinion, fortifying it by reference to four decisions of the eral of the United States, the Attorney-General delivered a distinctly opposite opinion, fortifying it by reference to four decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Then the Senator from Maine with somewhat of a grand flourish said that Mr. Boutwell stood by the Comptroller and Mr. Sherman stood by the Comptroller, and he seemed to think that the opinion of those two Secretaries of the Treasury quite outweighed the opinion of the Attorney-General and four solemn decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, I want to call his attention to the fact that upon the question whether these insurance companies should be paid or not, both Mr. whether these insurance companies should be paid or not, both Mr. Boutwell and Mr. Sherman again and again recorded their votes in favor of paying them, voting with me, voting with my friend from New York, voting with my friend from Delaware, voting every time both in committee and in the Senate to pay these insurance companies and to make them the first class, too. Not only that, the then Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] delivered an argument in behalf of paying the insurance companies which was according to nies and to make them the first class, too. Not only that, the then Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] delivered an argument in behalf of paying the insurance companies which was one of the strongest and most conclusive delivered in the debate on the bill of 1874; so that if the Senator quotes them as authority upon the question of subrogation he has their votes which show that the decision of the Second Comptroller which he says (although there is no evidence of it here) that they affirmed against the opinion of the Attorney-General, was not in their opinion applicable to this case at all.

Mr. President, I may show when I come to speak what is the ground of the decision of the Second Comptroller. I have not read it yet; I have not had the opportunity to read it; but I fancy it will be found to be a ground taken by the Government long ago where there was no question of subrogation at all, but where the question was whether the Government would pay the assignee of a claim, where the Government said, "We have nothing to do with the question between him to whom we are primarily liable and some one deducing title from that person; that is a matter between themselves; the Government will only pay the person to whom the Government is primarily liable, and will let anybody claiming from him and under him to litigate it with him in the courts." And hence it has been the custom down to this day and nothing is more common than to see a man go into the court of the District of Columbia and by an injunction seek to restrain a person from receiving money due from the Treasury of the United States unless he will nay over to this man as his assignee. to restrain a person from receiving money due from the Treasury of the United States unless he will pay over to this man as his assignee the amount that is coming to him. It is simply a matter of conven-ience and safety for the Government, and has no more to do with the question of subrogation than it has to do with squaring the circle.

But I beg pardon of my friend from Connecticut, who wishes to submit some remarks to the Senate, for having occupied so much time.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I wish to say but a few words. My friend from Maine carries a free lance; he attacks everybody. He did not even wait for the amendment or substitute, which I had the honor to introduce, to be before the Senate before he commenced a very severe and violent attack upon it. I hope he will possess his soul in patience. When the proper time arrives I will undertake to show that the proposition which I had the honor to submit is thoroughly logical, thoroughly reasonable, thoroughly just. I have no doubt about it, and I only desire to say that my honorable friend from Maine is not the only man on this floor that has in love and charge the honor of the nation. There are other Senators here that no sconer the honor of the nation. There are other Senators here that no sooner the nonor of the nation. There are other Senators here that no sooner than he would be guilty of any act that would bring dishonor upon the name of the United States; and I hope to be able to show that toward paying the debt of the people of the United States forty years hence this fund which I would put into the sinking fund would amount to forty or fifty million dollars. I undertake to say it is quite as logical and quite as proper to do that as to give it to a class of men that were utterly kicked out of the tribunal. I hope to be able to

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not suppose the Senate wishes to stay much longer. I merely wish to say before I move to proceed to the considerlonger. I merely wish to say before I move to proceed to the consideration of executive business, that with great respect to my friend from Wisconsin and my friend from Maine I do not think there is any danger in respect of our attitude before the eyes of the people of other nations, that we are at all likely to dishonor ourselves. Any other nation would justly resent and have a right to justly resent any criticism upon their conduct in a similar case. This money has been paid to the United States to be disposed of by Congress, as everybody agrees, according to its own sense of what its duty to its own citizens requires. Any fear, then, as expressed by the Senator from Maine and I believe the Senator from Wisconsin that we are not going to stand well in the eyes of the world because we decide between ourselves and our own citizens one way or another. I think is entirely selves and our own citizens one way or another, I think is entirely misplaced.

But I do not care to go on with this matter at this present time, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

Mr. CONKLING and others. Let us adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will change the motion to an adjournment if the Senate does not wish an executive session. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

INTEREST ON THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. WEAVER submitted the following resolution, and asked its reference to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Depart-

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby respectfully directed to report to the House of Representatives, at as early a day as possible, whether or not the Treasury Department has at any time anticipated the payment of interest on the public debt, or any part thereof, as provided by joint resolution approved March 17, 1864; and, if so, for what period, to whom said interest was paid, in what amount, and whether with or without rebate.

Mr. SPRINGER. As I understand, this resolution should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER, (after examining the resolution.) The resolution relates to the bonded debt of the United States, and will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Subsequently, Mr. WEAVER said: The resolution offered by myself a few mo-ments ago I desired to have referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. I cannot see any objection to that reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] raised the question of order that the resolution belonged under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Chair read the resolution before indicating the reference to that committee, but will olution before indicating the reference to that committee, but will read it again.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not think it belongs to that committee.

dignity of the House or of the rule either.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule either of these committees would

Mr. CONGER. Then the Chair decides that this is unfinished business under the present order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there can be fifteen minutes' debate on each side under the rule which has since been adopted. Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the bill be now read, as indicated by the Chair. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the bill and the proposed amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act," approved May 7, 1878, be amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be established in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund, which shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in bonds of the United States or in the first-mortgage bonds of said companies respectively, as the Secretary may prefer, and the semi-annual income thereof shall be in like manner from time to time invested, and the same shall accumulate and be disposed of as hereinafter mentioned. All the bonds belonging to said fund shall, as fast as they shall be obtained, be so stamped as to show that they belong to said fund, and that they are not good in the hands of other holders than the Secretary of the Treasury until they shall have been indorsed by him and publicly disposed of pursuant to this act."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the aforesaid act be altered and amended to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the aforesaid act be altered and amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be carried to the credit of the said fund, from time to time as settlements are made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the one-half of the compensation for services hereinbefore named, rendered for the Government by said Union Pacific Railroad Company, not applied in liquidation of interest; and, in addition thereto, the said company shall, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, pay into the Treasury, to the credit of said sinking fund, the sum of $425,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to make the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of its said road payable to the United States under said act of 1862, and the whole sum earned by it as compensation for services rendered for the United States, together with the sum by this section required to be paid, amount in the aggregate to 25 per cent. of the Whole net earnings of said railroad

Mr. McLANE. Now read the proposed amendment as modified. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 4. That this act, and the act of which this is amendatory, shall be held, and shall be, applicable to any and all persons or corporations into whose possession either or both of said Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads may lawfully come, or into whose possession the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company may lawfully come, by purchase, consolidation, or otherwise, as well as to the original companies; and the provisions of this act, and the provisions of the act of which this act is amendatory, shall apply and take effect on the 1st day of July next as to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company; and the additional sum to be paid into the Treasury on the 1st day of April and October, in each year, to the credit of said sinking fund, shall be as follows, namely, $150,000 by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, $30,000 by the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, or so much thereof respectively as shall be necessary to make the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of their respectively as shall be necessary to make the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of their respectively as payable to the United States under said act of 1862, and the whole sum earned by them respectively as compensation for services rendered for the United States, together with the sum by this section required to be paid, amount in the aggregate to 25 per cent. of the whole net earnings of said companies respectively, ascertained and defined as hereinbefore provided, for the half year ending on the last day of December and June respectively next preceding."

Mr. DUNNELL. Can there be any debate on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the third clause of Rule XXVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of, and one-half to debate in opposition to, such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct the statement he made just now. The proposition of the gentleman from Maryland is to suspend the rules to enable him to report the bill and amendment from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and for the House to consider them; if the rules are suspended, then the gentleman would have the right to hold the floor to demand the previous question on the bill and amendment. Under the motion to suspend the rules there should be fifteen minutes of debate on each side to be rules there should be fifteen minutes of debate on each side, to be taken after the second by tellers and before the vote is taken to suspend.

Mr. McLANE. I accept that ruling of the Chair.

Mr. COX. Has there not been fifteen minutes of debate already?

The SPEAKER. There has been debate of an hour, but not under the rules as they now exist. That debate was allowed by unanimous consent on a former day, to wit, the 1st of March.

The SPEAKER. If two-thirds should vote to consider, then the bill would be open to amendment and debate; but the gentleman from Maryland has indicated his intention to demand the previous question in case the bill comes before the House for consideration. From that intimation, the Chair supposes he means to cut off debate.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House allow fifteen minutes' debate on this question of suspension. A full explanation was made of this question on the 1st of March last, and for that reason I do not care to detain the House at this time with more than a very brief review of what was said on that occasion. I will then yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Wellborn.]

I would not take any of the time of the House at present only that I apprehend the propositions advanced when this bill was first pre-

I apprehend the propositions advanced when this bill was first presented have passed from the minds of the members of the House, and therefore I ask the attention of the House for a very short time.

This bill is divided into four sections. The first section of the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the moneys due to the sinking fund in any bonds of the United States or in the first-mortgage bonds of the railroad companies. Heretofore he has been required to invest in the 5 per cent. bonds of the United States, and no other, without an explanation to Congress. Now, he comes to Congress and makes an explanation that the 5 per cent. Government bonds are about to expire, and he asks permission of Congress to invest this fund in other bonds, including the first-mortgage bonds of vest this fund in other bonds, including the first-mortgage bonds of the railroad companies, and explaining further that the first-mortgage bonds of the railroads are by act of Congress a prior lien on the roads and must be paid before the original subsidy of the United States is paid. He sets forth that it is in the interest of the United States, as well as of the railroads, that the first-mortgage bonds should go into well as of the railroads, that the first-mortgage bonds should go into the sinking fund, for the reason that, yielding 6 per cent. interest, at any price short of 1.20, they are a better investment than United States bonds at the current prices. His recommendation, therefore, is that while they are a better investment than the United States bonds he should be permitted to invest the sinking-fund money in these bonds at his discretion.

Mr. McMAHON. At what rate? Mr. McMAHON. At what rate if Mr. McLANE. At the current rate. And the only objection taken to this authority was that it gave to the Secretary of the Treasury an undue discretion, and that by investing in the first-mortgage bonds in preference to the United States bonds he thereby enhanced the value of the mortgage bonds, and thus, in the exercise of his discretion, he could unfavorably affect the stock market of the country for these

Now, in response to that objection there is no criticism that I can offer. There must necessarily be this discretion vested somewhere or in somebody; but I will state to the House that the sum invested will be generally about $40,000 a month, and I do not suppose that even if the Secretary of the Treasury should exercise his discretion with partiality it could have any very great influence upon the stock market. I believe that is about the amount of the proposed investment. And Learner conseive of any means of avaiding it as this discretion must I cannot conceive of any means of avoiding it, as this discretion must rest somewhere.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit me to interrupt him by asking a question? What is the present market value of those bonds?

Mr. McLANE. They are now quoted at 112.
Mr. HOUSE. Who holds these bonds †
Mr. McLANE. I have no knowledge of tha Mr. McLANE. I have no knowledge of that. The first-mortgage bonds amount, I believe, to about $55,000,000, and the lien of the United States has been waived upon these bonds. And in considering this question I insist that the first-mortgage bonds must be paid be-fore any debt of the roads to the United States is paid.

Now, my friend from Texas has seemed to assume that in some way this would enable the stockholders or the directors to defraud the United States. I tried to make it plain at the time that it could not

Mr. REAGAN. One point, if the gentleman from Maryland will permit me to interrupt him here, that I desired to make in that connection was that the present indebtedness to the Government, outside of the amount of these first-mortgage bonds, is $65,000,000. But when the time came to make payment, at the end of thirty years, the company, in view of this indebtedness to the United States and to the bondholders, would go into liquidation, forfeit the road either to the Government or to the bondholders, and buy it in, discharging the in-debtedness, and if that was done, discharge the very indebtedness to the Government represented by these first-mortgage bonds.

Mr. McLANE. I so understood the gentleman on the 1st of March, when this question was before the House, and the answer to that is that the Government has no lien until these bonds are paid; in other words, as these first-mortgage bonds are a prior lien to the liens of the Government, that the Government or anybody else would have to pay these bonds before they could take possession of the road. And inasmuch as the first-mortgage bond is a better investment than the United States bond, it is to the interest of the United States as well as to the interest of the road to invest in these bonds, yielding the largest interest; and further, that to the extent of the amount of these bonds in the sinking fund the Government would have less to pay to protect itself.

Gentlemen know that the sinking fund is constituted out of the fund taken from the earnings of the road, and has to be invested in the bonds of the United States or in the first-mortgage bonds of the road, and the interest derived therefrom has to be reinvested at certain stated times. Therefore the Government of the United States has precisely the same interest that the road has in receiving the largest interest that it can on these bonds.

Mr. HUNTON. Is the interest on these bonds paid promptly now ?
Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir; it is paid promptly.
Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly, sir.
Mr. McMILLIN. Will not the Government of the United States upon the maturity of these bonds be permitted to pay them off at their face value?

Mr. McLANE. The first-mortgage bonds?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; the first-mortgage bonds. Is it not a fact that the Government will have the privilege of paying them off at

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir, if there should be a foreclosure and the Government bought the road to protect itself.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, if that be so, why should we to-day authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy them at the rate of 112 or anywhere up to 120 ?

Mr. McLANE. There is only one sense in which the Government has the right to pay off the first-mortgage bonds at their par value, and that is if a foreclosure occurs. This is the bonded debt of the company, and the bonded debt which the company has to pay before company, and the bonded debt which the company has to pay before it can pay the debt of the United States. If things go to their term the railroads pay these first-mortgage bonds, and having paid these first-mortgage bonds, then they pay the Government debt; and if they can pay both, then the Government has nothing more to do with the roads. The roads then belong to the stockholders. The only case in which the Government can have an interest in the first-mortgage bonds is where the Government in the contingency stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] comes in to protect its own debt; and before it can protect its own debt it must satisfy the mortgage debt. If that contingency accounted the Government would gage debt. If that contingency occurred the Government would have to pay it dollar for dollar, because the road would be sold to satisfy it; and if the Government pay dollar for dollar on the mortgage bonds it would own the road.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. McLANE. My time has almost expired. I cannot yield for further questions.

The next feature in the bill is in regard to the moneys now in the Treasury which have been kept there by the act of 1873—that which authorized the lawsuits, which allowed the Government to be sued and those legal questions to be determined, and which shut up all the money in the Treasury. Now the lawsuits have been determined; the rights of the Government have been vindicated; but the law of 1873 remains in full force.

1873 remains in full force.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland indicated his intention to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Wellborn.] He has now occupied ten minutes.

Mr. McLANE. I have no desire to speak at length on the bill, and I shall conclude what I have to say in another minute.

That is the second feature in the bill to allow these securities locked in the Traceart to the circles a final.

up in the Treasury to go to the sinking fund.

The remaining feature is to extend the Thurman act to all the subsidized roads. By the original Thurman act only the Union Pacific and Central Pacific roads were included. This extends the bill to the other subsidized roads. That is all there is in the bill. The conthe other subsidized roads. That is all there is in the bill. The confusion which seems to embarrass gentlemen results from a misapprehension of the sinking fund. That fund is constituted of the money of the railroad companies, and the one-half of compensation for troops and mails belonging by law to the railroads prior to the passage of the Thurman act, which required it to be paid into the sinking fund. The law of 1862 withheld the entire compensation due to the railroads for transportation of troops and mails; the act of 1864 conceded to the railroads one half of it, reserving the other half to the credit of the interest paid by the United States on the original subsidy bonds, and the Thurman act required the half conceded to the railroads by the act of 1864 to be paid into the sinking fund, together with a loan of money sufficient, when added to the 5 per cent. of net earnings and one half the compensation fund, to amount to 25 per earnings and one hair the compensation fund, to amount to 25 per cent. of the net earnings, and it is this sinking fund which must pay the first-mortgage bonds before one cent is paid to redeem the United States bonds. The other half of compensation for troops goes to the United States debt and does not go to the sinking fund, and this view of the case is fully affirmed and clearly stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company and others, October term, 1878.

Mr. WELLBORN. The only point raised by the amendment which has just been read from the Clerk's desk is this: Shall the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to invest the sinking fund raised by the Thurman act in the first-mortgage bonds of the companies as well as in Government securities? The original bill as reported by the as in Government securities? The original offi as reported by the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise his discretion in investing either in Government securities or in first-mortgage bonds. The amendment which I propose limits the investment to Government bonds and withholds the authority to make the investment in first-mortgage bonds.

As this Thurman sinking fund is a matter in which the whole country feels a deep interest, I trust the House will not consider it an idle consumption of time if I explain, and I shall do so very briefly, the reasons which have moved me to the offering of this amendment. The expediency of making the investment of this sinking fund in the first-mortgage bonds depends upon one other question, and that question is this: Whether or not these first-mortgage bonds are a prior and paramount lien upon this sinking fund; or whether or not that fund is designed solely or in part as an indemnity or a security for the Government.

If this fund, if the first-mortgage bonds constitute a prior and paramount lien upon this sinking fund, then there is no danger; there can be no peril from investing the funds in the bonds, for the obvious reason that the fund is being, as it were, presently applied, presently appropriated exactly where it must ultimately go. But, sir, if this sinking fund be an indemnity or a security for the Government, then I say to gentlemen upon this floor that there may be danger, there may be possibly peril, in making the investment in the first-mortgage bonds.

As was suggested by my colleague from Texas [Mr. Reagan] on the morning when this bill was first taken up, there is in the popular mind an idea, or perhaps, to speak with more accuracy, there is an apprehension in the public mind, and I shall not stop now to inquire apprehension in the public mind, and I shall not stop now to inquire into its reasonableness; but there is an apprehension in the public mind of this country that these Pacific railroads, before the maturity of their bonds, will determine it to be for their interest not to attempt the payment of their indebtedness, but to suffer the roads to be seized and sold for the satisfaction of their creditors. Now, if this should be the case, if these facts should transpire, then another fact would also be found to be true, and that is, that these companies, before their bonds mature, will find it to their interest to expend in keeping their roads in repair the smallest amount of money consistent with their actual operation; and, therefore, when the bonds mature, when their actual operation; and, therefore, when the bonds mature, when the day of payment arrives, the roads will be found to be dilapidated, the cars, engines, and equipments of the roads worn out and comparatively valueless. These facts being true, the first-mortgage bonds of course will decline, will inevitably decline, in proportion to the depreciation in the value of the security on which they rest; and in this view of the case, therefore—I am now assuming this sinking fund is an indemnity fund solely for the Government—when the time of payment arrives, and when the Government lays its hands upon the sinking fund, it will be found the sinking fund has been invested in bonds, in securities that are of far less value than when they were first purchased.

Now I come to address myself to the question, and here I am com-pelled to join issue with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] whether or not this sinking fund is designed as a security for the Government, or whether the first-mortgage bonds constitute a prior and paramount lien. The eighth section of the Thurman act of 1878 simparamount lien. The eighth section of the Thurman act of 1878 simply provides that the sinking fund which it establishes shall be held and ultimately appropriated for the benefit of the debts, bonded and otherwise, lawfully chargeable upon the fund, in accordance with their respective priorities. But the Thurman bill does not undertake to determine and does not define what debts are lawfully chargeable upon the fund; nor does it undertake to distinguish between their respective priorities.

In order, therefore, to determine this question we must gather from the Thurman act the sources of revenue that constitute the sinking fund, and then go behind the act to ascertain what debts are chargeable upon these revenues. By reference to the sinking-fund act of 1878 it will be seen that this sinking fund is composed of two sources of revenue; two elements constitute it. The first is one-half of the compensation which may become due from the Government to these companies for the transmission of dispatches and the transportation of mails, troops, Government supplies, &c.; that is the first element.

The second element of the sinking fund is 5 per cent. of the net earnings of these companies.

Now, sir, I assert, and will prove to the satisfaction of this House that as to the first element of this sinking fund—and I am informed it constitutes by far the largest portion of it—that is, the compensa-tion that may become due from the Government to the companies for transportation of mails, troops, supplies, &c.—this first element is designed solely and exclusively as an indemnity and a security for the

These first-mortgage bonds have no priority of lien upon that portion of the sinking fund, and it is so expressly declared in the act of 1864. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read section 10 of that act, which will be found on page 110 of the report of the Auditor of Railroad Accounts, made to the Secretary of the Interior November 1, 1879. That is the act of 1864, which authorized the issuance of these first-mortgage bonds, and which subordinated the lien of the Government to the lien of the first-mortgage bonds. I ask the Clerk to read section 6 of that act.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted. That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required to do so by any department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service;) and all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid. Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds, Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof.

Mr. WELLBORN. It will be seen from that section of the act of

Mr. WELLBORN. It will be seen from that section of the act of 1864 that the lien of the Government upon the most important element of this sinking fund has not been subordinated to the lien of these first-mortgage bonds.

With reference to the other element of the sinking fund, I confess that it is a matter of doubt whether the first-mortgage bonds are a paramount lien upon it or not. I shall not now stop to discuss that question. But before I proceed further I will ask the Clerk to read a paragraph which I have marked on page 180 of the same report. From that it will be seen that the Supreme Court of the United States seemed to adopt the idea-it is a mere obiter dictum, however-that the entire sinking fund is an indemnity for the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Government made its contract and bargained for its security. It had a first lien on the road by the original act of incorporation, which would have made its loan safe in any event. But in its anxiety to secure the construction of the road, an end more important to the Government than to any one else, and still more important to the people whom it represented, it postponed this lien to another mortgage, that the means might be raised to complete it. The Government has the second lien, however, and it has the right to appropriate one-half of the price it pays for the use of the road—a very large sum—annually, and 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road, which may become much larger, to the extinction of this debt. It is not wholly unreasonable to suggest that the amount which the company may be compelled to pay annually, under these two provisions, will be sufficient as a sinking fund to pay the entire debt, principal and interest, before it falls due.

Mr. WELLBORN. A word more and I am done. From what has already been stated, it appears beyond all question that one element of this sinking fund is designed and intended solely as an indemnity and security for the Government of the United States. With refer ence to the other element of the sinking fund, it is a matter involved in doubt, to say the least of it.

I repeat, therefore, the proposition with which I commenced; that is, that this sinking fund was designed by its author as an indemnity and as a security for the Government, and that fund should be invested only in those securities about which there clings neither present nor future suspicion.

To compress into a single sentence this whole argument, which to my mind is unanswerable in favor of the amendment, I say that there is no necessity for investing this fund in these first-mortgage bonds, because Government securities are accessible. There is, to say the because Government securities are accessible. There is, to say the least, a doubt in reference to the propriety and expediency of investing in the first-mortgage bonds, and it seems to me that in matters of this kind, where there is a doubt as to which of two courses legislation ought to take, the doubt should be resolved in favor of that course which will surely and beyond all question protect and secure the interests of the Government. This sinking fund, so wisely conceived, so securely fixed by its distinguished author, is a matter of profound interest to the people of this whole country. We should see to it that unless under the pressure of imperative necessity no action is taken which tends, or can in the least tend, to its injury or imperis taken which tends, or can in the least tend, to its injury or imper-

Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. McLANE. I understand that debate is limited to fifteen minutes on each side. The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman from Maryland yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Texas. The Chair, understanding that the gentleman from Texas spoke against the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, allowed him to continue for fifteen minutes, the full time permitted in opposition. There yet remain five minutes for debate before taking the question on the motion to suspend the rules in favor of the motion to suspend.

Mr. CONGER. But there may be some gentlemen who wish to oppose the bill. The SPEAKER.
